THE HIGHLAND ECHO

The Highland Echo is a weekly student newspaper serving the Maryville College campus community. It strives to provide fair, accurate and ethical journalism coverage of the campus.

The Highland Echo was first published in 1915 under the editorship of J. Charles Walker, class of 1916. The forerunner of The Echo, the Maryville College Monthly, was published from 1898 until 1915 and is available in the Maryville College Archives.

The enrollment of this year's freshman class has reached a total of 263, of which 115 are men and 148 are women. Interestingly enough, all but two of the freshmen who were expected to register arrived.

Members of the class come from a total of twenty-eight states and two foreign countries. The religious denominations represented include 178 Presbyterians, 33 Methodists, 22 Baptists, 7 Episcopalians. In addition there are various other religious preferences.

Academic standing

43% of the freshman class ranked in the first quartile of the high school graduating classes, 32% ranked in the second quartile, and 18% in the third. The remaining 7% were either unranked or ranked in the fourth quartile. This is the first year for requiring students entering Maryville College to take either the SAT or ACT tests. 65% of all this year's freshmen scored above 450 on both verbal and mathematical ability on the SAT test of the College Entrance Examination Board. The ACT test scores were converted into the equivalent scores on the SAT scale.

Finances

Sixty-four freshmen are receiving scholarship or tuition grants; forty-one are participating in the rotating loan fund: and thirty are involved in the college student work program.

Transfer students

In addition to the 263 freshmen, there were thirty-six transfer students who enrolled at Maryville for the first time this fall. Thus, the total enrollment of Maryville College, not including special pre-college music students, now stands at 793, of which there are nine part-time students.

Salt Cellar opened by UCCF, SC

by Rich Boyd

On Saturday evening, September 26, a coffeehouse jointly run by the Student Council and the United Campus Christian Fellowship was opened in the basement of Wilson Chapel. Dubbed the Salt Cellar for several reasons, the coffeehouse attracted a crowd of well over two hundred students and faculty. The doors were opened at 7 p.m., and coffee of several different types was sold — after a blown fuse was corrected.

At 8:30 the program for the evening began, consisting of a presentation by Dr. Edwin R. Hunter from our English Department of excerpts from his book of poems, This Man's Art. Dr. Hunter was enthusiastically received. Later in the evening, Mrs. Barbie Bloy and Pete Park entertained with a wide variety of folk songs and music. They, too, were enthusiastically received.

Some question has been raised as to why the name, Salt Cellar, was chosen and as to what the purpose of the Salt Cellar is to be. Several definitions have been given to the term salt as it is used in reference to the coffeehouse. Salt has always been a basic substance for mankind. Because in this day education is a basic necessity for life as we know it, it is easy to see the analogy between salt and education. The Salt Cellar is a place of education.

For another angle, consider the traditional statement that Christians are the salt of the earth — it is within the hopes of those sponsoring the Salt Cellar that Christians will be among those who frequent the place. And for a third angle, consider the idea that as an educational endeavor, much discussion and trading of ideas about the controversial things of life will take place. From this dialogue, it is hoped that our campus-community will be sparked into various types of action — thus rendering the Salt Cellar a place where salt can be rubbed in the wounds and sore spots of our total community.

The purpose of the Salt Cellar, keeping in mind what has just been said, is to provide a place where students and faculty alike can become confronted with many of the contemporary ideas that are shaping our world. And lest we be tempted to overshadow such that is meaningful, the Salt Cellar is to provide a place where the ideas and facts that are learned in class can be discussed, traded, and battered in a way that will help us see better the world in which we live, its meanings for us, and its meanings for our purposes. The term dialogue has been used to describe this.

This term specifically means that two or more people meet with their ideas about a subject. Rather than engaging in a fight to see whose idea is the best, they engage in trading what they know about the certain subject in order that knowledge of the subject might be made more thorough or deeper. This is a hard thing to do. It involves a giving of oneself to the discussion rather than standing on the defensive ground and fighting to be right. It means standing actually in the other man's position to see really what he is saying.

There is still much to do in the area of fixing up the Salt Cellar. The buying of furniture, the arranging of lighting, the providing of good, readable literature for the reading alcove, the purchasing of coffee urns, and the process of interior decoration all will be carried on during the next month or so. The UCCF has already scheduled its programs from now until the Christmas holidays, and the Student Council will be publishing their schedule in the near future.

Some of the coming programs are to be a discussion of "What It Means to be 100% American," by Dr. E. E. Overton of the University of Tennessee Law School on October 2; a movie, The Captive, on October 3; a discussion of the crisis in Viet Nam by Mr. Ainsworth and Mr. Iredell on October 9; a discussion on "The Communist Conspiracy," arranged by Mrs. Lea Callaway, on October 16; and a one act play, "Dabne," on October 17.

Times fixed

Beginning with the week of October 5, it is planned that the Salt Cellar will be open Monday through Saturday in the evenings. All programs will be thoroughly publicized. It is the desire of the UCCF and the Student Council that these programs will be food for thought and will supplement the discussions that will already be taking place. This, of course, is in the hands of those who make use of the Salt Cellar.

The times for the Salt Cellar, Monday through Friday are 7 p.m. to 10 p.m. On Saturday nights the time will be from 7 p.m. to 11:30 p.m.

Mike Moyers joins national committee

Maryville College Student Body President Mike Moyers has joined the Student Body Presidents' National Advisory Committee of Young Citizens for Johnson-Humphrey. Moyers was invited, along with other student body presidents across the country, by U. S. Senator Birch E. Bayh, chairman of the committee.

Members of the committee will act as advisors on student participation in this election to the national office and to the state college coordinators of the committee. Where possible, members will also make appearances at their college Students for Johnson meetings and on local TV and radio stations.

Young Citizens for Johnson-Humphrey will provide student body presidents with a nonpartisan kit including absentee ballot and voter registration information.

'Echo' to be weekly

The Highland Echo, published bi-weekly in recent years, is now to be published weekly in an effort to cover more adequately Maryville College activities. The committee on Student publications, chaired by Dr. Carolyn Blair, approved the plan last spring.

On Monday, October 5, the Echo will begin its annual 'Don't Write — Send the Echo' campaign. Subscriptions will be on sale all week at Pearsons Hall before and after meals for those who wish a weekly paper mailed to parents or friends. The rate is $3 per year or $1.50 per semester.

Dr. Swenson writes for UPUSA

Part of a recent publication, "Understanding Our Faith," is a work by Dr. Esther C. Swenson, who has for several years been associated with the Departments of Sociology and Christian Education at Maryville College.

Dr. Swenson's contribution to this course, which is being prepared by the Synod of Wisconsin of the United Presbyterian Church, is entitled "Understandings of Christ and Culture." It includes eight discussions of the contemporary theologians Karl Barth, Dietrich Bonhoeffer, Reinhold Neibuhr, and Paul Tillich. A session on Western culture and several sessions which tie the writings of the theologians to our culture are also included.

Campaign success provides funds for new dorms II, III

The success of the current development fund campaign has enlarged Maryville College's immediate building program to include new dormitory facilities as well as a new science building.

New dormitories

The new dormitories, designed by Barber and McMurray of Knoxville, will have a total capacity of 250. The architects are in the first planning stages, and it is hoped that both the men and women's dormitories will be ready by the fall of 1965.

Science building

In addition, the counseling firm of Taylor, Liberfeld, and Heldman, Inc., is now studying the requirements for the new science building and the science program. They are reviewing the current science program, present facilities, and enrollment projections to guide in planning the new building. Their study may also lead to further specific planning for the whole campus, including the sites of new buildings and the best use of present facilities.

Development fund totals

The sudden surge for additional development was made possible by the recent gift of $500,000 by Algie Sutton of Greenville, South Carolina. In the current intensive campaign for $920,000, a sum of $630,854 has now been raised. The overall $7,000,000 development program to be completed by 1969 has received $3,250,000 from all sources.

Aaron Siskind shows photography in FAC

The photographic art of Aaron Siskind is currently on display in the Art Gallery of the Fine Arts Center. The first of a yearly series of exhibits at the College, this collection has been loaned by the George Eastman House of Rochester, New York.

Siskind is a native of New York City and has done most of his work in that area. He is now head of the Photography Department of the Illinois Institute of Technology.

Maryville College's Art Gallery is open to the public daily from 7:30 a.m. to 5:00 p.m. The monthly exhibits are without charge.

Editorial

This year we undertake something new: a weekly Highland Echo. We want to print more—not just in the number of issues published, but in the scope of coverage. We want to announce and review events, give recognition to student and faculty achievements, provide thought-provoking as well as amusing readership. But this is not as easy as it sounds. We need your help. Give us your ideas.

Kathy Mike Andy Jane Tex Pat John Fran

The Spirited Eight

by Karen Keen

On September 22, Kathy Burgess, Fran Lantz, Pat Pingitore, Jane Sidun, Tex Harris, John Mullendore, Andy Ruhlin, and Mike Quickel were elected cheerleaders after a stiff competition with ten other candidates. Kathy Burgess was re-elected captain of the squad for the third time in her four years as cheerleader at Maryville.

Kathy, a senior elementary education major from Florida, has been cheerleading since she was in the seventh grade — a total of ten years. Among the improvements scheduled for this year, Kathy mentioned new orange and garnet shakers, the inclusion of more acrobatics in the cheers, and a newly painted orange megaphone.

Fran Lantz, a sophomore from Knoxville majoring in English, is beginning her second year as a cheerleader at Maryville. Her biggest assets as a cheerleader are her ability to make lots of noise and her enjoyment of cheering. "The squad is gonna be sharp this year," she bubbled. "I'm tickled pink that we got the new shakers." As for the acrobatics, "Love it!" For anyone who is not familiar with Maryville's cheers, Fran will be glad to demonstrate any of them.

Another sophomore from Knoxville back for a second year on the squad is Mike Quickel. Though Mike had done no cheerleading before college, he has become a real pro. Tex Harris, from Amarillo, Texas, is the third sophomore starting his second year as a cheerleader.

John Mullendore, Texan from Dallas, is a freshman who hasn't picked a major yet. He went out for cheerleader because he loves all athletics but is too small to play. In high school, he was captain of his squad the one year that he was cheerleader. Andy Ruhlin, a freshman psychology major from Trenton, New Jersey, went out for cheerleader because it seemed a good way to become part of the campus life and because it was "cool." He finds acrobatics "challenging but fun."

From Florham Park, New Jersey, Jane Sidun is a music education major. She has never been a cheerleader before because in high school she was in the marching band. Another New Jerseyite, Pat Pingitore, has had three years of cheerleading experience in high school where she was on the gymnastics team. Pat plans to major in biology but likes English, too.

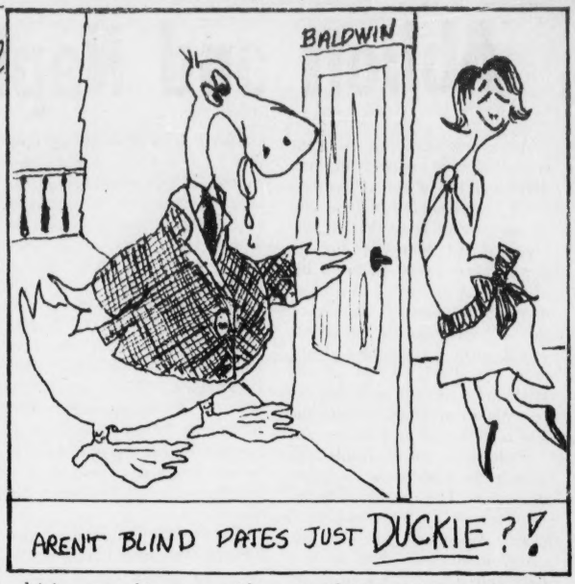
The Impartial Observer

Ken Young

The past few weeks have seen our nation's political pattycake gathering considerable momentum, leaving a path of chaos and destruction in the opposite ranks far in excess of any mere hurricane. The two presidential hopefuls (or hatefuls as they are called by many) are Likes Beer Johnson and Goldy Backwater. Both of these men are extremely wealthy and having nothing else to do, are racing for president as a relief from the boredom of making money.



The current campaign has produced some fascinating sidelights, not the least of which is Strong Thurman, the first of a long line of politicians who would much rather switch than fight. The impartial observer has been watching the altercations with much interest and in hopes of producing better informed voters, is writing a few of the more profound observations.

The Democratic asspirant (sic), Johnson, can best be described as a common man. His pleasures are simple — the pleasures of any red-blooded American male (although many contend that he's not as red as his opponent). He has been seen driving over his estate with a can of beer in his hand. What could be more indicative of the American way of life — drinking beer, the drink of the common man; driving his Continental, the car of the rich common man; riding over his estate (though many of the old guard natives still refer to it as Texas).

Though Johnson has been criticized by two strong lobbies, the S.P.C.A.E. (Society for the Prevention of Cruelty to Animals' Ears) and the S.P.G.M.B.B. (Society for the Prevention of Giving Money to Bobby Baker), his position remains good, as the lobbies of the manufacturers of beer and light bulbs more than offset the other two lobbies.

Backwater is the man whose immortal words at the close of the Republican convention will be quoted for many years to come: "Veni, Vidi, Vici." He is a man of moderate tastes and behavior. It has been said in Washington that he never drives his chariot over 30. He firmly believes in conservation of national resources and many other things. Backwater replied in a personal interview last week: "Who says I can't be progressive?" as he gave his daughter a new low-slung sports surrey. The observer must agree that this indeed seems like a step forward — for Backwater anyway.

The voter's decision this year is a hard one. As usual the choice boils down to a choice of personalities — Love those Byrds Johnson or Push The Button Backwater. Personal preference? The observer isn't sure. It's rumored that Bobby Baker is available for write-in. He seems to be able to manipulate the government as well as anyone.

Rush Show Climaxes Chi-Phi Events

The 1964 Kappa Phi-Chi Beta rush show, "The Making of a President," was presented on Tuesday night, September 29, as the climax to two days of activity. Written by Phil Jerome and Ken Young in true Pygmalion fashion, the play concerned the rise of a janitor to the position of a leading presidential candidate. He survived the plots of a group of secret enemy agents and the crusade of two fighters for women's rights, only to lose the election to the beautiful secretary of the party boss.

Events preceding the show included a tea for Chi Betas and their little sisters, held in New Dorm on Monday afternoon; and the campaign banquet for all freshmen on Tuesday evening.

The rain which dampened the plans for an outdoor rush show has not affected the spirit with which Chi Beta and Kappa Phi will enter into this year's activities.

Continued dependence upon relief induces a spiritual and moral disintegration fundamentally destructive to the national fibre. To dole out relief in this way is to administer a narcotic, a subtle destroyer of the human spirit.

Abbott and Napier Captain Scots in 1964

After compiling an excellent record of eight victories and one defeat and losing nine of the men chiefly responsible for those successes, it would seem that the fortunes of the Maryville College football team were in for a bit of a drop. When you add the loss of the head coach to the loss of the key players, the prospects would seem even darker. However, the 1964 edition of the Highlander football team has the potential to equal and surpass the fine record of their predecessors.

Perhaps the most valuable addition to the team is the ascension of former line coach Howard Tomlinson to the position of head coach. Tomlinson, an all-Southern Conference lineman at William and Mary in his collegiate days, brings a fine reputation to the job. Another change in the coaching staff is the addition of the captain of the 1963 football team, Wilbur Ramsey, to coach the ends. Lauren Kardatzke remains as backfield coach.

Interior Line Strong

The primary factor in Maryville's hopes for a better record is the interior line. From tackle to tackle, the Scots have both size and speed. Only at center does the line lack experience.

Spearheading the linemen will be co-captains Bill Napier and Clint Abbott. Abbott (6'2", 195) holds down the guard position. He is the fastest and toughest of the linemen. His aggressive spirit is a major factor in the past success of the Maryville line. The other guard position will be shared by two sophomores—Charles Berry (6', 200) and Frank Eggers (5'11", 195). Both have the size and the speed to develop into outstanding linemen. John Forgety, Steve Worrell, and Carl Gehman provide Coach Tomlinson with exceptional depth at guard.

Tackle is another strong position in the Scots' line-up. Co-captain Bill Napier (6'2", 215) heads the position. Napier is an exceptional defensive player. Although he is slow, he compensates for this weakness with exceptional physical strength and good reactions. Backing up Napier will be Gary Dutton (6'2", 225). For a big man, Dutton has exceptional agility. Jim Pryor (6'4", 230), the largest man on the team, is the other first-string tackle. In addition to his size, he has the speed to become a deadly downfield blocker. Wayne South (6', 190) plays behind Pryor.

Ends Lack Depth

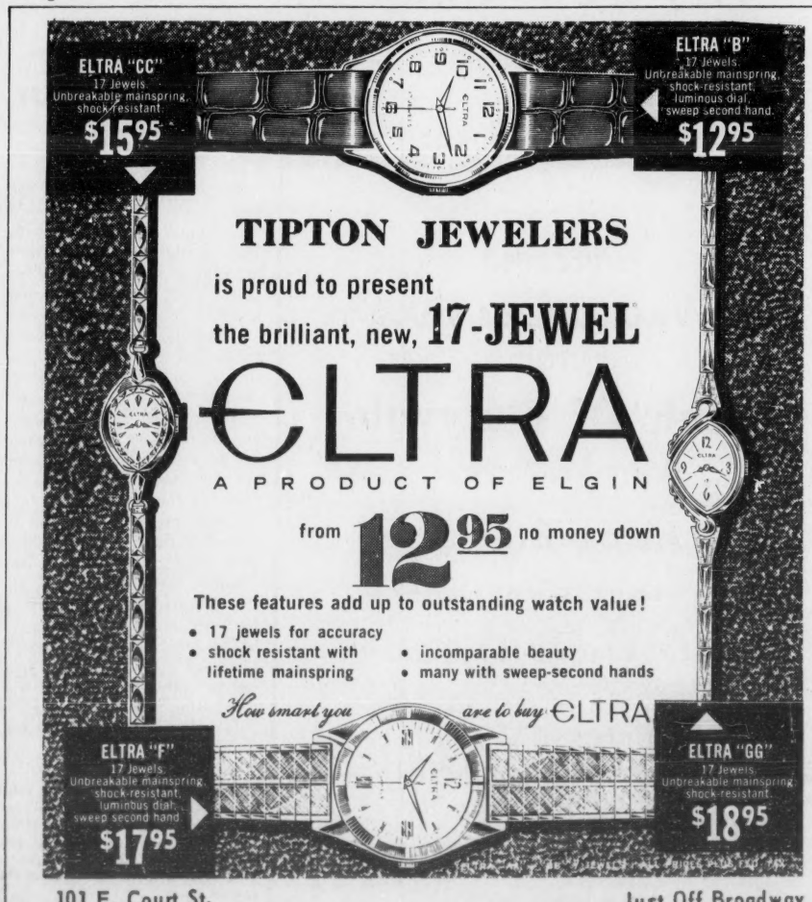
The position that was hit hardest numerically by graduation was end. Only starter Mike Dalton and lettermen Sonny Webb and George Derbyshire return from the 1963 squad. Dalton is a fine receiver whose effectiveness will be enhanced by Tomlinson's new offense. He is exceptionaly fast and a dangerous runner after catching the ball. Sonny Webb is the other end, but he is being hard pressed by George Derbyshire and Jack Smoot.

Offensive System Changed

If Tomlinson is proud of his interior line, he is equally proud of his fine array of quarterbacks. Benny Monroe who excels both as a passer and runner has all the attributes of a great quarterback. Maryville is blessed with another excellent quarterback in H. H. Linginfelter. Linginfelter excels as a field general. He is a smart tactician and has great ability in capitalizing on the weaknesses of his opponents. Herman Ramsey and Jack Mullins back up Monroe and Linginfelter.

Howard Tomlinson faces his first year as Scots' mentor.

The backfield is also strong at running back where Roland McClanahan handles the offensive assignments. Although small, McClanahan has excellent speed. He furnishes the Scots' attack with a breakaway threat every time he carries the ball. He is counted on to be the top scorer. Kip Martin and freshman Danny Rogers back up McClanahan.



The biggest of the Scots' graduation losses was at fullback which was left vacant by Little All-American Ken Berry. To replace Berry, Tomlinson is counting on Keith Bailey. Bailey is a powerful runner, built wide and close to the ground much in the same manner as Berry. It is hoped that Bailey can provide the same punch from fullback that the Highlanders enjoyed last year. If Bailey is unable to handle the load, senior letterman Jeff Slagle is ready to step in. Behind Slagle are Ray Eaton and Billy Sunday.

One of the major changes that Coach Tomlinson has brought to the offense is the addition of a slot back. Split wide of the line, the slot back will serve as a blocker, a decoy, and a pass receiver. Tomlinson has nominated Archie Anderson to handle the job. Anderson will be hard pressed, however, by Mike White. White was the team's number one receiver last season. In addition, White is a fine defensive back and will see duty as the starting safety on defense. Hal Shultz, a speed merchant, rounds out the list of slot backs.

Tomlinson Warns Against Over-Confidence

The prospects of the team are good. However, Coach Tomlinson is quick to point out two factors that could have strong bearing on the team's record. The first of these is the large number of inexperienced men at key positions, especially on defense. In close games, the amount of experience will play an important part in determining the outcome.

A second factor is Maryville's past success on the gridiron. As the Scots' reputation as a football power grows, so does the incentive of their opponents to defeat the high flying Maryville squad. For this reason, Tomlinson expects to find the majority of his 1964 opponents keyed on upsetting his forces.

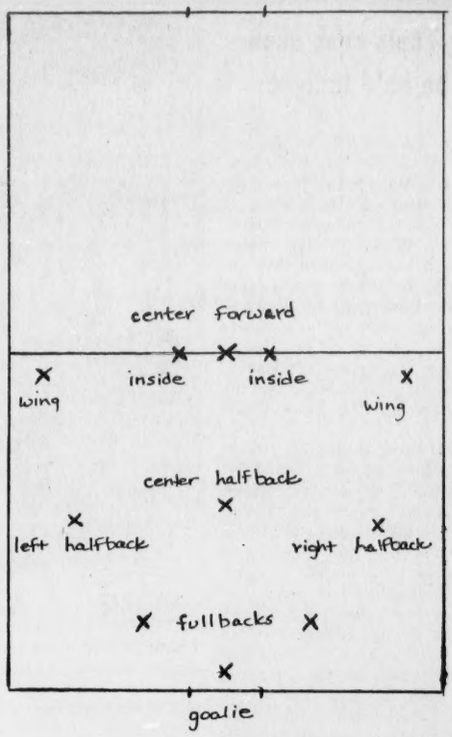
Benny Monroe Wins A.A. Stagg Award



The winner of the first Amos Alonzo Stagg Award in the 1964 season is Benny Monroe. Monroe, a 6', 185 pound senior quarterback, was chosen for his fine play against Centre College. He played a major role in each of Maryville's 21 points and accounted for nine points personally; sneaking one yard for a touchdown, kicking an extra point, and carrying on a two point conversion. In addition, Monroe passed for two touchdowns. Both of the TD tosses were caught by Mike Dalton. One play traveled 33 yards and the other 18 yards. Monroe also had a 40 yard touchdown pass nullified by a penalty. In all, Monroe completed 7 passes in 10 attempts.

Mike Dalton, a junior end, was a close second in the ballotting for the Award. Dalton snared 5 passes for 96 yards and two touchdowns.

The Amos Alonzo Stagg Award was initiated at Maryville and across the nation last year. It is an award given to the person who is judged to have made the biggest contribution to the performance of his team in that week's game.

I wish to preach, not the doctrine of ignoble ease, but the doctrine of the strenuous life.

An Introduction to Soccer

One of the oddities in the athletic picture of a nation as sports-minded as America is, is the relative obscurity of the game of soccer. As baseball is the national pastime of the United States, soccer is the national pastime of the world. The world series of soccer is much more deserving of the title than the world series of baseball is. One of the most interesting aspects of the game is the great fervor it arouses in its fans. Riots are frequent. A South American stadium has erected a barbed wire fence and sunk a moat around its field. Spectators are quite seriously urged not to bring fire arms to the games.

All this goes as way of introduction to the announcement that Maryville College has a soccer team. Because viewing a soccer game will be a new experience to many Maryville College students, the Highland Echo is going to run a series of three articles explaining the fundamentals of the game. This first article will deal with the positioning and functions of the eleven players on the field. The second article will concern the basic rules of the game. Finally, the personnel and prospects of the Maryville team will be discussed. It is hoped that these articles will enlighten the novice soccer fan to the principles of the game and thus make him an informed and interested spectator at Maryville's soccer games.

The eleven positions that comprise a soccer team can be divided into two categories—the line and the backfield. Unlike American football, the backfield in soccer is primarily a defensive unit, while the line is principally responsible for offensive duties.

The Offensive Line

There are five men on the line—a left and a right wing, a left and a right inside, and a center forward. The primary requirements of the wings are good speed and the ability to pass the ball accurately from the sidelines. Although the wings are primarily offensive players, they are responsible for covering the halfbacks of the opposition when they are on the attack.

The insides play on either side of the center forward. Much of the difficult short passing during the game takes place between the insides and the center forward. They also have a definite defensive duty. When the opposition launches a sustained attack on the goalie, the insides must move deep into defensive territory to help clear the ball out of danger into midfield.

The finest offensive player is the center forward. Most of the plays are designed to feed the ball to him in front of the enemy's goal. He should be a good passer, a fine dribbler, and a powerful kicker. The center forward plays solely offense, never crossing into enemy territory.

The Defensive Backfield

The backfield consists of three halfbacks, two fullbacks, and a goalie. The halfbacks, left, right, and center, play an important role on both the offense and the defense. On defense, they are the first wave of opposition that the attackers meet. If they perform their duties well, they will succeed in taking the ball away from the attackers. When they do this, their offensive duties begin. They become the first line of attack, feeding the ball to the line so that it can carry the play into enemy territory.

The key halfback is the center half. He is usually the best player on the team. He must be both a top defensive man and a fine offensive player. He should be able to dribble and pass well. Finally, because he must be at one end of the field on offense and at the other end of the field on defense, he has to be in expert physical condition.

The second line of defense is the fullbacks. They are usually the biggest men on the field. A primary requirement is the ability to kick the ball at least half the length of the field. The fullbacks must also have the precision to kick every ball firmly. If they miss or dub even one kick during the course of the game, it might very easily result in an enemy goal.

Sig-Theta rush show to be held tonight

"You've seen the rest, now you can see the best," as Theta Epsilon and Alpha Sigma present the final event of Greek Week at Maryville College tonight at eight o'clock. Show director, Ralph Tucker, has announced that Aphrodite and Apollo are arriving via Pegasus on time for the opening scene. Other leading members of the cast are Miss Martha Cookos, Mr. Roland Prudhonou, Panayotis Milanis, Mr. Demetrius Allsman, and Mr. Bruce Bigartion.

The Greek theme will remain through the fall as the Sig Olympic football teams work to keep the football trophy and Stinkin' Shoe in the society. The Sledgehammers, Sig's first team, has a large returning nucleus and promising freshmen prospects.

With the typical high spirits of the Greeks, the Sigs and Thetas will go by buses to cheer our football team on to victory at the Mars Hill and Carson-Newman games. Other plans for the near future include an off-campus picnic and redecoration of the Sig House.

The eleventh man on the soccer team and the final line of defense is the goalie. He is the only player who may legally touch the ball with his hands. He must have fast reflexes and the fearlessness to jump into the middle of a pile of kicking feet. He must be willing to risk anything to prevent the ball from going into the net.

This by no means covers the various duties of every position. However, it provides a rough idea of the different functions that are required of the different positions. Next week, the basic rules and some of the terminology will be discussed.

We must remember not to judge any public servant by any one act, and especially should we beware of attacking the men who are merely the occasions and not the causes of disaster.

President Copeland leads Convocation

The Annual Convocation at Maryville College was held on Tuesday, October 6, at 8 a.m. in the chapel. President Copeland's address, using Acts 2:1-4, 12-18 as the text, was "A Vision Beyond Our Mirror Image." The Vesper Choir sang "O All Ye Land, A Joyful Noise," by Dr. Harry H. Harter

After quoting Acts 2:17, Dr. Copeland said, "Our America will become a better nation when we refuse to merely analyze, but to see the present in the light of the future, to see the future in the light of the present. Put your vision into active practice. Blessings on you, but remember, it is a dangerous life. Anyone in any profession who dares to see . . . what God intends, which does not now exist, is living in a dangerous world. Jesus Christ was crucified for no more than having a vision and attempting to do something about it."

The Convocation is a tradition at Maryville that began shortly after World War II when Dr. Ralph W. Lloyd was president of the college. Taking place after students and faculty have settled somewhat into a daily routine, it is the first official calling together of the college community. The address, usually given by the president, is a challenge to all to reaffirm goals and ideals in an effort to set the pace for the year in the best direction.

Fort Mudge and Beyond

by Mike Moyers

Looking Backward

A very elementary observation has been heard from not a few four and five year veterans. "Maryville just isn't the place it was four years ago."

And it isn't. Alterations in college policy, accumulated individually in the past three years, form in this fourth year of our new president a "new" Maryville. And for those of us who were so discouraged then, this new Maryville can only be pleasant.

Tuesday's chapel is now no more grueling than the rest. Sundays are no longer patterned after Puritan blue laws. Twelve o'clock permission, car permission, and off-campus housing make Maryville seem almost like home. It is only when that rare drinker is captured and convicted that we students get a glimpse of the old Maryville.

We students, in evaluating these past three years, are reminded of the southern governor's advice to that militant young Negro: "We told that boy to just be patient." Sound advice, and difficult. But the difficulty of patience is overcome by the necessity of it. And realizing this need, we students enter this fourth year of our new president, planning to be just as patient in these next three years as we have in the past three.

We will be patient in waiting for that same ole limited car program for campus seniors, for an easing of Maryville's chapel requirements, for changes in the realm of academics which will allow a student greater opportunity for variety and independence, and for progress in other areas. Job should have been so patient.

"We told that boy . . ."

Members of top committees named

Dr. Copeland and Mike Moyers have announced the following members of the Disciplinary Board for 1964-1965: Dr. Griffitts, chairman; Mr. Ainsworth; Dr. Blair; Mrs. C. Davis; Mr. Horst; B. Pettigrew; and K. Young.

Of particular interest to all are the members of Student-Faculty Senate, as emphasis will be placed this year on solving problems together in this body: Dr. Copeland, Dean Bushing, Dr. Campbell, Mrs. Cummings, Dr. McClelland, Dean Massey, Miss Miles, Dr. Shields, Dr. Waters, M. Moyers, M. Cook, H. Cones, J. Hinderer, F. Jablonski, W. Mitchell, J. Stewart, T. Barksdale, and J. Mulholland. Dr. Copeland and Mike Moyers will alternate in presiding over Senate meetings.

Also of interest are the twenty-five members of the Executive Council of the Faculty: Dr. Copeland, chairman; Dean McClelland, vice-chairman; Dr. Blair, secretary; Coach Baird; Mr. Brahams; Dean Bushing; Dr. Camp-

Playhouse season opens with "J.B." October 23, 8 p.m.

Opening the 1964-65 season with serious drama, Maryville College Playhouse will present Archibald MacLeish's Pulitzer Prize play, "J. B." The searching and suffering of a modern Job, caught up in the eternal struggle between God and Satan, will be brought before the audience.

"J. B." is under the direction of Thomas E. Jones, assisted by Margaret Moffett. Top billing goes to David Evans (J. B.), Mary Gay Boettcher (Sarah, his wife), David King (Mr. Zuss — God), and Dale Schellenger (Nickles — Satan). Others in the cast are John Boretsky, John Kerr, Lorraine Briggs, Ginger Proffitt, Sarah Tompkins, Becky Smith, Virginia Wells, Cecelia Bridges, Kathy Lutz, Pete Parks, Bob Schultz, and Doug Gamble.

The story will be enacted Friday and Saturday, October 23 and 24, with curtain time each evening at 8:00 p.m. Tickets are now on sale at the Theatre Office in the Chapel.

'64-'65 Marching Band has new look

The Highlander Marching Band under the direction of Mr. John Roberts will again be presenting colorful entertainment this year with a record number of seventy-seven members.

Drum section improved

The band, in traditional Scotch uniforms, has added a new touch of authenticity in the drum section. Along with the women in kilts and men in Scotch guard uniforms, the bass drummer will be wearing the traditional white coat and shako plus an overdrape of leopard skin. Four chrome-plated snare drums and white drag ropes have been added also. The percussion corps is also genuinely Scotch, wearing kilts and tams or balmorrow. In charge of this group as drum captain is Ross Kerr.

Football shows planned

The half-time shows will prove to be both timely and colorful with such themes as Swinging on Parade, Hootenanny, and, in keeping with elections, Spooks and Politics. In this last show the Scots will rival Democrats and Republicans with the formation of their own political party.

Sponsor and majorettes chosen

The band has selected Nancy Buckwalter, a senior elementary education major from Wichita Falls, Texas, as band sponsor. Majorettes chosen by head majorette Carolyn Foust are Judy Foust, Saran Singleton, and Patti Presnell. Taking the place of the former mascot, Wee Bit, is Little Bit of Black Goblin who will be marching with the band.

Men's Glee Club, Women's Choir initiate new members

Friday, October 9, 1964, marked the official beginning of the new year for Women's Choir and Men's Glee Club. The day began with informal initiation of the new members. The same evening all members met in the band room of the Fine Arts Center for a spaghetti supper and formal initiation. Taking over for Mr. Dan Kinsinger, who is on leave this year, is the new director, Mr. Lou Mize.

The Women's Choir will open the season at Vespers, October 18, with the mixed group presenting its annual Fall Serenade on November 21.

Parade to be held today

A Mass Migration Downtown Pep Rally will leave from the Chapel today at 1:30. Led by the Highlander Marching Band and Cheerleaders, the student body will snakedance through downtown Maryville to the shopping center area.

Special student rates offered for concerts

This year, for the first time, students may buy season tickets for the Knoxville Symphony Orchestra Concert Season at the special student rate of $5. Single admission would be $1.80, so this amounts to a 50% saving. The $5 student rate covers seats in the $10 areas. Mrs. Wyman in the Fine Arts Center Office has the tickets, and both Mr. Roberts and Mr. Perry are willing to provide transportation for students wishing to attend these concerts.

The seven concerts provide a varied program, including dancing, opera, and orchestra. David Van Vactor is the conductor of the Knoxville Symphony Orchestra. On October 13, John Browning, pianist, will be presented. The November 17th concert brings Scenes de Ballet and "Cavalleria Rusticana." On December 8, there will be an All French Program Orchestra Concert. On January 19, the guest star will be Mary Costa, soprano. February 16 brings William Starr, violinist. On March 16, Raya Garbousova, cellist, and the Maryville College Choir will present an all Russian program. And on April 6, William Bommelje, French horn soloist, will be presented. All concerts will be on Tuesday evenings in the Civic Auditorium.

Looking backward

by David Powell

The following quotations were taken from the 40th anniversary issue of Saturday Review, August 29, 1964.

"What books published during the last four decades most significantly altered the direction of our society? Which may have a substantial impact on public thought and action in the years ahead? Twenty-seven historians, economists, political analysts, educators, social scientists and philosophers pondered these questions . . . and between them came up with 163 titles . . ."

Of these books, the twelve receiving the most votes were

1. The General Theory of Employment, Interest and Money —John Maynard Keynes
2. An American Dilemma —Gunnar Myrdal
3. Mein Kampf —Adolf Hitler
4. Cybernetics —Norbert Wiener
5. The Lonely Crowd —David Riesman
6. Sexual Behavior in the Human Male; Sexual Behavior in the Human Female —Alfred Kinsey
7. Grapes of Wrath —John Steinbeck
8. Common Sense Book of Baby and Child Care —Benjamin Spock
9. The Affluent Society —John Galbraith
10. Modern Corporations and Private Property —Adolph A. Berle
11. The Nature and Destiny of Man—Reinhold Niebuhr
12. Silent Spring —Rachael Carson

Of these twelve influential titles only two do not appear in our Maryville College library, numbers six and eight.

If you deny the cause, you must deny the effect.

Phi looks forward to solid season

by Joe Thomas

Now that the excitement of Rush Week has died down, Kappa Phi eases back into a dull routine of earth-shattering excitement. The men of Phi are well prepared for the Fall Semester, with many additions to past accomplishments.

The newest addition to the list of Phi firsts is the publication of a society weekly newsletter, The Pulse, edited by Will Mitchell. This project is designed to keep all active Phi's informed of the development of the program and calendar.

The two intramural football teams are ready and anxious to give that other society some hot competition for the Stinkin' Shoe.

Ready for the fall season, the Phi House boasts a new "gym-floor" finish and a new coat of paint on the inside. The cabinets have been prepared and (best of all) the T.V. is fixed.

From here it looks like a solid season for the solid society, Kappa Phi.

THE JOURNEY

by Dave Powell

"They spoke of your return," said the boy. "I wanted to hear of your journey, but they said I am unworthy even to pronounce your name. Forgive me, Old One, I will go now. To see you is enough," and he turned to the door.

"Innocent and foolish was I to desire the world," said the Old Man. "To know that the wind had been everywhere and back again was maddening. I could not let the wind know all the secret places for itself."

The boy stopped at the door.

"In the precipitation of youth I defied the wind and walked into it, following the sun in its toil.

"From the first my steps were painful, but I could not sense pain — only the exhilaration of freedom. Long I walked, but always when I stopped to rest — the sun moved on and I was left behind.

"And the first year of the journey that seemed to pass so quickly gave birth to a second year and a third and a fourth. The years themselves gave birth to long months, and the months brought forth lingering weeks, and the weeks perpetual days. In time, years and days were indistinguisable. Reality was not time, it was pain and hunger and thirst and boredom.

"So endless were the mornings that the evenings were no longer welcome relief. Passion left me. I walked without haste and without rest.

"The paths I followed grew narrow and were covered with weeds. My feet stumbled. My eyes grew dim. My hearing failed. My heart dried up within me. At night while I sat staring into darkness the wind laughed in the trees.

"I had seen everything.

"I had found nothing.

"Who can say at what point my breath came easier; at what place the ground beneath my feel became a cushion and the sound of my steps the hush of silken slippers in soft white sand?

"But lo the breezes brought the scent of ripeness and abundance — cherry groves and clover fields. People that I passed wore smiles. Houses grew like wild flowers by the roadside — pink and yellow and blue.

"Water was sweet and cold in this strange, new land, bread was baked from clouds.

"Gentle gusts caressed my body, carrying away with them the aches I had endured.

"The sound of warm rain in the trees was the music of slumber.

"I slept in soft pine boughs.

"My dreams were green.

"Long I lingered in this land tucked away in the heart of God. I wished for nothing. I watched brooks tumble down the mountains, and in the morning light, half closing my eyes I could see a rainbow of fairies dancing on the water to the airs of katydid flutes and sparrow violins.

"From the mountain ridges I could taste the ginger of unbound flight — as though I could soar with the strongest of eagles.

"I had found eternal joy.

"Across a field of poppies walking silently and purposefully came a young man dressed in white. He stopped before me, his brown eyes gazing quietly into my soul.

" 'In this land there is no death," he said. "You are very old. You must leave.'

"Then he followed the path he had woven, back through the blood-red poppies.

"How many years have passed since I left that field I do not know. What distances I covered cannot be told. I am all that remains of a journey."

The Old Man paused. The boy was sitting at his feet. There was a lifetime of silence.

"Boy," whispered the Old Man, "I wish you could have been there."

"I will go," said the boy "I will leave today and travel the difficult paths in search for the land you have seen," and he rose from the floor.

"Boy, you cannot find that place. Understand that I am an old man. All that I have told you was a dream. In truth I have never been beyond the walls of this room. Old Men and boys have seen fantastic lands. Only the wind knows they do not exist."

"But you traveled in spite of the wind," said the boy as he stood by the open door, "I will travel with it." The door closed and the boy was gone.

In the empty room an old man sat in the dust, dry as the bones of dead leaves. He was laughing quietly to himself in short gasps like cold drafts in a dark and vacant house.

Chi Betas Plan picnic this afternoon

by Anne Smith

Rush week spirit is continuing in Chi Beta as we now settle down to making this a very successful year. The officers for this semester are President, Tina Criner; Vice-President, Judy Butler; Secretary, Ellen Lankenau; Treasurer, Lib Doran; and Inter-Society Council representative, Judy Wasson.

The first major activity is a joint picnic with Kappa Phi this afternoon before our first home football game. For this reason spirits are high, and we are very grateful to Dr. and Mrs. Campbell for offering their home as the site of our picnic.

After the picnic Chi Betas are going to the game together, and we will continue with our card section for each home game this year. So get your blazers on, Chi Betas, and come a few minutes early.

QUIPS AND QUOTES FROM COURT STREET

by Stanley Street

The other afternoon I was standing on the corner of Court Street waiting for a ride. Unfortunately, it was raining quite hard and I was getting soaked to the skin. All of a sudden, a beeutiful female specimen appeared at the door of that attractive little red brick house on the corner and invited me in for a cup of coffee. Well, of course I accepted, and let me tell you, I wouldn't have traded that hour for anything in the world.

When I got inside the house, I found that there were seven more lovelies who lived there, also. Upon asking about this place they all called home, I was cordially invited to take a tour. I found that the whole house has a wonderfully homey atmosphere throughout — something like Grand Central Station. It is attractively decorated with many interesting pieces of furniture purchased from the surrounding area at surprisingly low prices. By far the most unique piece of furniture is the 1948, three-inch wide screen TV from Moyers Radio & TV, Inc., bought for a tremendous bargain price of $16.00 . . . or maybe it was only $12.00.

In the course of my conversation with these illustrious girls, I learned that a few interesting things have happened in the house since school has started, and I would like to tell you about them.

During visiting hours there have been many noted campus personalities dropping in to say hello. Among them were Mike, Norm, the football team (and all at once, too!), Jerry, Milano, Bigarti, Crash and his maintenance men, Roger, Fuller Brush, Red Beard, and every other Tom, Dick, and Harry . . . or was it Henry?

Our conversation was interrupted by two more members of this happy household, named Ophelia and Lucy. They came bounding into the room, jumped onto my lap, and, of all things, started nibbling at my ear! This was fine with me — that is, until I detected a slightly noticeable odor, which must have been Puss 'n Boots.

If you ever happen to be walking by the house and see someone digging gravel out back in the dark, or someone stealing up to the back porch with a funeral wreath, think nothing of it — it's all in a "hard day's night."

Scots Tackle Emory and Henry Tonight

The Maryville College football team will open its 1964 home season tonight when they meet Emory & Henry College at eight o'clock on Honnaker Field. The Scots, seeking to extend their record to three wins and no losses, will have a special incentive to defeat the Emory & Henry squad. The Wasps ruined Maryville's bid for a perfect record last year with a 13 to 6 setback delivered on their home field in Virginia.

Hawkins Injured

Emory & Henry lost only five men from their 1963 team which was generally recognized as one of the finest small college teams in the South. Twenty-two lettermen returned to bolster the Wasps. With two of the returnees being Little All-American selections, the Wasps were looking forward to an excellent season. However, they have failed to win a single game so far this season and have lost three. The losses came at the hand of Elon College, Carson-Newman, and Catawba by identical scores of 14 to 6. The failure of the 1964 edition of the Emory & Henry squad can be attributed to two factors. Although the Wasps lost only five lettermen, four of them were linebackers. Their absence forces Coach Casto Ramsey to fill the highly important position with inexperienced personnel. The second, and more important factor, is the loss of their Little All-American halfback Earl Hawkins. Hawkins, the fifth leading rusher in the nation last year with 1037 yards and the leading scorer in Virginia with 14 touchdowns in 11 games, was counted on to have his best year. However, he suffered a broken collar bone while making a diving catch of a pass during fall practice and is not expected to see action against the Scots.

Big Line Aids Wasps

The Emory & Henry squad is blessed with a large and experienced line that averages over 200 pounds per man. At ends the Wasps have two tough and seasoned performers — Bill Maxson (6'3", 217) and Pete Tosh (6', 200). Maxson was moved to end from tackle to take advantage of his size and speed. He is primarily a blocker and defensive man. Tosh is also a fine defensive end. Although the Emory & Henry press releases list him as a good receiver, the fact remains that he managed to catch only one pass in '63. Maxson also made only one reception. They are doing little better in '64. Tom Ely (6', 210) and Mike Basham (6' 2½", 235) are the tackles. Basham is a fine performer who won several post-season honors last year. He has received several professional offers. At guard the Wasps have Little All-American Bob Bryant (5'11, 200) and Fred Reed (6', 170). Bryant is strong on both offense and defensive and is having a fine year. Center is handled by Rhea (6', 193), a good tackler and team leader.

Backfield Unsettled

The backfield is led by halfback and co-captain Bobby Magill. Magill, a good defensive back and the team's leading receiver last year, won All-State honors for his play last year. The other halfback is Gary Arnold (6'1", 190). He has scored two of the Wasps' three touchdowns so far this year. Arnold is one of the best defensive backs in the area, intercepting eleven passes during the '63 season. The Wasps are weak at quarterback and fullback. Coach Casto Ramsey started the season with two returning lettermen at quarerback — Ron Bales and Carrey Anderson. However, both have done poorly and may be replaced by sophomore Buster Coomes. At fullback Charlie Teefey, a 195 pounder, has not lived up to expectations and may be replaced by freshman Bud Carlton.

Statistics Reveal Weakness

The statistics from the Wasps' first three games yield some interesting facts. Their offense on the ground is rapidly improving. They moved from a meager 62 yards rushing in their opener, to 147 in their second to a respectable 204 yards in the third. Their passing game, however, leaves much to be desired. After gaining 84 yards in the air in the first game, the Wasps have picked up only 74 yards on 7 completions in 21 attempts in the next two contests. A third statistic concerns the Emory & Henry pass defense. Although Arnold and Magill are highly rated defenders, five of the six touchdowns that have been scored against the Wasps have come through the air.

In summary, Maryville can expect the Wasps to be a strong running team. However, the lack of a passing threat will enable the Scots to concentrate their defenses on the ground attack. Secondly, the fine passers and receivers on the Maryville team should be a source of much trouble in the unsettled defensive secondary of the Emory & Henry team.

by Phil Jerome

One of the reasons for the great spectator appeal of the game of soccer is the fact that the ball is almost always in play. Only on rare occasions does the referee's whistle call for the stoppage of play. Even when the whistle is blown, action is usually halted only for a matter of seconds. It is the purpose of this article to discuss the rules that govern the game.

Play is stopped when the ball goes out of bounds. The rule governing the putting of the ball into play again is similar to the rule in basketball. If team A is the last team to touch the ball before it goes out of bounds, team B is awarded the ball from the point where it left the field of play. When the ball goes out of bounds over the end lines (the side lines on which the goals are located) after being touched last by the defensive team, the offensive team is awarded a corner kick. The ball is taken to the corner and kicked into play from there. Corner kicks provide the offense particularly good scoring opportunities.

Play is stopped when the referee calls a foul. The most basic foul is the hand ball. If any player other than the goalie touches the ball with either his arm or hand, the other team is awarded possesion of the ball from the point of the foul. If a hand ball is called on the defensive team when they are in the penalty area, the offensive is awarded a penalty kick. All players abandon the penalty area except the goalie and a player designated by the

If you think that all the welcomes and welcome-back slogans have ended, you are wrong. For here is the opportunity to invite each and everyone of the women on campus to participate in the intramural program.

Kicking off our women's intramural season, Women's "M" Club and WAA jointly sponsored a welcoming party on September 22, for all women students. A comedy skit was presented describing "Women's Olympics at MC," and later, refreshments were served.

The Women's "M" Club recently held its annual fall retreat at Cades Cove. At this time, between pitching tents and cooking campfire stew, the members planned the WAA sports activities for this year. In addition to its regular curriculum of sports, WAA has added golf, and scheduled more games to be played in every sport.

Field Hockey will be the first sport of the new season and practice sessions have already begun. These sessions will be continued until October 8 and the first competitive game will be held on October 13.

Following field hockey will be soccer and volleyball. As each sport gets under way, signs with more information will appear around campus, and in the dorms. So, come on out, y'all, and support the team of your choice!

Highlanders Defeat Georgetown 20-14

Traveling for the second time in as many weeks to central Kentucky, our fighting Scots put Georgetown's Tiger in their tank to the tune of 20—14. The game was an exciting one right from the beginning as neither team was ever in complete control of the game for very long. In the final analysis it was Maryville's strong defense that meant the difference. Georgetown had a slight edge in the statistics but it was Maryville's dogged line that kept them from scoring more often than they did.

The Scots were the first to break the scoring column as Rollin' Roland McClanahan pushed across from the four yard line in the first quarter. Quarterback Benny Monroe added the point and the 7—0 lead held until Georgetown tied it up early in the second quarter. Then, with H. H. Linginfelter at the reins, Archie Anderson took a short pass from quarterback and gave the lead back to our side. The extra point attempt failed and the Scots went to the locker room with a 13—6 halftime edge.

In the third quarter it was Roland McClanahan skipping eight yards for a third Scottie touchdown only minutes after a touchdown run by Jeff Slagle was called back because of a penalty. The conversion was good and the 20—7 score seemed comfortable. However, the Tiger quarterback had found the weaknesses in the Maryville pass defense and early in the fourth quarter moved his team to another touchdown. Now the score was 20—14 and the extra point attempt which had been blocked after our second touchdown loomed mighty large. Had the Georgetowners been able to score again, and they made several frightening attempts, that one blocked kick could have meant the difference between a tie and a defeat.

The tension was thick on the visitors' side of the field through the final minutes of the game as the rushing Tigers violated Maryville territory time and again, only to lose the ball on fumbles. The Scot line looked particularly good during the second half as they refused to yield ground as the Georgetowners ran deep into scoring territory. The victory was one that Head Coach Howard Tomlinson, who used his first two units very effectively during the afternoon, could be proud of. The win was also especially nice since two former Maryvillians are associated with the Georgetown team — Art Fairchild, who hasn't lost any weight since his playing days here, is now a coach with Georgetown, and Danny Besch, a former Maryville guard, is now a lineman for the Tigers.

Riding high on a string of two straight away victories, the Scots are preparing to take on Emory and Henry College today in their home debut. It was these same Wasps that handed our boys their only loss of last year's season and the Scots are eager to return the favor. E & H has had a dismal season thus far, having lost three times without a victory. The main reason for their failure this year has been the injury to huge Earl Hawkins, one of the nation's leading scorers last year.

offensive team. From a point twelve feet from the goal, the offensive man tries to kick the ball past the goalie into the goal. Penalty kicks are the surest method of scoring. However, few are called and a team that misses a penalty kick is passing an excellent opportunity. A second foul is roughness, or interference. Bodily contact is allowed only if it is incidental to the play. When the referee calls roughness, the ball is awarded to the other team from the point of the infraction. A third type of foul is called a "dangerous play." If a player commits an act that the referee rules is dangerous to either of the players' health, he awards the ball to the opposite team.

Off-sides is one of the most important and least understood of all rules. The essence of the rule is that either the ball or a defensive player other than the goalie must be between the offensive man and the goal at all times. This prevents a team from stationing a man deep in enemy territory to receive long passes.

It has been possible to cover only the most basic of rules in this article. If during the course of the game the referee makes a call that you do not understand, it would be appreciated if you would submit your question to any member of the soccer team so that it may be discussed in the Echo. The final article in this series will appear next week when the prospects and personnel of the Maryville team will be presented.

Action in the 1964 intramural football season began last week. Under the supervision of Coach J. D. Davis, the league consists of six teams. Above are members of two of the leading contenders for this year's championship. Greg Hallen of the Eagles bears down on the Sledgehammers's Jerry Stewart.

From the attic to the basement

by Sandy Briggs

Yes, indeed, the best was saved until last — last Saturday night when Alpha Sigma-Theta Epsilon finished off Rush Week with a Tucker original, "An Attic Mystery." The naturalistic setting of Fayerweather Hall and the informal attire were refreshing changes from the traditional past.

The show started and ended in roars of laughter, beginning with D. Smook falling into the fish pond and ending with B. T. monkeying. On the more tragic side was one whole freshman section fainting when the fifth real-live type car arrived on the scene (a 64 T-bird convertible). They were quickly revived, however, when Tennessee Terror McCampbell and his gang from Dirty Louie's stormed in screaming, shouting, and dragging them to Dirty Louie's, too.

But due to a nasty rain god, Mrs. Robinson's basement had to suffice; the rain, however, dampened no one's spirits in the least. The dance was one of the greatest for enthusiasm and participation. The Alpha Sigma Blue Shades played on until midnight, relieved at intervals by the Theta Epsilon Lady Shades who were making their first big time appearance with drummer girl McDade beating out the rhythm.

HOUSEMOTHER HAUNT

by Sandy Chittick

This year the Maryville College housemothering crew has reached a total of nine, after adding two new mothers for the Crawford and Taylor Houses and losing Mrs. Strick to retirement.

Returning for her thirteenth bout with M.C. upperclass coeds is Mrs. Robinson from middle Tennessee. In all, this is her twenty-first year of girlsitting. She likes to be in touch with young people and is quite happy with the girls, although she says her job is "about the same as being a mother in the boys' dorm—they are underfoot all the time." "Just look at my hair to see if it has made me young," she tells us, "but I must like it or I wouldn't stay."

Ma Jones from Knoxville is struggling with her eleventh set of M.C. rowdies. She is "just delighted with boys" after three daughters (and all the young men they collected). Her boys are the "real joy in living" to her, and she has 191 interests instead of a few.

Mrs. Spears, also from Knoxville, is facing the frantic freshman females for the ninth time in her twelve year career. She likes the new interest provided each year by the freshmen women and enjoys watching their progress in their college years. In addition to the girls, she tries "to tolerate the young boys as best I can."

Holding down the Memorial stronghold is six-year veteran, Mrs. Flynn. She enjoys helping and is interested in the differing personalities she encounters.

Mrs. Epting is rationing car permissions for her fifth year in Baldwin Hall. A former teacher from Athens, Georgia, she enjoys youth, and in her fifteen years as a housemother she has had many rewarding experiences.

Back for a third attempt at taming the sophomore fillies is Mrs. Cathey. In her five years of work with coeds, she has found a "reason for being." She feels completely at home in Maryville and is glad to have a use for her abilities.

Encountering coed concerns for the first time is Miss Witherspoon at the Taylor House. From Illinois and the aunt of former economics professor Witherspoon, she says she finds her work "sheer joy . . . well, almost."

Mrs. Pankey from Missouri is minding her brood at the Crawford House for her first year at M.C., although she has had twelve years of experience.

Still surviving after a one year sample of M.C., Mrs. Gillespie from North Carolina is back for seconds in Pearsons Hall. She thinks her girls are great and finds many rewards as a housemother.

This special group of women turns out to be really not too bad. They plead not to be made to "sound too rabid." So, the next time the 10:30 beat-it bell sounds, just remember, fellows, her mother would probably push you out the door too!

The Status Quo

For a good many years prior to 1960, the following statement appeared in the Maryville College catalog: "Those who are out of sympathy with Maryville College ideals, methods, or regulations, or who for any reason do not expect to abide by and support them are requested not to enroll at Maryville." In 1960 a change was made in this statement. Though barely perceptible, the change is somewhat heartening. The statement now reads as follows: "The College encourages application only from those who are in sympathy with the institution's ideals, methods, and regulations and who would expect to abide by and support them."

For at least 25 years, and probably longer, each student admitted to MC has signed basically the same "pledge of college loyalty." The majority sign the pledge, which is found at the bottom of the application, and promptly forget it. A small but significant minority are reminded of their pledge when MC kisses them goodbye, be it temporarily or permanently, and their "as low as possible" expenses go down the drain — all because of an infraction of the general college regulations.

When a student is dismissed from Maryville, the comments occurs repeatedly: "What right has Maryville . . .?" The answer of his fellows are varied, but one is obvious. Each student here gave Maryville the right, voluntarily, when he signed this pledge: "Recognizing the fact that Maryville College is a private institution . . . and that admission to its privileges or continuance in them is conditioned entirely upon the continued consent of the authorities of the institution, I hereby pledge my word of honor that if my application for admission is accepted, I will conform to the regulations of the College so long as I am connected with it as a student; and that I will throw my influence as a student and as a member of any class or other college organization in favor of college law and order; and I accept this pledge that I have signed as sufficient notification that I shall forfeit my standing as a student and whatever college fees I may have paid, if I violate this pledge now taken." (Italics mine)

Surprised? I had forgotten too. So, the next time you start to steal a test from a teacher's office, or bring a car back after vacation, or have a few beers at Piggie's, or go into a motel on Saturday night, remember — "if I violate this pledge . . ."

MC sponsors reading improvement

Beginning October 28, and continuing through December 16, experts from The Reading Laboratory, Inc. of Philadelphia and New York will conduct reading improvement classes on the Maryville College campus for all students interested in improving confidence, speed, comprehension, concentration and critical abilities in reading. This is not, however, a program of speed reading or remedial reading.

Class size limited

Each class will be limited to twelve and will meet three hours per week, scheduled at the convenience of those who enroll. Students and adults in the community of Maryville may also take the course.

Tests to be given

Tests to determine maturity and proficiency, conducted at the beginning of the course, will govern the curriculum. Although being uniform in structure, the program will be individualized on the basis of the scores achieved on the tests. The course will be concentrated, dealing with a variety of training tasks.

Cost set

Presented in over two hundred colleges and schools and by a number of leading industries in the United States, the reading course has proved to be beneficial to both those in industry and high school and college students. Cost for the six weeks program will be $75, one-half payable at the beginning and the remainder at the end of the second week.

The Class of 1968 elects B. Bisserup first president

Bisserup

On Wednesday, October 7, 80% of the freshman class voted to elect the following officers:

President: Bob Bisserup
Vice-president: John Haynie
Secretary-treasurer: Chris Wald
Student council representatives:
Doug Gamble
Jenny Jett
Dick Nelson
Cole Piper

Bob Bisserup, the first president of the Class of '68, should prove an asset to the Maryville College family. Bob hails from New York City and is experiencing his first taste of life in the sunny South. He finds our campus "very pretty," the students "very congenial," and the campus life here "not as dull" as he expected. He has high hopes for his class—including a victory in the Homecoming float competition. "I know every freshman class thinks they're going to win—but we are."

As far as the regulations of Maryville College are concerned, Bob thinks the cut system is "terrible!" He would support some form of a limited cars-on-campus program and feels that prohibiting drinking off-campus by 21-year-olds is unrealistic, though he agrees with college policy as to on-campus drinking.

Bob is not limiting his participation in campus life to student government. He is playing on the soccer team and plans to follow in our student body president's footsteps as a member of the basketball team.

Bob asked for an opportunity to express his thanks to the freshmen for electing him and to the upperclassmen for the advice and backing they have given him.

MC to play 2 sports today

The Maryville College Scots will meet Berea College in a soccer game this afternoon at 2 p.m. MC played two games with Berea last year, winning 3-2 and losing 5-1.

The thus-far undefeated Scots' football team will play Livingston State at 8 p.m. This will be the Scots' first encounter with this team, which has a record similar to the MC record.

Students' expenses to be studied

The department of economics and business administration is undertaking a project to study student expenditures for the school year.

In order to obtain the best possible information, students will be divided into two groups. The first group will be asked to list their daily expenditures, and the second group will be asked to estimate their expenditures during the college year.

Since many students are interested in knowing their personal expenditures, the marketing class, which will be doing the interviewing, feels this study to be beneficial to the student body.

There's just one rule for politicians all over the world: Don't say in Power what you say in Opposition; if you do, you only have to carry out what the other fellows have found impossible.

1964 Homecoming Queen

Margaret Hanson, senior pre-med major from Belle Center, Ohio, will reign over the Homecoming festivities on October 31. She was elected Thursday by the MC student body. She will be attended by Lorraine Briggs, Kathy Burgess, Janet Melville, and Gail Smith.

Pianists Nelson and Neal to appear on October 20

The opening program of the 1964-1965 College-Community Artists Series will be a piano concert presented by Nelson and Neal, the Australian-American duo piano team which returns to the Maryville College Chapel to perform on October 20, at 8:15 P.M.

Although the two have impressed audiences in the past decade with their immense repertoire and polished style, critics throughout the nation have especially raved about their artistic growth during the last two years. This was the result of revamping their repertoire so it would exclude all transcriptions and include a new variety of original works by Brahms, Schubert, Mendelssohn, Liszt, and others, heretofore neglected as being important compositions.

Their charm and flawless playing have enhanced many audiences to such an extent that Nelson and Neal have a 50% return engagement record. This popular duo has the reputation for producing an evening of entertainment that will enthrall you spiritually with musical excitement.

Lip service

We enjoyed the freshman class election—as well as any upper classman can from such a distance. People seemed interested and excited, even lower upper classmen. It looked like fun.

Our only complaint, besides the posters, was the percentage of freshmen who voted — 80%. That's small for us: we are used to hitting 97-100%. A friend of ours generously suggested that all classes may begin with such a low percentage. Maybe the freshmen haven't caught onto that tradition yet.

Not a very good example has been set for the freshmen if attendance at the student body meeting on Wednesday were any criterion. These are traditionally attended by only those who cannot manage to scramble over the feet of an unsuspecting-thus-unprepared chapel monitor. So many juniors and seniors left — who wants Homecoming anyway?

The most well-attended student body meeting we can remember is that that one two years ago which was called by demand of the students, because two or three drinkers had been shafted. The idea was to organize some sort of spontaneous uprising against MC. (Garrett quelled the mob.)

So what if there's nothing sensational going on? Mike and Jon both wear black socks.

The other day as I searched for a book in the 200 section of the library, I came upon one which had somehow escaped last year's spring cleaning given to this section by our helpful student body.

There wasn't even a date due slip in this book. Instead a yellowing letter fell out of its pages. This letter which was dated 1924, was evidently written by some member of the class of '28 as she discovered the joys of life "on the Hill."

"Dearest Mother and Father,

Each day I spend here 'on the Hill,' I find more exciting things to do. Next weekend some of the girls are going on a hike. My new knickers will be just the thing for it.

The past week was our chance to become acquainted with the two girls' literary societies—Bainonian and Theta Epsilon. They had a joint bonfire out in the college woods. It is so difficult to decide which one to join. They each have such exciting things planned. Why, last year Theta did a production of 'Little Women.' And this year Bainonian plans to do 'Miss Lulu Bett.'

Oh, I did some moonshining yesterday. You know, that's what we call walking or talking, etc. with a member of the opposite gender. We are allowed to pursue this sport at noon (12:50-1:10), Monday afternoons (1:00-4:30), to church on Sundays, at ball games, social functions at the chapel, and other like occasions.

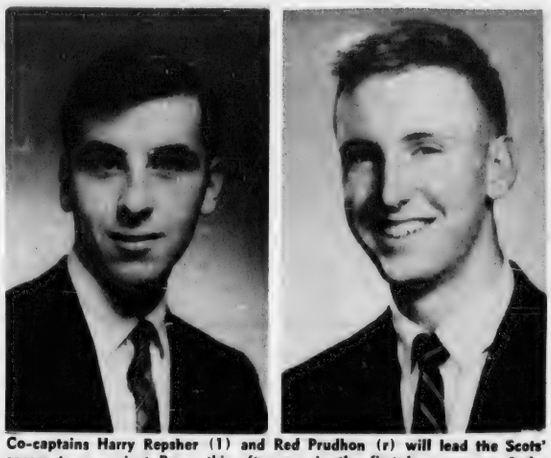
Dalton Scores Twice

Monroe Passes Scots By Emory & Henry

by Dave King

From the way everyone was acting an outsider would have thought that Maryville had just won in the Rose Bowl. Fans screaming, the Band playing, football players laughing and jumping and carrying the coaches off the field — it all resembled a victory party the likes of which Maryville hasn't seen for quite a while. And on the face of it, it really didn't seem like any sort of a special victory. After all, Emory and Henry hasn't won a game yet this year and their star player, Earl Hawkins, is still sidelined with injuries.

Maryville was dazzling both on the ground and in the air as they gained 350 yards against the struggling Wasps. Mike Dalton was the big hero of the evening for our side as he personally accounted for two touchdowns and a number of key tackles. Benny Monroe looked particularly sharp at quarterback as he and H. H. Linginfelter completed 8 of the 11 passes they attempted. Roland McClanahan scampered all over the field and even attempted a pass himself on one play, although it was incomplete. Defensively, the Scots looked good and special credit should go to the "big boys" of the interior line who twice thwarted Wasp touchdown drives dangerously deep in Maryville territory. Mike Dalton's standout play was somewhat ironic, for it was he who had the misfortune of being Benny Monroe's intended receiver on a pass play in the dying seconds of last year's game which, had it been complete, might have meant victory instead of defeat for our side.



Benny Monroe rolls out on a pass play – a maneuver that was a frequent source of trouble to Wasp defenders.

The Wasps started off strong but it was Maryville which drew first blood on a flashy Monroe to Dalton pass play that covered 59 yards in the first period. The PAT was no good but Maryville still had a 6-0 lead. Speedy Bobby Magill, who often seemed unhappy with the defensive play of the Maryville secondary and didn't hesitate to tell anyone who would listen to him and a few who wouldn't, evened the score in the second quarter but a blocked kick kept the score even at 6 apiece. As time slowly evaporated toward halftime and cold fans began turning their eyes toward the coffee-stocked refreshment stands, the Scot offense turned itself on strong again and it was the Monroe to Dalton pattern that put us ahead again. The pass play was another spectacular one, this time covering 53 yards. A Benny Monroe kick split the uprights this time and the halftime score was a pleasant 13-6.

As the third quarter marched along it was Jeff "Bushhog" Slagle's turn to enter the scoring column, as he pushed four yards for the third Maryville TD of the night. The kick was good and the 20—6 margin looked mighty good. The tough Scot defense, rapidly gaining a reputation for its goalline stands, pushed back another Wasp drive and we took over deep in our own territory. This time the offense wasn't able to move the ball far enough and a quick kick was called for. Unfortunately, there was a bad snap from center and before anyone realized what was happening, Emory and Henry had picked up the errant pigskin and had scored from our 19 yard line. An attempt for a two-point conversion went amiss and the Bees had to settle for a 20—12 score. The final quarter saw both sides make attempts at scoring, including a heartstopping series of downs near the Maryville goal, but neither side was able to add to their total points. A series of penalties against the Virginia team in the dying seconds of the game for poor sportsmanship moved the Scots to the midfield mark but had no real effect on the outcome of the game, other than to point up the excitement and the tension that existed on the playing field.

The Emory and Henry defeat was an important one for the big Scots since the Wasps presented one of the biggest threats we'll have all year. Carson-Newman, our arch-rivals from Jefferson City, can always be counted on to put up a strong fight, as last year's dramatic 27-24 action-packed victory shows. But our boys apparently felt that if they could get by Emory and Henry and even the score for last year, the going for the rest of the season could be comparatively easy. The victory was an important one, to be sure, for it gave our side added confidence in what they can do against top flight competition and it gave the cheering fans who crowded the field their money's worth and then some. However, this seems to be shaping up as a year of big upsets in college and professional football and it would be a real shame if Maryville's justified confdence ran a muck and some second-rate team knocked us from our pedestal. After this big win over Emory and Henry each of our opponents is going to be doing its best to knock us from the ranks of the undefeated — if we can play as we have for the remainder of the season our five remaining opponents would be best off to forfeit their games.

Co-captains Harry Repsher (l) and Red Prudhon (r) will lead the Scots' soccer team against Berea this afternoon in the first home game of the season. The third article in the "Introduuction to Soccer" series will be in the next edition of the Echo.

The Shape Of Things To Come

by
Dr. Esther Swenson

The primary reason for the existence of Maryville College is not that it is a church, nor an ethical society, nor a social club, nor even that it provides a safe spot for four years in a world which is rapidly and traumatically changing. Nor does Maryville College exist in order that persons might learn some trade to ply and thereby ensure their economic future. Maryville College exists primarily as an academic community with the exciting possibility of helping to create a new world. An academic community exists by virtue of its vision of the future, not of the past, and by its orientation toward setting persons free to enter into the tensions and struggles of a constantly changing world in a creating freedom.

Opportunity is available

We can ask, "What is the opportunity of the 'student' in such a community? What does it mean to be a member of such a community?" First, it means to receive the opportunity to "understand" the world through the contents of given subject-matter. None of the academic disciplines developed out of or stayed alive in absentia from the changing world, though some are taught as if they had! The student is to receive the opportunity to formulate conceptions by which to grasp the world into which he is going (not the world which is already gone)! Secondly, the student is to receive the opportunity to begin to form a vision of the world-which-might-yet-become, to unite in his own unique patterns sets of values which are live options in his culture and to create forms of values by which the new world might take shape.

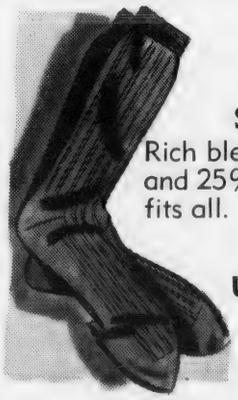
Responsibility is required

We can also ask, "What is the responsibility of the student in such a community?" His responsibility is to ask constantly that these opportunities be given to him. His first concern is not to gripe or complain about social rules, although such rules may need drastic changing. His first concern is not to save his fellow classmates from despair through amateur psychoanalysis and sentimental do-goodism. By his own living encounter with that which we call "subject-matter" he is to seek to secure that the reality of the opportunity for and the right to a new world is granted through him unto all humanity.

All are learners

There are two foci of orientation in the structure of any academic community. The first of these is the world which this artificial community is formed to serve. Without sure knowledge of the nature of that world, the academic community becomes a collectivity, a lumping together of disparate and perhaps desperate people. A college can move from collectivity to community only as it strives together (from the highest administration member to the lowliest student), not to gather facts or knowledge of subject matter, but in and through these attempting to understand the changing world which encompasses us. This act of understanding is in order that each one of us may "stand-under" that changing world with the fulness of his intelligence and the freedom of his creativity. There is no distinction in this area of responsibility and opportunity between teacher and pupil: all are essentially learners.

Creativity is needed



The other focus of orientation is the person who has entered the community in order to understand so that he might "stand-under." The academic structure is formed not only to understand the world but to help a group of people move from this one artificial community into the larger environment as free, creative people. This focus places upon us the responsibility to build an environment in which free, creative, responsible modes of being in the constantly changing world can be emancipated.

Three Years Before the Shaft: Confession of an Overzealous Bibliophile

". . . we had an unusual experience in our college library on Thursday evening, May 21. A number of students decided to go into the library in a group and to remove from a particular section of the shelves five books each." (Letters From My Still)

Funny you should mention that. The great library raid of '64 — I remember it well. Come spring, and a young man's fancy turns to love. Wafted across the campus is the gentle cry of PANTY-RAID. But not at one small institution nestled in the ant hills of the you-know-what mountains. More heinous crimes of passion were in the works here.

". . .students were part of a concerted movement to disrupt the library program for that evening and to strip the shelves bare of all books in one of the academic areas."

The depths of depravity to which these students had fallen were all too soon revealed. A small pilot group, trained in the deadly arts of jujitsu, karate, and the Dewey Decimal System, gained the library in a sweeping rush, and penetrated into the dark reaches of the academic area: section 200. (This was, naturally, disrupting to library procedure, and disturbing to other students—especially couples pursuing the academics in sections one thru sixty-nine.)

". . .to be swept into this thoughtless movement that could so easily have become more serious." Sic

The pattern had been established; the rush was on. Other students, on their way to and from the student center and college farm, were drawn into the festivities. Books, many of which had not see the light of day since they were lovingly set on the shelf by Isaac himself, were recklessly checked out. Dusted off, even. Many students, arriving late, were disappointed in finding their favorites gone; all six copies of Fanny Hill had disappeared. Many had to settle for second best: The Little Golden Book of Pornography finally reached circulation.

". . .to assess three demerits to each person who took part in this incident." (sic, sic, sic)

But justice was swift upon the heads of the guilty. The leaders, last seen bouncing over a speed-break in a dark blue 4½-litre Bentley, series 1933-S4, with the Amherst Villiers superchargers, model number C-31v, had made a successful escape. But retribution fell quicky upon the others. The dread sentence of three demerits struck terror into their hearts. (One unfortunate youth was heard to comment that three demerits for library books could never compare to nine of the same for a week-end's illicit Joy in a motel. Or, at least, checking out the book wasn't one third the fun of the second-mentioned crime.)

". . .to make students stop to think instead of being swept along by irresponsible mass action."

Oh, we'll stop to think next time, all right. In fact, we're thinking right now. Thinking about our three demerits. And, quoth old what's-his-name, "They'll never give demerits to forty people at one time." You bet.

"We are always trying to achieve a better understanding of the problems facing both students and faculty in an effort to make Maryville College a better educational community."

And in your heart you know he's right.

SPECTRE

Friday is Founders - All Scots Day

Friday, October 30 is Founders Day and All Scots Day on the Maryville Campus. Activities of the day include the Founders Day Address at 9:40 a.m. by W. Clement Stone, president of the Combined Insurance Company of America; the Student Banquet for invited alumni and guests at 6:00 p.m.; and the Student Pep Rally at 9:30 p.m.

Mr. Stone, president of one of the top twenty insurance companies of America, is a humanitarian and author of several inspirational books, including The Other Side of the Mind, with co-author Norma Lee Browning; Success Through a Positive Mental Attitude, with co-author Napoleon Hill; and The Success System That Never Fails. He is editor of the magazine, Success Unlimited.

Believing in "PMA" (Positive Mental Attitude), Mr. Stone presents his philosophy through lectures, articles, and self-help books. He is interested in stopping school drop-outs and encourages students to remain in school. He is president of the Chicago Boys Club and is active in church and civic affairs. Also, he is a supporter of the Interlachen Music Camp in Michigan.

Mac Leish's 'J.B.' being produced this weekend at MC

J.B., Archibald MacLeish's powerful drama based on the Book of Job, is being produced this weekend at Maryville College at 8:15 in the Theatre.

Five children play

The role of J.B. is being played by David Evans. Mr. Zuss is being played by David King, and Dale Schellenger is playing Mr. Nickles. David Eby plays The Distant Voice. Mary Gay Boettcher is playing Sarah.

Others in the cast are John Kerr, Douglas Gamble, Pete Park, and Virginia Proffitt. Five children are also part of the cast: Emily and Suzanne Schoen, Sarah and David Edmondson, and David Lyle.

Playhouse consults MacLeish

Considerable care has been taken by the director, Thomas Jones, and the technical personnel to present the play as the author intended in the original script, and MacLeish's ideas have been sought on several points.

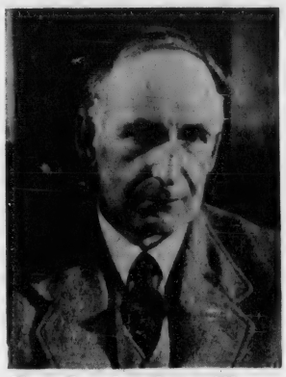
The single setting, which will be used without a stage curtain, consists of three rings: inner, J.B.'s world; middle, Satan's world; and outer, God's world. Lighting and other technical devices will be used to help set the mood and include the audience in the play.

"Electronic music" used

Both the setting and original costumes and makeup will help carry out the extensive symbolism in MacLeish's work. Original organ music by Tom Llewellyn will be used during the introduction, and contemporary "electronic music" is used also.

Human relations conference to be on campus tomorrow

Oscar McCloud, special representative of the United Presbyterian Church as Metz Rollins' successor, and Margie Henderson, a Maryville College student working in Mississippi for a semester, earning $10 a week, will be the leaders of the Human Relations Conference on campus tomorrow.



Seven schools, including the University of Tennessee, Carson Newman, Tennessee Wesleyan, Hiwassee, Knoxville College, Tusculum, and Morristown College are invited. Archie Allen, field secretary for the Southern Student Organizing Committee is also expected to attend. All Maryville students and faculty are encouraged to participate.

Morning discussions begin at 9:30, followed by a special worship service, a barbeque lunch, freedom songs, a speech by the controversial Eugene Carson Blake and more discussion. food and singing.

SC, Echo to hold mock election. VOTE

On Tuesday, October 27, student council in cooperation with THE HIGHLAND ECHO will hold a mock presidential election. All Maryville College students are eligible to vote: there is no age restriction.

Polls will be open after chapel, at Thaw during the morning, at Pearsons before and after lunch, and at Thaw again until 3:30. Results will be announced in the October 31 issue of THE HIGHLAND ECHO.

Noted scientist will lecture Mon. p.m.

Sir Bernard Lovell, director of Britain's Jodrell Bank Observatory, will speak at Maryville College at the first program in the 1964-65 Lecture Series, 8:30 p. m., October 26.

Sir Lovell will speak on the American-Soviet space race. He is the only Western scientist to inspect Russian space facilities within the Soviet Union. He was invited to make the tour of inspection by Mstislav Keldysh, president of the Soviet Union Academy of Sciences.

At the conclusion of his tour, Sir Lovell made headlines by declaring that the U. S. was only racing itself toward the moon, and the Soviet plan was to put a manned space platform into orbit 150 miles above the earth. He also suggested that the U. S. and U. S. S. R. pool their space efforts.

A noted lecturer, Sir Lovell was educated at the University of Bristol and lectured in physics at the University of Manchester and during World War II was involved in tele-communications research.

J. B. and the women are shown in the air raid scene of the MacLeish play, 'J. B.' David Evans has the title role. The play is being produced for the second time this evening, in the Theatre.

Lip service

It seems that we do a lot of reminiscing lately. But we did notice a difference Tuesday night, and we want to talk about it.

Dinner was like any other night's, even though there was an Artists Series program at 8:15. That used to be an Occasion. We either came to dinner dressed up or we did without. There were surely people who grumbled about the trouble they went to, but there was a party feeling in the air.

Tuesday night I noticed only two unusual things: somebody had a corsage at one corner of the table, and somebody sang the Mickey Mouse song. The latter seems to express pretty well the general attitude toward Artists Series. Attendance has been steadily falling as well. It ain't what it used to be. If we didn't know better, we'd say MC was going casual.

Letter To The Editor

Dear Miss Editor:

Please permit me to expand on my colleague's article on "The Shape of Things to Come." The article was thought-provoking and contained many ideas that our college community may well take to heart. However, it presents an incomplete picture of Maryville College's announced purposes. This is especially true of the "negations" and their implications.

The Maryville College purpose is more than that of being "primarily" an academic community. Hundreds of colleges have such a singular purpose — and faculty and students in them pretty well limit themselves to learning and to creative activity. But Maryville's purpose includes the development of the whole person — having a concern for a student's religious life in the church, together with his ethical and social maturation through the years of later adolescence. Evidence abounds from empirical studies indicating the benefits to the individual and to society when the human adolescent is permitted to mature in these years without much necessity or responsibility for earning a living amid the tensions and struggles of economic and political life.

Just glance at the inside cover of the Maryville College bulletin. There is stated Maryville's purpose as adopted by its responsible officers. The inclusive concern in this academic community is clearly evident: "It is the purpose of Maryville College to graduate Christian scholars responsive to God, who are intellectually and socially mature individuals serving their fellowmen." It is within this larger purpose that we at Maryville have the opportunities and responsibilities for creative learning.

Furthermore, Dr. Swenson's assumption that students are in some sense bound — needing to be set free to enter the world — this assumption is foreign to the Maryville purpose. Rather, the "Purpose," admission policies, curriculum, etc., all assume free students in a free society, freely choosing to come to Maryville to associate themselves for a few years with free scholars who have already demonstrated their ability to understand the present in the light of the past and to "stand-under" the changing world with a vision of the "world-which-might-yet-become."

There is a difference between teacher and pupil in the responsibility and opportunity for creative learning — a difference in degree if not in kind. Were such a difference not so, any "student" might well have written "The Shape of Things to Come" (although I cannot imagine it being written by anyone with much less academic preparation than Dr. Swenson). Indeed, were it not for this difference, Dr. Swenson would not, in fact, be justified in calling some people teachers and some pupils — all alike would (in childish and adolescent ignorance) stumble forward in "seeming" creative activity which would repeat many of the tragic blunders of the past.

Merely creative persons creatively living in the present create confusion and have little "emancipation" indeed, except they create toward a purposeful goal in a world which is not only constantly changing, but which is also bound and limited by the creativity and change in past history. Such bounds and limitations are expressed in Maryville's "Purpose" by such words as "Christian" scholars, responsive to "God," "mature" individuals, and "serving fellowmen."

Respectfully,
A. Thomas Horst

Tennessee Politics

by Arthur D. Ainsworth

Tennessee cast its electoral vote for the Republican presidential nominees in 1952, 1956 and 1960. However, it has never sent a Republican to the U. S. Senate and has not elected a Republican governor since 1920. Consequently Tennessee is considered safe by the Democrats this year as far as statewide offices are concerned but questionable as far as the national ticket is concerned. The belief that Tennessee can go either way in regard to the national ticket this year is attested to by the fact that the major campaigners of both parties have come one or more times this fall to Tennessee to campaign.

State is divided

Although Tennessee is solidly Democratic on the state level, East Tennessee is as solidly Republican. Since the post-Civil War period the First and Second Congressional Districts have consistently sent a Republican to Congress. (These two districts embrace upper East Tennessee and middle East Tennessee respectively.) This is explained by the historical differences between East Tennessee and the other two sections of Tennessee — Middle and West Tennessee.

Mountainous East Tennessee has historically been a region of small farmers, which prior to the War Between the States had few slaves. On the other hand West Tennessee and to a lesser extent Middle Tennessee was an area of large plantations, possessing many slaves. During the Civil War, the other two sections of Tennessee went with the Confedence States of America while the eastern part of Tennessee sided with the North. This geographic-economic division has persisted politically down to the present day. West and Middle Tennessee continue to be the stronghold of the Democrats while East Tennessee supports the Republicans. The increasing mobility of the population is slowly changing this situation.

Civil rights not issue

It was felt earlier this year that the civil rights issue would play a major role in Tennessee politics. However, the Democratic state primary on August 6, which chose nominees for the two seats in the U. S. Senate, seemed to disprove this. Ross Bass, the winner of the Democratic nomination for the seat of the late Estes Kefauver, polled more votes than his two opponents combined, even though one of his opponents was the incumbent governor. Bass had voted for the Civil Rights bill both before and after it was amended. Many thought this would be the "kiss of death" for him politically in Tennessee, particularly in West and Middle Tennessee. The vote indicated that the civil rights issue was not and probably is not a major issue in Tennessee, although the large vote for Bass undoubtedly was in part an anti-Clement vote rather than a pro-Bass vote. Moreover, none of the candidates ran as segregationists.

Vote may change

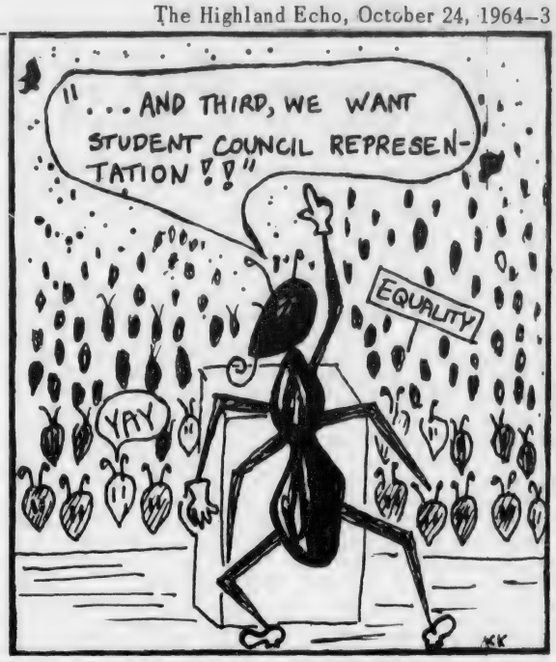
If tradition is followed, and there is no indication that it will not be, Tennessee will again send two liberal Democratic senators to the U. S. Senate and probably three Republicans from East Tennessee to the House of Representatives. Although the other six seats in the House of Representative probably will remain controlled by the Democrats, this is no longer as sure a thing as previously. Tennessee Democrats have long supported Lyndon Johnson in preference to Northern Democrats and will continue to do so this year. The alleged threat to the Tennessee Valley Authority by Barry Goldwater may help to return Tennessee's electoral vote to the Democratic column.

Emory and Berea Top Soccer Team

The Maryville College soccer team has gotten off to one of its poorest starts in recent years, losing its first two games by embarrassing scores. Emory University inflicted the first defeat on the Scots by a score of 8 to 2. In the season's second encounter, the Berea Bears handed the Maryville team an even worse setback, winning 8 to 0.

Emory Notches Early Lead

The Highlanders journeyed to Atlanta, Georgia to meet Emory in the first game of the year. A myriad of missed kicks and poor play in general by the Maryville defensive team gave the Emory squad an almost unbeatable score of 5 to 0 in the first ten minutes of the game. With a comfortable lead, the Georgia school settled back and played defensive soccer to protect their five goal margin.



Shortly before the half the Scots managed to push across a score. The Emory University goalie gambled that he could beat the Maryville line of Adam Deveney, Bill Blackwood, and Ed Clark to the ball. He was bowled over in the rush and Clark pushed the ball into the net to get credit for the goal. In the second half Emory scored three more times. Dave Parrish collected the second Maryville goal when he sent the ball past the goalie on a penalty kick.

Berea Scores After Half

Although the Scots entered their game against Berea with high hopes, their chances for victory were dispelled when the Kentucky school scored six times in the second half to pull away to an 8 to 0 victory. In the first half, right inside Austin Ahanotl scored twice to give the Bears a half time lead that left the Scots within striking distance. However, an offensive and defensive letdown by the Scots in the second half permitted the Berea squad to notch the six goals that cemented the victory.

Improvement Necessary

The soccer season is now almost one-third through and the Scots have shown no signs of becoming a winning team. If they hope to redeem themselves and post a respectable record, much improvement is necessary. The Scots meet the University of Tennessee Soccer Club next Saturday.

Presidential Campaign, 1964: The Issues and the Candidates

by Russell D. Parker

In the heat of the present campaign it is easy to overlook the fact that Lyndon B. Johnson made a bid for the Democratic nomination just four years ago. At that time it was the collective judgment of the journalists, editors, commentators and critics who shape current opinion and of the scholars who write the nation's history that he was simply not presidential timber. He was considered by that element a senatorial wheeler-and-dealer, a concensus-taker who reduced every policy to its lowest denominator and dared not veer from the middle of the road. This would seem to explain, at least in part, why he is currently running scared, notwithstanding the polls show him far ahead.

Goldwater Needs North

Barry Goldwater, the Senator from Arizona, was likewise prominent in the 1960 convention. The warm support extended him by ex-Vice-president Nixon — as opposed to the coldness of some Republican leaders — may be traceable to Goldwater's willingness to step aside on the earlier occasion and campaign vigorously in Nixon's behalf. Goldwater's militancy in the 1964 convention, his circumvention of the "old guard" and his position on issues which tends to embarrass lesser Republican candidates has divided a party which is sectional in the beginning. The South's imposing electoral bloc dictates a Republican sweep in the North to win. General Eisenhower did it twice, but as a national figure.

Johnson Expert Operator

He seems possessed of a desire to prove that he is not just a Texan or Southerner or compromiser or manipulator, but rather a nationalist and internationalist who leads inspiringly a new alignment of Americans. He exhibits in this desire a militancy, faith in the future and open cheerfulness reminiscent of Franklin D. Roosevelt. Although he lacks suavity, it is quite possible that as a political operator Johnson surpasses even his expert model.

With the calm and good humor of a professor on the lecture platform Senator Goldwater has voiced the most violent charges against his opponent heard in modern Presidential politics. Prosperity has deprived him of most of the familiar pocketbook issues. He majors on the sad state of American liberties, morals and law and order; he seems to possess a genius for picking debatable subjects and spends much time defending himself against Democratic charges that he is "trigger-happy" and wants to disrupt Social Security — and, in the South, TVA.

Race Concern Declines

Whether Goldwater has profited from the "white backlash" against the Negro rights movement is problematical. The most recent Gallup poll indicates a marked decline in concern regarding race relations since early August. The latest survey rates American concern as follows:

International problems	46%
Racial problems	35
High cost of living	6
Unemployment	4
Too much government control	4
Other problems	17

(Total exceeds 100% because some persons named more than one problem).

The same poll, to the query as to which party might better deal with these problems, reports these findings:

Democrats	49%
Republicans	23
No difference	19
No opinion	9

The latest preference poll (Gallup) shows:

Johnson	64%
Undecided	7

That both camps are dubious of the reliability of polls — their infallibility was strikingly revealed most recently in Truman's 1948 victory — is evidenced by their feverish activity in registering voters to insure against apathy and the strong appeal being made to the "independents." Not to be discounted is the effect of last-minute events. These seem to be piling up with unprecedented intensity, loaded with political implications, and may well produce surprises in November.

Monroe Paces Rally as Scots Win Fourth

The Maryville College football team made a brilliant fourth quarter comeback to defeat the Livingston State Tigers by a score of 31 to 22 in a game played last Saturday. The difference in the game was Benny Monroe. The senior quarterback from Athens, Tennessee is playing up to his fullest potential and must be considered a definite Little All-American candidate. In the game against Livingston State Monroe personally accounted for 13 points, booting four extra points, a thirty-five yard field goal and running nine yards for a touchdown. In addition Monroe threw two touchdown passes, a 31 yard pass and run play to Roland McClanahan and a 32 yard toss to Sonny Webb.

Long Passes Pace Scots

Maryville moved to its first touchdown after receiving the opening kick-off. Monroe called for a screen pass and hit Roland McClanahan in the flat with three blockers in front of him and McClanahan carried the pass 31 yards into the end zone. Monroe added the extra point and the Scots had a 7 to 0 lead.

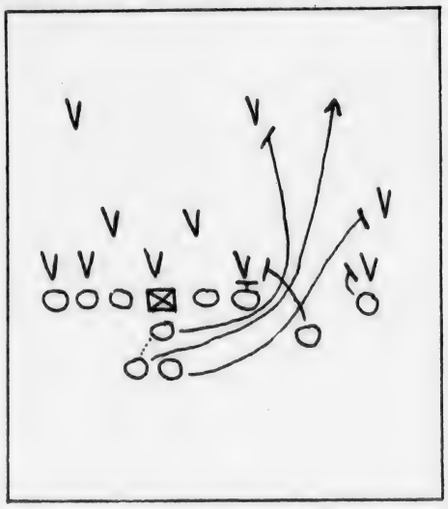
In the second quarter the Scots scored again. Again it was a pass play. This time, however, McClanahan did the passing. Monroe swept around left end and then lateralled back to McClanahan. The senior halfback spiraled a long pass downfield toward Mike Dalton who was running even with the two defensive backs. At the proper moment Dalton accelerated, grabbed the pass and raced into the end zone, leaving the defenders far behind. The play covered a total of 60 yards. Monroe again booted the ball between the uprights and the Scots had a 14 to 0 lead. However, the Tigers from Alabama also picked up a touchdown in the second quarter. The extra point attempt failed and Maryville left the field at half time with a 14 to 6 lead.

Interior Line Excels

In fairness to the Tigers of Livingston State, the game was far closer than the final score revealed. Perhaps the truest indication of the equality of the two teams was the statistics. Both teams picked up 19 first downs. Maryville had a total offense of 346 yards and Livingston State gained 344. Each team completed 11 passes; the Scots attempted 24 and the Tigers 21. The Maryville victory was a tribute to the desire of their interior line. Outweighted almost 25 pounds per man, ends Sonny Webb and Mike Dalton, tackles Bill Napier and Jim Pryor, guards Clint Abbott, Charles Berry, and Frank Eggers, and center Don Story did an excellent job of containing their significantly larger opponents.

Scots Met Guilford

Today the Highlanders are on the road, meeting Guilford College of North Carolina. During the 1963 season, the Scots defeated the Guilford squad twice. Coach Howard Tomlinson and his able staff of Lauren Kardatzke and Wilbur Ramsey will lead their Maryville team in hopes of notching their fifth victory of the year.



Monroe Leads Comeback

Maryville came back from the break and moved to their third touchdown. A 32 yard pass from Benny Monroe found Sonny Webb racing across the end zone. With the addition of the extra point on a Monroe conversion, the Highlanders appeared to be the possessors of a comfortable margin. However, the Livingston State squad unleashed a powerful attack that netted two touchdowns and 15 points. The splurge put Maryville behind by a score of 22 to 21, the first time that the Highlanders have trailed this season. The Alabamians took full advantage of their great size advantage and held the Scots scoreless, repelling a field goal attempt by Monroe. With five minutes left in the game, the Tigers still held tenaciously to their narrow margin. After the Livingston State squad had halted a Maryville attempt for a first down, Benny Monroe stepped back to the thirty-five yard line and booted a floating kick that cleared the cross bar by inches. The field goal pushed the Scots past tne Tigers 24 to 22. The Alabama school took the kick-off and began to drive for the Maryville goal. The defensive line of the Scots, however, were too tough and Livingston State was forced to relinquish the ball. The Scots with Monroe at the helm moved steadily down the field on a devastating ground attack that not only ate up a sizable portion of the remaining time, but also resulted in a touchdown that put the game hopelessly beyond the reach of the visitors from Alabama. The final thrust in the drive was a nine yard run by Monroe for the touchdown.

In the foreground of the above photograph is Scot Roland McClanahan, number 40, shown as he is making an off-tackle play in the first half time. The Scots defeated Livingston State, 31-22 last Saturday night.

Football: The Power Play

One of the basic plays in the offensive system of the Maryville football team is the power play. The play is used when short yardage is needed. In the play diagrammed above, Benny Monroe receives the pass from center and laterals immediately to his halfback Roland McClanahan. Monroe then leads the interference. The key blocking assignments are handled by the tackle, the end, the slotback, the fullback, and the quarterback. The tackle and the end must take the defensive tackle out of the play. The tackle halts his penetration and the slotback blasts him out of the hole. The end is responsible for taking the defensive end out of the play. The fullback removes the corner back, and the quarterback hits the defensive safety.

Baird Sends Cagers Through First Drills

The Maryville College basketball team under the direction of Coach Boydson Baird began practice for their 1964-1965 season last week. Coach Baird welcomed a squad of 23 men to the first practice — six veterans and 17 newcomers.

A major change in the organization of the athletic department last year released Baird from his duties as head football coach, allowing him to spend more time in improving the basketball squad. One of the innovations that Baird has added this year is a weight training program. The players go through a series of knee-bends and toe raises with the weights on their shoulders in an attempt to improve their jumping ability. In the early practices Coach Baird has been sending his squad through drills designed to improve their defensive play.

Prohibition and Practicality

"The possession or use of alcoholic beverages by students is forbidden."

Much discussion has been heard recently about how many students follow this commandment. And such discussion has been slightly disturbing to those who have looked at the situation honestly. Last year's Drinking Committee suggested that there were about 150 "drinkers" on campus. Many have termed this estimate "conservative."

Besides the actual number of drinkers is the disturbing fact that a majority of Maryville's students tolerate this insidious practice in their fellows. This fact has tended to make the commandment unenforceable.

And there is a question — in administrative as well as student minds — as to whether strict enforcement would be wise. One discussion group at Student Council's retreat discovered that half of their number would be in school somewhere else if the commandment had been enforced. Assuming that council members are sensible students, with a sense of civic and moral duty, one might wonder at this contradiction of the "law."

One of the most interesting and perhaps most obvious conclusions coming from Council's retreat was the statement that "a majority of Maryville students fail to support" the commandment on alcohol By support, council members meant compliance on two levels:

1) individual: many students obviously cannot support the commandment because they drink.
2) community: most students fail to police the "law" in community not because they necessarily drink but because they feel the college has overstepped her rights in the statement of her regulations.

In passing I'd like to point out two facts which are apparent to me:

1) Consumpion of alcohol is not morally wrong in itself — it is the use one makes of alcohol that determines its morality. This was a conclusion of last year's Drinking Committee and is repeated in the report from Council's retreat.
2) A vast majority — very close to 100% — of the student body grant the

KKK Comes to Maryville

The Ku Klux Klan, in protest to the invitation by Maryville College and Union of Presbytery to Eugene Carson Blake to speak here, "invaded" the Maryville campus Sunday a short while befor the 3 p.m. address.

The Klan members stationed themselves at the various entrances to the campus and handed out literature supposedly revealing Dr. Blake's Communistic activities. The Klansmen were dressed in robes and would talk some with students who asked them questions. There was no violence.

Dr. Copeland comments

Dr. Joseph J. Copeland, Maryville President, commented briefly in chapel on Tuesday and commended the behavior of the Klan, students, and visitors, and added, "Even the faculty behaved themselves."

Dr. Copeland stated that the Klan had the right to make the peaceful protest. He did not comment on the cross burning at Morningside on Saturday night.

Mistaken identity

Students and visitors flocked to see the Klansmen. It was rumored later that they were not recognized as the KKK by some, who called from their cars, "Trick or Treat," and "Hi, Santa."

Shown are Maryville College students talking with a member of the Ku Klux Klan. The Klansmen were on campus Sunday, October 25, in protest of Dr. Eugene Carson Blake's speaking at the Union Presbytery meeting. They passed out literature pointing out Dr. Blake's supposedly Communistic activities.

Johnson and Humphrey win in mock election

The Johnson-Humphrey ticket won out over the Goldwater-Miller ticket 369 to 202 in the mock presidential election held Tuesday, October 27. Johnson and Humphrey carried every class, as well as the faculty.

The closest classes were the freshman and juniors, both voting 62% for Johnson-Humphrey and 38% for Goldwater-Miller. The sophomores voted 66% for Johnson-Humphrey, the seniors and the faculty, 68% each for this ticket.

Of an estimated 800 students and 85 faculty members, a total of 589 voted. This is 66%.

There were several write-in votes: 13 for Henry Cabot Lodge; two for Lester Maddox; four for Richard Nixon; two for Nelson Rockefeller; two for George Romney; four for George Wallace.

Nixon - Lodge — Who's She?

Lip service

At a local drugstore one morning this week we heard, from an older man to several obviously younger ones, "You'd better enjoy your freedom while you can, because pretty soon you aren't going to have any."

We thought, probably because we are female, that he was referring to "male freedom." Then there were a few words inaudible, and then ". . . Maryville College . . ." and then someone said, "What we need around here is some more like the John Birch Society." At that point, being turned off, we tuned out.

And even having been raised a conservative East Tennessean and an even more conservative Presbyterian, we couldn't believe it.

We couldn't quite believe the KKK either (the men didn't mention them), but there they were on Sunday, competing with the fall leaves and the Baltimore-Detroit game. They did cause quite a stir, regardless of behavior (we think Dr. Copeland was a little free with the laurels).

There's something that causes us to disapprove immediately of the KKK. But on Sunday they weren't even masked, and so what could have been drama (for those of us who hunger for it) was disappointing. We are glad that there was no trouble.

Let's see, today's a holiday. We fold our hands in reverent gratitude to our MC fathers. We are not grateful for the added half hours received Thursday, Friday, Monday, and Tuesday. By way of rumor, popular around here, we heard that the decision to dock the credit was made only after a "fight." Verbal. We know why it's being done. We just don't like it. Oh well (which is not our usual attitude—only when we've worked ourselves into a corner in an editorial and don't know any other way out).

And now, as a friend used to say, I gotta go out and scare up a reader.

NELSON-NEAL

by David Conklin

If style is making a difficult task appear simple, the sparse crowd which attended the performance of the Nelson and Neal piano duo witnessed music in the finest style. With near-effortlessness and a high degree of unity and feeling between the artists, this Australian-American team relaxed and captivated the audience with their interpretations of Mendelssohn and Brahms.

One of the specialties of Nelson and Neal is Brahms, and their program made use of the composer's diversity. From waltzes and serenades to Hungarian dances and the scintillating Variations on a Theme by Haydn, the somewhat lost art of four-hand pianism was revived.

The opening Midsummer Night's Dream of Mendelssohn and the encore, Shostakovich's Concertini and Run Run of Octavio Pinto, were given no less credit in performance.

It is unfortunate that more people did not attend this first Artists Series program, which brought truly fine talent to the campus. Such art is rarely included in today's way of life.

A straw vote only shows which way the hot air blows.

PROPHET

by David Powell

There are times in the affairs of the world when men of a single mind frustrate even the patience of eternity.

The god of apathy reigned. He wore a shabby cloak, a tarnished crown, and he discounted the existence of all the other gods. To his subjects nothing was important except nothing. Confusion could not germinate for there was not the soil of Concern. Hate could not breed because it knew not its partner Love. Lust had been smothered in a pillow of Lethargy. But do not think for once that the town he ruled was stagnant. Indeed it was merely dormant.

"Fear not," said the voice, "for I created you and your father before you and his father also. I have loved you and led you to this time."

The man fell to his knees.

"Behold, in a certain place my people suffer in the bonds of apathy. You must go there and deliver them from this selfish master."

"But if I go there," replied the man, "they will laugh at me and beat me and call me foolish."

"For many years you have followed me unseen, how much more so must you obey and follow me even now that I am revealed to you. Lift up your heart to me and be not afraid. I will teach you what to say. You will be safe, for I am with you."

The faithful man rose with a light heart and proceeded along the way.

In time he reached the center of a town and seeing no one in the streets (for the towns people were wont to remain indoors rather than to suffer in contacts with each other) he cried out in a loud voice, "Come to me, for your laziness is to perish. You shall have compassion and concern for one another. Bring your empty hearts for I have love to fill them abundantly."

At first only a small group of men gathered, but as the words continued to flow as from an unseen power, more and more of the townspeople congealed around him. When a very large group was at hand, he paused. The faces surrounding him wore the blank stares of dead man. His heart faltered for but a second and then he cried, "You are trapped men who have become as caged animals, nay as blind grass which must bend to the whims of the wind. You are a selfish and spineless people."

A young man in the midst replied, "And you are a fool. What do you know but a handful of ancient sayings that do naught but pound dust into our ears."

The crowd opened to let the young man through. When he reached the place where the faithful man stood he said, "Dust is the issue of decay," and he spat on the ground between them.

In a single wave the entire town was upon the stranger. They beat him with their fists and clubbed him with their arms and kicked him. They tore at his hair and clothes. They pressed about him long after he was dead. They scratched and clawed him, and when his body fell they tred on it and pounded it so that nothing remained but the powder of bones and sinew.

Then the people went back to their houses.

In the heavens there was silence.

In the street a small qust of wind whirled slowly — scattering the dust of the earth and the dust of a man with equal indifference.

Letter To The Editor

Dear Editor,

There are many things for which we can be proud of Maryville College. For quality education at popular prices, it's hard to beat anywhere. And, in the area of human relations we are a leader among southern colleges. For these and other aspects of the Maryville College program, we owe our professors and administrators a vote of confidence.

Yet, though we have come a long way, there is still room for progress; and I think Mr. Thomas Horst's letter to the editor points to an area where our strides have been perhaps not long enough or perhaps in the wrong direction.

In his discussion of our announced purpose, our difficulties lie gleaming. That is, the way in which to "produce Christian scholars responsive to God, who are intellectually and socially mature individuals serving their fellowmen." To me, our methods seem insufficient and seem to stem from a concept of man and the universe which could graduate truly Christian scholars only by accident.

True, we must be bound in order to be free; but there is a danger in completely encasing young people in a sheath of rules and restrictions that tend to make their decisions for them. In the cold, cruel, chancy world, outside the warm protective walls of Maryville, the student must be able to make his own decisions and plot his own course. And the extension of parental protection by the college does not help him prepare for the increased responsibility of adulthood.

In answer to student pleas for progress in this area all we hear is "You pay your money and take your chances" and "You signed the pledge and knew what you were getting into" which are hardly legitimate reasons for stagnation in an era of change. The mere fact that no one forced us to come to Maryville is no excuse for a blanket refusal to admit the fact of twentieth century man.

Students mumble about specific instances relating to the general position taken by the college, but failure to recognize the administration as a body devoted to the student's welfare, and the fear of reprisal (either academic or disciplinary) seem to have silenced the voice of student public opinion on these issues.

The faculty and administration have a definite stance which they have stated and have the courage to defend, although I personally feel that it is sometimes at variance with their announced purpose, and it is up to the student to make them aware of his feelings and thoughts if he is to expect any action. We are dealing with people and in order to be understood, we must understand.

In conclusion, let me say that I think the Maryville announced purpose is a noble one. But in light of the thought and policy employed to make this dream a reality I think it is unrealistic. This is a century of change and it ought to be the aim of an academic institution to turn out graduates ready to take their places in the mainstream, imbued with a realistic sense of Christian responsibility, and filled with the spirit of Christian love. For it is love that gave the early church its dynamic strength, and one learns to love only by being loved, not by the edict of arbitrary authority. Thank you.

Sincerely,
Norman Cleesattel

Dear Editor:

I have just received the College bulletin noting the death of Coach Honaker. He was my friend, coach and one of the finest fellows I've ever known. Thirty-two years ago he came through South Texas with his assistant, Bob Thrower, who was from my home ton. They were on their way to the Olympics in Los Angeles. That fall three of us from this South Texas city, Archie Peiper, Wilbur Loessbery and myself were enrolled at Maryville and graduated in 1936.

Since leaving Maryville I feel that Lombe Scott Honaker has had a hand in any good thing that has happened to me.

Sincerely,
O'Neal Gray, D. D. S.

THE PLAY

by David Clinkman

The total effect of J. B. was expressed partly in the cry of anguish on which Mary Gay Boettcher impaled the audience during act two. And partly by the six hags. And partly by the sprig of forsythia and the lantern which ended act three.

Miss Boettcher, as Sarah, the wife of Job, gave the best performance that she has ever given upon the MC stage. Her transformation of Sarah from the worried wife to the defeated woman to the Elihu of Job XXXII & ff. was interestingly accomplished and was marred only by a somewhat whining inflection with which she infuses her sympathetic lines. But during her performace in the hysterical scenes of act two she held the audience totally within the palm of her hand.

Dale Schellenger captured all the hate and bitterness which Nickles had against God and hurled it at him in constant salvos. Unfortunately, Mr. Schellenger has certain professional idiosyncrasies in his walk, his facial expressions, and his carriage which reminded me very much of John Proctor. In any case, the bitterness he showed did much to cover this up. His opposite, Mr. Zuss, was played by Dave King, who appeared to feel ill at ease in his part, except for a few lines in act three, just after Nickles' defeat. As an actor, though, Mr. King has matured since he played in Teahouse, last year.

Among the more minor characters, Virginia Wells (Mrs. Murphy) stood out prominently. She played one of the six seething wretches who scratched and clawed at David Evans during the central portion of the play. Her lines were packed with hate, her projection was powerful, and an odd accent here was easily overlooked. Rebecca Smith (Miss Mabel) also did well in this respect. John Boretsky often did admirably as the first Messenger, and Robert Shultz (who was also stage manager, a student assistant, and a member of the stage crew) conveyed well the part of a pious snob, who, steeped in theological theory, was completely out of touch with the man he was supposed to be comforting. This portrayal was so good that it reminded me of several people I know.

Thomas Jones' direction and set designing, in the main, was highly creditable, but allowing Zuss to sound the cymbal seemed somewhat inappropriate, and the Christian quasi-stained glass window also seemed out of place. His upstage backdrop, however, was used very effectively, and his direction of the hags and (in general) the hysterical scenes was piercing.

But the evening unquestionably belonged to Mr. Evans. I have seen him play several times (many of these opposite Miss Boettcher) but never has he done so well as he did in this performance, and only the contradictory table grace with which he opened his lines detracted from an otherwise superlative performance. His performances of similar characters in Look Homeward, Angel and The Tempest were more than adequate, but as J.B. he played a man more than twice his own age so convincingly that it was difficult to believe that he was the same actor that I had seen before. Mr. Evans will doubtless go down in the annals of the MC theatre as one of the best actors the college has produced.

All the other actors did at least creditably in their parts. Thomas Llewellyn's original music and Mr. Jones' amalgamation of other musical sources was very effective. Mr. Evans' summation, "We can never know!" served fittingly to end the evening with the small flame of a simple lantern burning wisely in the middle of a deserted stage.

As alumnists eagerly return to Maryville to see old friends and teachers and to laugh at present students, they must certainly be impressed with the constantly changing regulations.

In an effort to inform the alumnists of the magnitude of these changes, the Impartial Observer, through much conscientious research, has compiled this list of changes and the graduating class which would be most impressed with them.

The Ties That Bind

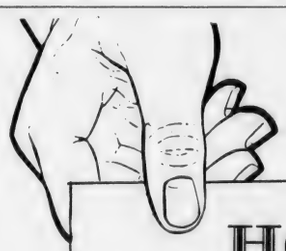
by Mike Moyers

Much is heard of the "apathy" of today's college students. And the accuracy of such a description can be seen in the passivity of the college student toward this year's presidential race. Other areas too — the Peace Corps, the racial situation — which should stimulate the student to thought and action have left him mute, or at least very quiet.

From Professor Nevitt Sanford of the Institute for the Study of Human Relations comes a clear statement and several attempts at explanation. Despite the need to generalize in an article of this sort, Mr. Sanford provides some thought provoking material.

He describes many students as almost fervently "apolitical and asocial." Unlike the student of years past, who "showed social concern by vehemently criticizing existing institutions within society, the new type (of student) rejects society in toto."

Several of the factors which produced this altered outlook follow. My apologies to Professor Sanford for the editing:



College environment: "Here a host of requirements and exams all too often induce the undergraduate to "think small." to concentrate on clearing each hurdle in the academic obstacle race. rather than thinking widely and imaginatively about the world around him.

"If he resists the system. to whom can he make complaint? We professors frequently are inaccessible to the student, and even more frequently are content to merely fill the student full of professional know-how. At the same time, we decry the absence of creative enterprise among students — as if the absence weren't our fault."

Social factors: "When a college student looks at the vast impersonal processes of our society and humbly asks himself where he can fit in, he is not simply being a conformist. Perhaps he is also being realistic. Perhaps he sees that we live in a society which organizes intelligence ever more closely — a society where opportunities for individual initiative or for the exercise of talent on one's own terms have actually decreased."

The Cold War: "The climate of the Cold War is one of rigidity, a state in which people feel they must not move lest something snap. Students, at any rate, tend to see present arrangements in

Linginfelter, Slagle Pace Scots' Victory

H. H. Linginfelter, playing for the injured Benny Monroe, started his first game of the year and directed the Maryville College offense brilliantly to lead his squad past a determined Guilford team by a score of 19 to 17 in a game played last week on Guilford's field in North Carolina.

Linginfelter completed 9 of 11 passes for 190 yards and two touchdowns. His outstanding performance was not unexpected. The feats of Little All-American candidate Benny Monroe have tended to obscure the fact that Linginfelter is an outstanding quarterback in his own right. Monroe, who is nursing a bruised knee, was available for action if given the call. However, Maryville coach Howard Tomlinson decided to give Monroe an extra week of rest and placed the quarterbacking responsibilities on Linginfelter.

The winner of the Amos Alonzo Stagg Award in the game against Guilford was H. H. Linginfelter. The senior quarterback took over the reins of the team during the injury caused absence of Benny Monroe. Linginfelter called a fine tactical game and completed 9 of 11 passes for two touchdowns.

All the heroics were not Linginfelter's, however. Senior fullback Jeff Slagle earned a share of the spotlight. As has happened frequently in recent weeks, the Scots were forced to come from behind to notch their victory. The North Carolina school built up a 17 to 13 halftime lead. In the third quarter Slagle broke loose on a 20 yard touchdown jaunt that wiped out the Guilford lead and provided the decisive margin in the game.

Guilford scored early in the first quarter. Scot halfback Archie Anderson fumbled the opening kickoff and the Quakers recovered on approximately the 35 yard line. Quarterback Jimmy Williams carried over from the 10 yard line for the touchdown. Williams scored again in the second quarter. This time he went over from the three yard line. Hal Vanderson rounded out the Guilford scoring by adding two extra points and a 28 yard field goal.

Defense Halts Guilford

Maryville's touchdowns in the first half were the results of the passing ability of H. H. Linginfelter. In the first quarter, Linginfelter hit speedy Mike Dalton with a 30 yard touchdown pass. Archie Anderson was the target of Linginfelter's second scoring pass. The play covered 35 yards. This concluded the scoring for the first half and set the stage for Slagle's second half heroics.

After Slagle's touchdown dash in the third quarter, the Quakers tried desperately to get close enough to kick a field goal. In the fourth quarter Vantland attempted a 38 yarder, but it fell far short. Late in the closing minutes of the game, the Scots almost scored a clinching touchdown. Deep in their own territory, the Quakers failed to gain the necessary yardage on a fourth down situation and were forced to relinquish the ball to the Scots on the 8 yard line. However, the Highlanders were unable to score, and the defensive team was forced to hold off one final effort on the part of Guilford.

McClanahan Injured

The victory was Maryville's fifth straight win this season. However, the Scots suffered an important loss in the game. Halfback Roland McClanahan, the Scots' leading ground gainer, received a broken leg while he was returning a kickoff. The injury will prevent the hard-nosed halfback from seeing any more action this season. Because he is a senior, the Guilford game marked the close of his collegiate career. In honor of his contributions to the squad this season, his teammates awarded him the game ball.

This afternoon marks the Scots' Homecoming game. Their opponent will be Millsaps College. The Highlanders are hoping to push their season's record to 6 victories and 0 defeats.

An Introduction to Soccer

A frequent criterion for the pre-season evaluation of the potential of a team is the number of returning lettermen. When this criterion is applied to the Maryville College soccer team, it shows that the prospects for the 1964 season are bright. Of the eleven starters on last year's squad, all but two are returning. To augment this nucleus of veterans, several impressive newcomers have appeared who will add depth to certain positions, a luxury the soccer team has never enjoyed before.

The entire starting line, the heart offensive activities, is returning from last year's team. At center forward is Adam Deveney. Deveney, a co-captain and the team's leading scorer in 1963, is again counted to be a top scorer. Competition is keenest at the inside position where Jim Allsman, Billy Evaul, and Dave Parrish are all battling for a starting berth. Parrish, a freshman, is a good ball handler who kicks well with either foot. He is an accurate as well as a strong kicker and handles the responsibility of taking penalty for the Scots. Evaul and Allsman are neck and neck at the other spot. Evaul is small, relies on his fancy dribbling, his speed, and his hustle to gain an edge over his opponents. However, he must overcome a tendency to dribble when he ought to pass the ball. Allsman is the antithesis of Paul. He is big and strong. Although he looks Eraul's finesse. his strength, his desire, and his strong foot make him a valuable scorer in front of the goal mouth. At present, Evaul is rated slightly ahead of Allsman and holds the starting berth. Jim Bernard and Jim Symington also see action at the inside slot. The two starting wings from the 1963 squad are both back. They are Phil Jerome and Sonny Hughes. Hughes holds down the right wing position. Hughes' major asset is his strong foot. Weather shooting for the goal or passing the ball in front of the goal mouth, Hughes has much power. On the left wing is Phil Jerome, a three year veteran. In the past Jerome has been known for his speed and endurance. However, this year Jerome is overweight and out of condition. A leg injury early in the preseason practice schedule has prevented the senior wing from reaching his previous form. Pushing Jerome is freshman Bill Blackwood. Blackwood is a hard working performer who will make Jerome work hard to retain his starting status.

At halfbacks, the Scots have their two co-captains—Red Prudhon and Harry Repsher. Prudhon is perhaps the most valuable performer on the team. The fact that he will be serving as co-captain for the third consecutive year is a tribute to the respect that is afforded him by his teammates. Prudhon holds the all important center halfback position, and directs both offensive and defensive maneuvers. On the right of Prudhon is Harry Repsher. Repsher is also held in high esteem by his teammates. He was a co-captain two years ago. Repsher's fortes are his defensive play and his versatility. Last year, Repsher almost single handedly stifled Berea's great inside and wing team—George and Henry Woo. During his tenure at Maryville, Repsher has seen duty at left inside, center halfback, right halfback, and at fullback. His abilitiy to play several positions well is a major asset to the team. The left halfback position has several contenders, chief of whom are Bob Dunsmore and Bob Coates. Dunsmore plays the spot with enthusiasm and drive. His play has improved steadily through the season, and he promises to be a first rate performer. He holds the edge over Coates.

The last three positions—the two fullbacks and the goalies are the most important members of the defensive unit. Unfortunately, it was from these positions that the Highlanders lost two lettermen, fullback John DeRan and goalie Bob Mullins. DeRan was a strong dependable fullback. He rarely made mistakes, and he and Dave Taylor made an outstanding team. Bob Mullins one of the finest goalies in the entire South last year. Before transferring to Maryvlle, he was the goalie on one of the best teams in the nation. His experience and great determination were the difference in many of the Scots' victories last year. This year one of the fullbacks spots is being played by Dave "Peacock" Taylor. The tall thin Taylor has a powerful foot and is a mainstay in the backfield. The other fullback spot is being filled by PeeWee Tongyai. Tongyai lacks the consistency to be a first rate fullback. At that all important position, every kick must be made firmly

Maryville Loses in Soccer; St. Bernard Triumphs 3-2

The Maryville College soccer team suffered its third consecutive defeat last Wednesday when it was beaten 3 to 2 by St. Bernard College in Alabama.

The game was divided into two distinct periods. The first half, and the first quarter in particular, was marked by a wild outbreak of goals that saw the lead see-saw back and forth four times. The second half of the contest was a defensive struggle in which neither team could collect a goal.

The Saints of St. Bernard were the first to store. Early in the game they were awarded a direct kick from approximately 35 yards out. Jim Andreson, their tall center halfback, sent a high, long kick toward the Maryville net. Don Elly, the Scots' goalie, either lost the ball in the lights or misjudged its course, thinking it would sail over the top of the goal, and the ball flew unheeded into the goal. Maryville came back quickly to tie the score. Minutes after the St. Bernard score the Scots' right wing Sonny Hughes outran the Saints' goalie to the loose soccer ball and sent a shot into the nets.

The tie was short-lived, however. Mike Adas, the right inside of the Saints, was able to connect with the ball during a scramble in front of the Maryville goal to send his team out in front of the Scots again. As had happened on the previous occassion, the Highlanders quickly knotted the score with another goal. Sonny Hughes sent a cross, a pass across the goal mouth, past the goal. It eluded the Maryville linemen. Left wing Phil Jerome picked up the pass on the other side of the net and sent the ball back into the middle of the fray of players. This time Jim Bernard was waiting, and he smashed the ball past the St. Bernard goalie.

It was early in the second quarter that the St. Bernard squad picked up their third, and what proved to be decisive, goal. Again it was Mike Adas who did the scoring for the Saints. He received a pass from his right wing and sent a shot past the Maryville goalie from 15 yards away. The Maryville forces pushed to get the equalizer, but were not able to get the ball into the net.

Although the defeat was the third for the soccer team this season, Dr. Robert Young, the team's acting coach, could find several reasons for optimism. The Highlander squad showed much improvement over their opening contests. The first two games saw the Scots go down to humiliating defeat. Against St. Bernard, however, the Highlanders were never more than a goal away from the lead and were battling for a tie when the final gun sounded.

A second cause for optimism among the Scot team was the fact that their good showing was made against a team which has not been beaten this year. Furthermore, the Maryville team entered the game without the services of two of their starting players. Bill Blackwood and Adam Deveney did not make the trip. They were replaced by Jim Bernard and Jim Allsman.

and accurately. A missed kick is inexcusable. It is possible that Tongyai will be returned to his halfback position and Harry Repsher will be moved back into the fullback spot. To replace Mullins, the Scots are relying on freshman Ed Clark. Clark saw experience at goalie in high school. It is hoped that he will be able to handle the duties.

The Maryville soccer team lacks the resources that many of their opponents boast. Futhermore, the Scots field a primarily American roster while many of the teams they meet have a primarily foreign personnel. The success that Maryville has enjoyed in the past, although limited, has been due to a strong defensive unit and a determined line that scores through desire rather than finese. This year, the defense is as weak as it has been in the past four seasons. The line, although strengthened, still relies primarily on power. If the Scots hope to have a successful season, the line is going to have to become a more potent force and the fullbacks and defense must become a much more reliable and consistent unit.

Football: Defensive Statistics

Few football fans are aware that statistics on the play of the individual members of the defensive unit are kept. The average football fan is accustomed to reading reports of the rushing and passing yardage gained by the halfbacks, quarterbacks, ends, and fullbacks. He rarely sees defensive statistics, however. At Maryville records on the play of the members of the defensive team, compiled from the films of the game, are divided into two categories: initial contacts and secondary contacts made by pursuit.

The chart below shows the defensive statistics of the Scots in their games against Centre, Georgetown, and Emory & Henry. Two points are awarded for initial contact and one is granted for secondary tackling by pursuit.

On this basis Mike White is Maryville's leading defensive player after the first three contests. White's leading total of 66 points was greatly enhanced during the game with Emory & Henry when he combined 9 initial contacts with 11 pursuit tackles for 29 points. Although nothing can detract from the fact that White is an excellent defensive back, it must be admitted that his position as safety offers him the opportunity as well as the responsibility for many tackles.

Among the linemen co-captain Clint Abbott is the leader with 56 points. Behind Abbott are two linebackers, defensive captain Don Story and Ray Eaton. The linebacking position is another slot that provides the opportunity for tackles.

However, it is true that statistics do not always tell the whole truth, especially in the case of a standout defensive lineman. The opposition, realizing the ability of the man, will tend to run their plays away from his area.

our society as likely to persist indefinitely, provided we are not all exterminated.

"One does not hear much intellectual discussion on campus for the simple reason that there is not very much to discuss. For the time being, we are in the cultural and intellectual doldrums. This I would set down as a major source of the current student lethargy. Not only are they not inspired by the scholarship in which their teachers willy-nilly participate; they are put to sleep by it."

It is an arduous path from stagnancy to creativity, from apathy to involvement — a path tragically made more difficult by much of our educational process. Man today seems strangely "bound" by the various aspects of his culture.

college the right to ban alcohol on the Maryville campus.

With the danger of arriving at too simple a conclusion, I'd like to point out that the two facts above suggest a logical solution: legalized drinking, off campus, for students who meet Tennessee's minimum age requirements.

There is a question as to whether students would support even this altered situation. The convenience of drinking in your room and the number of underage drinkers would hamper student support. But an alteration legalizing off campus beer would give student organizations a bit sounder basis. Your organs of student government would not be charged with support of a principle in which they do not believe, but would have the responsibility of keeping in our dorms an atmosphere conductive to study and|or sleep. There's quite a difference here.

While we are waiting on this amended commandment, might I offer a few ideas on present enforcement. In the first place, I suggest that the consumption of alcohol is considered wrong in itself in many areas of Anderson Hall. This assumption of moral guilt seems to be a numerical fact on Discipline Committee where demerits are meted out not for degrees of disturbance or intoxication, but simply for consumption. Students, almost without exception, fail to see the issue quite as clearly. I believe, as many students do, that the evil of alcohol for Maryville is to be found in the disruption of academics, either for the individual involved or for the community. Until we change our attitude here, we will continue to sacrifice our educational aims for those of a temperance union. I wonder which is the most realistic, and most important.

Overheard as a faculty member came out of the Founders Day service: "Senator Gore has been outdone." Everyone who has spoken on this campus in several years may have been outdone. Not since the Class of '65 has been here has a speaker so strongly affected students, staff, faculty, and administration. It seemed as if W. Clement Stone and Maryville College stood at opposite ends, partly in principle and partly in application. And it was Founders Day.

No one would deny Mr. Stone the right to speak about what he believes. But it is questionable whether what Mr. Stone believes is a suitable topic for an academic community, particularly under these conditions. He would have been suitable for Lecture Series. Would Richard Armour have been suitable for Founders Day?

The fault lay not with Mr. Stone, but with the persons who arranged for him to speak to such a captive audience.

One - tenth MC students sign for reading course

Enrolled in the course for reading improvement, taught by Robert Rose of The Reading Laboratories, Inc., Philadelphia, New York, and Princeton, are 83 students or ten per cent of the Maryville College student body. This percentage is far higher than the one to two per cent in other schools where Mr. Rose has worked.

Four faculty members, including the Dean of Men, and fifteen Alcoa executives have also joined the endeavor to improve their reading.

The students taking the reading tests scored well above the national norm for college freshmen for the test.

The reading program, a six weeks, three days a week course in developmental reading is conducted by Robert Rose. Mr. Rose graduated from Brown University and attended Princeton Seminary, Dallas Seminary, and S.M.U. He holds an M.A. degree and was active in the ministry for six years.

MC intensifies campaign for Jan. goal of $920,000

Maryville College, still $272,671 short of a $920,000 goal which must be reached by Jan. 1, is intensifying Development Fund Campaign efforts.

David W. Proffitt, chairman of the campaign, reported a total of $647,329 to the Campaign Cabinet and the college Board of Directors as of Oct. 10.

The pledge total includes half of the $500,000 given by Algie Sutton of Greenville, S. C. This amount becomes a firm commitment only if the total goal is met by the Jan. 1 deadline.

Non-alumni give $67,000

Of the total amount pledged, alumni of the college, including alumni members of the Board of Directors and the faculty and staff, have pledged $492,112. Business firms, corporations, and related foundations have pledged $63,935; individual churches, $3,800; individuals who are not alumni, $67,061.38; and from miscellaneous sources has come $20,100. Direct contact through churches was not a part of this campaign effort, thus accounting for the small figure in this cate-

Music on the program includes the Overture, Cosi Fan Tutte by Mozart, English Folk Song Suite by Vaughn Williams, Toccata by Frescobaldi, Procession of the Sardar by Ippolitov-Ivanow, and selections from Can Can by Cole Porter.

There are approximately forty members of the orchestra, which is conducted by John A. Roberts.

Phi, Beta place first in floats

Winners of the 1964 Homecoming float competition were the brother-sister societies Kappa Phi and Chi Beta. The float had the theme "It's in the bag," and carried a large Scottie dog with bagpipes on its back. Recorded bagpipe music was played.

Second place winners were Alpha Sigma and Theta Epsilon. Their float, pulled by a tractor decorated as a train, was a large Scottie dog. The theme was "Steaming to victory."

Placing third was the sophomore class, with the theme "Thumbs up." The float carried a football player with his thumbs up, kicking a Millsaps player over the goal posts.

Three new buildings planned for near future of campus

Maryville College is undertaking three major buildng projects: two dormitories, a science building, and a student center, as part of the Sesquicentennial Development program, to be completed in 1969.

In a speech at the All Scots banquet on Friday evening, October 30, Dr. Joseph J. Copeland stated that plans are to have the new dormitories within a year, the science building within two, and the student center within three.

Group living planned

Taylor, Lieberfield, and Heldman, a professional consulting firm, is advising as to the building of the dormitories. The philosophy of housing to be employed is group living, whereby groups of 12 or 13 students would live together, with three or four groups to a floor.

This would mean that about 50 students on a floor would share bath facilities, lounges, and study rooms. In the freshman dorm, the thirteenth person would probably be an upperclass counselor.

May add to New Dorm

Additional space is needed for the students living off campus in auxiliary houses, for the projected enrollment next year, and for the replacement of Baldwin Hall, expected to take place within the next three years. Therefore, about 200 spaces for women and 100 to 165 are needed for men.

The critical factor in dormitory construction is the "cost per bed." Financing can take place either through a Federal government loan, as with the New Dorm, or with private financing and gift contributions. There may be a "T" shaped wing added to the New Dorm, which would provide low per bed cost.

FA tour to be during vacation

The department of fine arts at Maryville College is sponsoring a fine arts tour in New York City of art galleries, buildings of distinctive architectural design, and performing arts, including concerts, ballets, musicals, and plays.

May have chartered bus

The tour is scheduled to begin Wednesday, December 30, continuing through Sunday, January 3, traveling back to Maryville in time for the opening of school on January 5.

By group arrangements in advance, prices will be greatly reduced. Reservations for hotel accommodations at the Hotel Paris at the rate of $4.25 per night per person and ticket reservations for performances will be arranged by the department.

Transportation to and from the Hotel Paris, meals, and other expenses will be handled by each person. If there are sufficient reservations, a chartered bus or plane may be arranged for.

The estimated cost of the tour minus transportation is $60.

A $15 deposit with an application form properly signed must be in the fine arts office by noon, November 24. Students must have their parents' signature on the application. A request to have the application mailed to them may be made at the fine arts center office.

The tour is open to Maryville College students, faculty, staff, alumni, and other adults.

Margaret Hanson, Homecoming queen of 1964, is being presented red roses by Dr. Joseph Copeland, Maryville College president. Dr. Copeland and Dr. Lynn Curtis, alumni president, were Miss Hanson's escorts for her presentation during the half time of the game with Millsaps Saturday afternoon, October 31.

Lip service

Politics has been talked a lot lately. We listen with some less interest than we did four years ago.

One thing we heard which caused our ears to perk and our pens to come from our pockets (and the waitress had to give us a new check). A man next to us said, "If I ever become head of this country, people will eat banana pudding, and like it." Sounds like Johnson-Humphrey. Let us all resolve to have such an attitude. And don't ever let anyone tell you that our favorite drugstore doesn't swing.

Beta Notes

by Anne Smith

Well gang, it took a lot of P. M. A. and hard work, but we did it. After winning the float contest we are well on the road to success, and should never fail!

A number of changes have been made this year in Chi Beta. One of the first acts of business was to unofficially shorten our name to Beta. We did this especially for the benefit of the freshmen who were a little confused about what to call us.

Also under consideration is the possibility of a new song for Beta. One suggestion has been made by Fran Lantz, and if anyone else has a suggestion, we will be glad to consider it.

Phi Notes

by Joe Thomas

With all due credit to Mr. Stone, our Founders Day speaker, we feel "terrific." Our PMA is A-OK. (Org!)

We exultingly report a very successful Homecoming breakfast in the New Dorm basement. Someone was heard to remark that the coffee was divine and the doughnuts were "holey."

The Phis and Betas received their greatest thrill when the winners of the float competition were announced. The Kappa Phi-Chi Beta float took first place. Congratulations to all those who worked on it.

Kappa Phi and Chi Beta will be sending a bus loaded with students to the Mars Hill game. So y'all come, ok?

PLAYBOY, LIFE, TIME, ESQUIRE, MOTIVE, INTERCOLLEGIAN...

The first four of these magazines you may disregard (if you like); however subscriptions to the remaining two controversial and provocative student magazines are now available at a reduced rate through UCCF.

We realize that some of you and your "Vogue-minded friends" and faculty will want to keep up with the latest on the national scene, and we urge that you take advantage of this opportunity. Copies can be found in the Salt Cellar reading table, as well as a sign-up sheet for your convenience. Bob Young will be able to fill you in on further information.

A note about these: Motive is published by the Methodist Student Movement and contains the latest in contemporary student opinion, art forms, as well as contemporary theology.

Intercollegian is published by the YWCA and YMCA, and is a more fundamental magazine which is certainly worth the reading. Be sure to check in the Salt Cellar for these and other available readings.

ATTENTION!

Something new has been added to the recreation program at Maryville College. The opportunity to check out equipment from the physical education department between the hours of 3:30 and 5:30 every afternoon will certainly be beneficial to all students, men and women, as well as the faculty.

As with any other luxury at Maryville College there are certain stipulations about checking out the equipment. The first is that the equipment can be checked out at 3:30 but must be returned before 5:30 the same day. No equipment may be checked out for overnight use, but may be checked out on Friday for use over the weekend. If any equipment is returned after 5:30 on weekdays and after 9:00 on Monday mornings a fee of $.50 will be charged.

The various equipment that can be checked out is fencing foils, golf clubs, badminton rackets, basketballs, volleyballs, soccer balls, softballs and bats and field hockey sticks.

The purpose of this program is to make better use of all the equipment in the physical education department at Maryville College.

Since men learned print, no night is wholly black.

SEMANTICISM UNLIMITED

by Mary Gay Boettcher

Like all groups niched in a bigger society, the college community has predictably formulated its own form of language. We find evidences of this in such words as: "relate effectively" (to one's: a. environment, b. studying, c. girl, etc.), "communication," "ethnic," "involvment" (and lack of same), "esoteric," "identify."

From within the framework of this comforting wall of terminology we seem to find it difficult to recognize that other and similar groups have yet a different strata of words. So it is that the somewhat vague and pointless efficiency of the abbreviated phrase (PSI) so often used in the world of business sounded to us dated and a bit long-hemmed. Other words which are, we feel, perfectly good words somehow are not at all an integral part of our language . . . they sound strange and faintly musty when used. Such a word is solitude.

There is an interesting lack of solitude, in the accepted sense of the word, on our campus. Since we are certainly not allowed the escape of anonymity, again in the accepted sense, that a large university complex imposes, it becomes a matter as simple as there being no way, within the confines of the existing order, to get away from all these people. Invasion of privacy is hardly a phrase but, rather, a disgruntled way of life. And certainly, to further hackney a phrase, everybody wants to be alone sometime. But the equating of solitude with the absence of people is to label it, if you'll pardon me, non-involvement. Which it is not.

For solitude is a form of involvement. The most familiar example, whether the best or not, of the solitary person is Thoreau. And Thoreau didn't, by his act of self-imposed isolation, either renounce his responsibilities as a member of society or take a vacation from thought. His form of involvement took a most active form while he spent a stubborn period in the local hoosegow protesting a tax. For the solitude that Thoreau practiced allowed his action, when it came, to be natural, that is, the result of thought.

For solitude is, really, a state of mind. A state which needs no externals for impetus. But rather turns inward upon itself to watch, and listen. And when a tangible form of involvement comes, it comes, not simply for the sake of involvement, which is betraying the real nature of the term, but as a result of a commitment to oneself, not in committee form. Solitude, in this sense, seldom allows involvement for involvement's sake . . . participation is no criterion of concern or the lack of it in many cases. So, perhaps, before we fall into the error of making non-involvement the enemy we could consider the possibility that, as before, our definitions are too narrow. Perhaps, after all, we need a Walden Pond to show us the futility of thoughtless participation and to help us understand the immaturity of classifying possible forms of involvement by deciding what is adequate concern, with a clear eye and an unyielding hand . . . using of course, our own standards.

Right now we are finishing up soccer. The next sport is volleyball. On November 12 all people interested in playing volleyball will sign up in the intramural gymnasium at 3:30 or 4:30; there will be someone there to help you with the basic skills, to practice some drills, and to learn the rules. At 4:30 there will be a clinic for the timers, scorers, and refereees, so come out and get extra points for Women's "M" Club.

Under the new system there are no official practices or scrimmage games so that more time can be spent on official tournament games.

Realization

During four years at Maryville College, we occasionally pondered on the significance of orange and garnet. We thought: "There must be a reason. Purple and gold might just happen. But not orange and garnet."

Then came an autumn like that of 1964. And we knew.

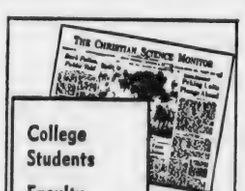
port from Taylor, Lieberfield, and Heldman of recommendations for the science building. The major question is whether to rehabilitate Fayerweather Hall for use in addition to the new building, or to house all the sciences in the new building and use Fayerweather for other purposes.

The money for the science building is already available. As soon as the report is received, a decision reached, and the blueprints drawn, construction can begin.

Student center to house P.O.

The new student center is being planned in the light of the recommendations of a student-faculty committee of a year or so ago. This building may provide new dining facilities, in which case the first floor of Pearsons can be used for lounges and rooms. The student center will house the bookstore, post office, student body office, Chilhowean office, Echo office, lounge, snack bar, and town student lounge.



If all the projected buildings can be put into the same contract, costs can be reduced.

Ten-year goal is $7 million

The Development Fund Campaign is the second phase of a ten year Sesquicentennial Development Program planned to provide $7,000,000 in new resources between 1960 and 1970 for improvement of the college program and facilities. President Joseph J. Copeland reported to the Board of Directors that as of Sept. 1, new resources in the amount of $3,178,115 had been secured toward the $7,000,000 goal.

FOUR ALMA MATERS

by Sue Haldeman

When contemplating the age-old Maryville traditions, did you ever think of our "Alma Mater" and how it originated? Probably not . . . but it is quite an interesting story. Actually, there are four college songs. Our present alma mater, however, is the oldest and, since its composition in 1899, has been the most popular. The words were written by alumnus and professor of biology John W. Ritchie, and were set to music by piano and organ teacher, Leila Perine.

Miss Nancy Hunter, who recently retired from her position as President Copeland's secretary, remembers a conversation with Miss Perine once when the musician returned for a visit. Miss Perine told her that she had composed the tune for a tenor member of a male quartet. This young man wanted a tune that would compliment his vocal range. Miss Perine obligingly adapted the tenor part of Cornell University's alma mater, "Where Cayuga's Waters," as the melody of her tune.

According to Dr. Wilson's A Century of Maryville College, another song, "Dear Old Maryville," by Professor E. W. Hall, instructor of vocal and band music from 1905 to 1914, was very popular. The following is the first stanza and chorus of the three stanza song:

Near Chilhowee's mountain blue,
Stands our Alma Mater true,
Dear old Maryville, to thee we lift our song.
'Neath thy Cedar grove so fair,
We shall breathe the mountain air,
While with merry hearts the chorus we prolong.
Chorus: Sing we a song of our dear college home, Fondly we love thee still,
And wherever we may be,
Fond mem'ry turns to thee,
Our Alma Mater, dear old Maryville.

A third tribute to Maryville was written by Rev. George P. Beard to the tune of "Maryland, My Maryland." Space does not permit the quoting of all the patriotic lines, but here are those of the last verse:

O Mother dear, we love thee still.
Maryville! our Maryville!
Our home, sweet home is College Hill,
Maryville! our Maryville!
Within thy halls we linger long,
And greet thee with a grateful song,
Our love, our life, to thee belong,
Maryville! our Maryville!

Maryville's final musical glorification was composed in 1936 by John W. Ritchie, who was moved a second time to honor his alma mater while returning home after receiving an honorary degree of Doctor of Humane Letters.

Having resigned his position as professor of biology in 1901, Mr. Ritchie had organized courses in biology in the Philippines, had developed the department of biology at William and Mary College where he taught, had written text books in physiology and hygiene (being called by one leader "the father and founder of modern health education in the schools"), and was at the time of the degree, science editor for the World Book Company.

The lines which he wrote are set to the music of Mendelssohn, better known as the tune of the hymn, "Still, Still With Thee." The first verse follows:

Firm, firm she stands, her sacred walls uplifting,
Firm in our hearts, firm on her ancient hill;
Firm through the years, unchanged amidst the changing,
Firm, firm she stands, our loved Maryville.

When we read these last three over-sentimental songs of praise, I think we can all agree that for once the oldest in our tradition is definitely the best.

All successful newspapers are ceaselessly querulous and bellicose. They never defend anyone or anything if they can help it; if the job is forced upon them, they tackle it by denouncing someone or something else.

Injury Ends Collegiate Career of McClanahan

by Phil Jerome

Two weeks ago in the football game against Guilford College, Maryville's star halfback Roland McClanahan suffered a broken leg. The injury, a serious one, will keep the 145 pound halfback out for the rest of the season. Because he is a senior and has already used his four years of eligibility, the Guilford game was probably the last of McClanahan's career.

Deserves Special Recognition

McClanahan was a major factor in the success of the team this year. Statistically he was the team's leading ground gainer. However, his value to the squad cannot be expressed with numerical representations. This article is being written because some of McClanahan's teammates felt that he deserved some sort of special recognition for his achievements.

Instead of writing the article myself, I turned to three of the people who were closely related to McClanahan: Herman Ramsey, a junior quarterback and probable successor to Benny Monroe and H. H. Linginfelter; Clint Abbott, co-captain and starting guard; and Howard Tomlinson, the coach of the team.

Dependable on Third Down

Herman Ramsey: "You can't lose a player and say you won't be hurt. He's one of the strongest runners for his size that I have ever seen. He's also one of the best competitors I've ever seen. He's dependable. Whenever you need two yards for a first down, he'd get it for you. You always depended on Roland for the first down."

Abbott Comments

Clint Abbott: "I've played with Roland for all my life. He's the toughest, strongest 150 pound back I've ever played with or against. You can always count on him for the big play. He'll always come through for you. When you're blocking for him, you don't have to make as big a hole. He's small and quick and can get through a small hole. A lot of the time all you have to do is get in a man's face so he can't see and Roland will be by him before he has a chance to make the tackle."

Strong Broken Field Runner

Howard Tomlinson: "He's a fine football player. It takes a lot of heart to play at 145. He works hard, has good speed. He's smart. He has the ability to use his speed at the right time and make use of his blockers. His strength is as a broken field runner. He has a lot of natural ability. He has guts. We were real fortunate to have him. He's one of the finest offensive backs we're ever had."

Vols Top Scots in Soccer, 4-1

The University of Tennessee Soccer Club handed the Maryville College team their fourth consecutive setback of the season as they kicked their way to a 4 to 1 victory in the Scots' Homecoming game last Friday.

The defeat was a bitter one for the Scots who had hopes of earning their first win before the Homecoming crowd. Their hopes were based on a pre-season triumph over UT in a scrimmage game.

Vols Score First

The Vols and the Highlanders battled on almost even terms throughout most of the first half. The Maryville squad held an edge in play, having many strong bids for goals. However, it was the Volunteers who scored first. With no more than five seconds left in the half, Alex Sozonoff dribbled to the right of the Maryville goal and sent a shot in front of the nets that curved into the far left hand corner of the goal at the last second.

Blackwood Scores for Scots

The Scots came out strong at the start of the second half and knotted the score almost immediately. Bill Blackwood outraced the UT defenders to a Billy Evaul pass and blasted the ball into the net. Unfortunately Blackwood's goal ended Maryville's scoring for the day. UT, on the other hand, scored three more times with Steve Nagwena, Conni Frederickson, and Carlos Rojas getting the goals. The game ended with the Volunteers in charge of a strong 4 to 1 lead.

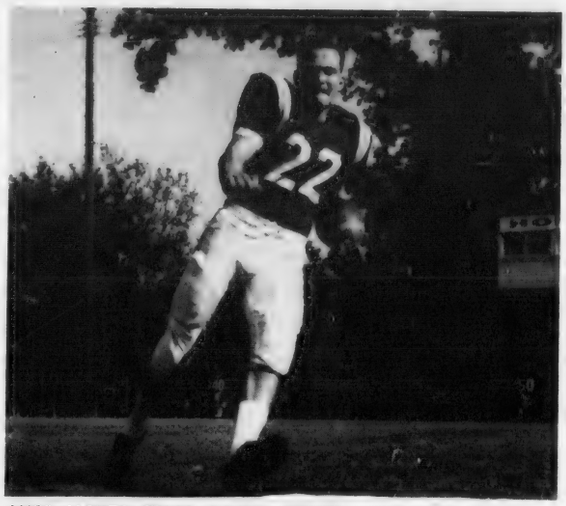
Although the Scots went down to defeat, some notable performances were produced. Center halfback and co-captain Red Prudhon showed some of his old luster in playing his finest game of the season. Another person doing a fine job was Adam Dale. Dale, playing goalie for the first time, did a fine job in repulsing the Volunteer attacks. Dave Parrish and Harry Repsher also played well.

Scots Win Sixth Straight

A determined Millsaps College football team threw a scare into the heavily favored forces of Maryville College in the Scots' Homecoming game last Saturday. However, when the game was over, the Highlanders had notched their eleventh consecutive victory and had boosted their season's record to 6-0 with a 21 to 12 triumph over the Majors.

Monroe Scores Twice

As has been true in many of the games throughout the season, it was Little All-American candidate Benny Monroe who spelled the difference. Monroe had a major hand in each of Maryville's touchdowns, passing for one and running for two more.



Dalton Snares T.D. Aerial

The experts had established Maryville as pre-game favorites by more than three touchdowns. In the first quarter, it looked as if they were right. Maryville took the ball and moved down the field toward the end zone. On the scoring play, Monroe, faced with a fourth down situation, calmly stepped back and fired thirteen yards to Mike Dalton in the end zone who made a beautiful reception directly underneath the goal posts.

However, after yielding the initial touchdown, the Millsaps' defense stiffened and shut out the Maryville offense for the remainder of the half.

Majors Block Kick

In the second quarter the Majors scored a touchdown to bring them within one point of the Highlanders. The score was a result of a blocked kick. Lineman Mark Riemann broke through to block Mike White's punt, and guard Richard Warren recovered the loose ball in the end zone. The extra point attempt was wide, and Maryville had a 7 to 6 lead when the gun sounded to end the first half.

AMOS ALONZO STAGG AWARD WINNER: Mike White, defensive safety, was awarded the Amos Alonzo Stagg Award for his play against Millsaps College. White was a major factor in the strong Maryville defense, moving up from his halfback post time after time to halt the Majors' halfbacks.

Monroe Scores from the One

In the second half, the Highlanders struck for two touchdowns to cement the victory. Both scores were made by Benny Monroe. In the third quarter Monroe threw to Mike Dalton at the eight yard line. Hal Shultz carried to the one yard line on two bursts into the line, and Monroe carried the ball over from there. A low pass from center permitted the Majors to stop the extra point attempt.

Monroe Speeds 55 Yards

In the fourth quarter Monroe scored again. Finding a weakness on the left side of the Millsaps line, the senior quarterback called for a plunge into the middle of the line to set up the play. On the next call he swept around end on the quarterback option play and galloped 55 yards for the touchdown. Monroe added a two point conversion to run his total for the game to 14.

The Majors added a final touchdown in the fourth quarter when Jerry Drane passed to Phil Cranston in the end zone. However, the touchdown came with the game well out of reach of the Majors.

White Stands Out

Although Monroe was the offensive hero, the defense could boast of a bigger hero in Mike White. White, who is an excellent safety back played an outstanding game, throwing his 155 pounds time and again into the path of oncoming Millsaps runners.

Mar Hill Next Opponent

This evening the Scots will meet Mars Hill. Last year the Scots defeated the Mars Hill squad by a score of 22 to 0.

Statistics:

Fort Mudge and Beyond

Munich Revisited or Happiness Is A Small Christian College

Although the title may belie the fact, my purpose and intent here is at least reasonably serious. Beware any delusions of humor: laugh very carefully.

In recent weeks I've grown increasingly disturbed with certain factors of our attitude toward student government. There has been a growing tendency to regard our organization as a mutual suicide pact. Too quickly we have noted opposition from the administration: too easily we have written off the year as a total loss.

Antagonistic and bitter would seem to sum up our attitude. All this has been evidenced recently in pursuits literary, septic, and otherwise. I've been as guilty as any.

And why shouldn't the faculty and administration view our activities with alarm? We've hardly given them any other choice. We've let our preoccupation and dissatisfaction with certain problem areas warp our entire outlook. And our protests have been strong—and, as noted, odoriferous.

Lest too soon the clarion call of Faculty Fink be directed my way, let me restate my position. Now I didn't appreciate those three demerits, and I still don't appreciate them. There are rules and traditions of Maryville College with which I heartily disagree. But—and I sincerely hope this won't come as too much of a surprise to certain offices of Anderson and elsewhere—I do like Maryville College. I believe in the type of education offered here. And, it being a Senior privilege to reminisce, if I had it to do all over again, I'd still be right here.

I hope the preceding hasn't choked you up too much. If the person next to you is also reading this column, help each other brush away the tears, and we'll continue.

I suspect, and talking with many students has only strengthened the suspicion, that most of the student body would agree with the above position. We have our complaints, and there is no reason why they shouldn't be heard. But such dissatisfaction is only a part of the picture, and a relatively small part at that. Our complaints do need to be explored: we do not need to have

Harter-Van Metre ballet, 'Delusion', to be performed

An abstract ballet entitled "Delusion," the work of Dr. Harry Harter, Fine Arts Department Chairman, and Cheryl VanMetre of the VanMetre School of Dance in Maryville, will be performed Tuesday, November 17, at 8 p.m. in the Knoxville Civic Auditorium. Music will be by the Knoxville Symphony Orchestra with Mr. and Mrs. Victor Schoen playing the piano parts.

Both musician and dancer are seeking to communicate ideas through music and bodily motion in the construction of this kind of ballet, Dr. Harter emphasized. Musically, the work is in the contemporary idiom "not difficult to listen to," and uses some jazz concepts. It is highly rhythmical and melodic in many places.

Miss VanMetre and her dance troupe have worked out the intricate choreography to go with Dr. Harter's composition. The dance complements and reinforces the musical expression.

Work on the ballet began in August, 1963, and it was first performed in May of this year at the Maryville College Theatre.

Tickets for the Knoxville production of "Delusion" are available at the Symphony Society's office in the Farragut Hotel in Knoxville, and may be purchased the night of the performance at the auditorium.

Use of 900 p.o. boxes begins

Use of the nine hundred lock mail boxes begins today, following the distribution of combinations and box numbers in the Treasurer's Office Thursday afternoon and Friday.

All full-time students, including town students, and faculty have been assigned box numbers.

The post office box area will be open daily from 6 a.m. to 10 p.m. The regular hours of the book store and post office will continue.

In the door of each mail box is a card slot through which small notices may be inserted from the outside. A list of names and box numbers will be posted in the mail box area to facilitate distribution of messages.

The present dormitory mail boxes will remain to be utilized for handing out Student Council minutes, mimeographed circulars and messages.

The Class of 1964 gave the initial monetary gift toward the purchase of this system. There will be a $1 increase in the activity fee second semester to cover the balance of the cost.

Peace Corps test to be given Nov.17

An on-campus administration of the Peace Corps placement test will be held here Tuesday, November 17, at 3:30 in Anderson Hall, room 314.

The test is non-competitive, used only in assisting in the placement of potential volunteers.

In addition to the more than 8,000 Americans who will go into training in 1965, 1,000 college juniors will enter summer, 1965 training to begin preparing for overseas assignments in 1966 after completion of their senior year.

Mr. Bennett attends UNC institute

Duncan C. Bennett, director of information services at Maryville College, attended an institute on "Communications Research" at the University of North Carolina Wednesday through Friday of this week.

Dean Wayne Danielson and selected members of the journalism faculty at UNC were principal lecturers. The institute was sponsored by the American College Public Relations Association.

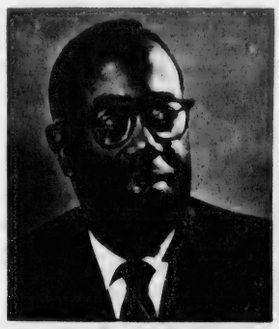
The Chapel Hill institute is one of five such programs conducted during 1964-65 for college and university information specialists and development officers. Other institutes will be held in Boston, East Lansing, Michigan, Denver, and San Francisco.

Plans being made for FA tour

Plans for the fine arts tour of New York City, sponsored by the Maryville College Fine Arts Department, are developing.

Scheduled for December 30 to January 4, the tour will tentatively include visiting art museums such as the Guggenheim, the Museum of Modern Art, the Metropolitan, the Fricke Gallery, the Whitney, and Modern Museum of Art as well as the Cloisters.

Reservations are being made for performances at Lincoln Center, a Broadway play or musical, and the annual presentation of Tchaikovsky's Nutcracker Suite at the City Center of Ballet. If time allows, an off-Broadway show will be added to the itinerary.



Persons living within commuting distance of New York City can join the touring group; however, they must pay the $15 deposit required to be submitted with the application form by November 24.

On Friday, November 20, The Reverend Elder G. Hawkins, Moderator of the General Assembly of the United Presbyterian Church of the United States of America, will speak at a special chapel service.

The first Negro ever to be named titular head of a major American denomination, Dr. Hawkins is a graduate of Bloomfield College, Bloomfield, New Jersey, and Union Theological Seminary, New York City.

Dr. Hawkins was previously vice-moderator of the General Assembly, has been vice-moderator of the Synod of New York, and served two terms as moderator of the New York City Presbytery. He has served as secretary of the Commission on Religion and Race and was a member of the Board of Christian Education and the National Presbyterian Health and Welfare Association.

The special service will be an hour long, and the February Meetings schedule will be used

Mrs. Schoen to give third faculty recital

Sallie Warth Schoen, pianist and assistant professor of music at Maryville College, will present the third in the Maryville College series of Faculty Recitals Friday, Nov. 20, at 8:15 p.m. in the Music Hall of the Fine Arts Center on the Maryville campus.

Her program includes the Bach "Chromatic Fantasy and Fugue", Ravel's "Gaspard de la Nuit", and Schubert's "Wanderer Fantasy." The Ravel selection is based on three poems by Aloysius Bertrand, and is in three parts, "Ondine," "Le Gibet" (The Gallows), and "Scarbo." The Schubert work is based on a song of Schubert's to words by the poet Lubeck. It is a large, four-movement work depicting the romantic aloneness of the 19th century.

Mrs. Schoen holds the Bachelor of Music degree from Oberlin Conservatory of Music and the Master of Music degree from Indiana University.

"What Is Man?," an oratorio commissioned by the North American Baptist Jubilee Advance and performed this year for the first time at the Baptist meeting in Atlantic City, will be presented by the Maryville College Choir at 8:30 p.m. on Sunday, Nov. 15.

Wyatt Parker to narrate

The choir is under the direction of Dr. Harry H. Harter, head of the Fine Arts Department at Maryville College. Dr. James A. Bloy of the Maryville faculty will be organist, Mrs. Linda Waggoner Perry will be pianist, and instrumentalists will be from the College Band and College-Community Orchestra under the direction of John A. Roberts.

The narrator will be Wyatt Parker. David Evans will sing the bass parts and Miss Sarah Tompkins the soprano passages. Speaking voices will be David Eby and Miss Virginia Wells.

Oratorio is by Nelson, Miller

The 8:30 p.m. time has been set to allow those attending their own church services Sunday night to come to the presentation. The oratorio will take the place of the regular College Vespers service.

The oratorio, by Ron Nelson and Samuel Miller, presents the Biblical message of the original majesty of man, marred by rebellion and sin, but restored by redemption in Christ to become an instrument of grace and power. Nelson is chairman of the Music Department of Brown University and holds a doctor's degree in composition from the Eastman School of Music. Miller is Dean of the Harvard Divinity School. He wrote the libretto in a style which has made him famous as an author of many religious books.

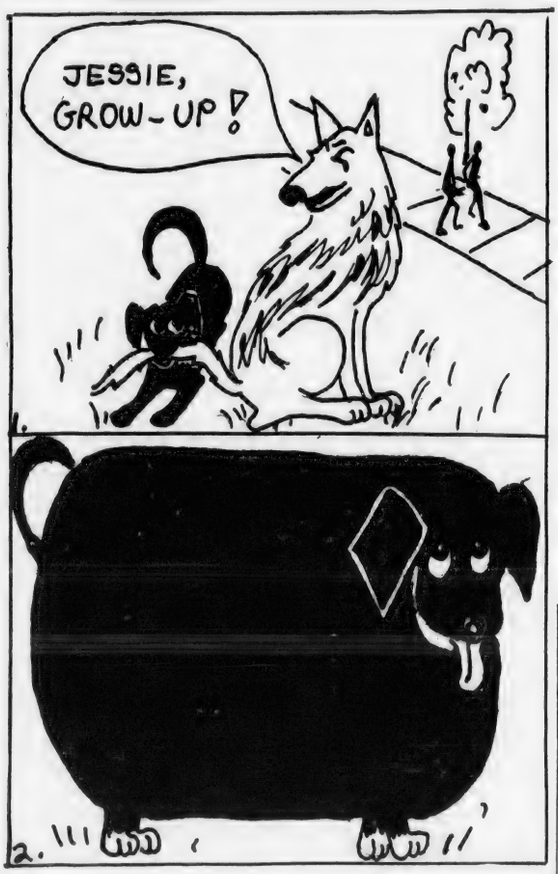
Lip service

We here at Maryville seem to be afraid to talk about what we are thinking. At least, we've noticed, we fail to talk with the right people about certain subjects.

There is no one here inhuman. We are all at least reasonably intelligent. The implementation of communication is often — perhaps consistently — difficult. But there are few here who either consciously or unconsciously refuse to listen. And there are several here who want to be consulted. We speak of both students and administration and faculty (we wish, for once, to speak of the college family).

* * * * * *

We do not, as a newspaper, want to function as a medium for students to sound off. This has never been our intention.



We do mean to serve as a medium for expressing widely the ideas of student government officers in "Fort Mudge." And by means of letters to the editor, or another column, we are able to function as such for anyone else.

We can't apologize for what is said in the Echo. Whether it is irrelevant in the minds of some, making light of serious matters in the minds of some, or just plain boring in the minds of some. None of it is done with ill intent.

* * * * * *

"Don't be afraid of controversy. It is the stuff of freedom — and it can have many a happy ending. There is no way to believe in freedom of speech and press and religion, and in the two-party system, and, at the same time, avoid issues."

Letter To The Editor

November 6, 1964

Last spring an interesting phenomenon took place on the Maryville College campus. In an election that admittedly was lacking in certain aspects of enthusiasm, the two nominees for the office of student body president were defeated by a "write-in candidate."

I was one of these nominees. I have heretofore been reluctant to put into writing my feelings on student government in general, and in particular this year's student government, for fear of certain parties thinking my ideas were a bitter reprisal of my defeat.

The following ideas are my personal thinking and are presented not as a defeated candidate or a student council member, but rather as a member of the student body of Maryville College.

I was one of several students receiving three demerits last spring for what appeared to me at the time, and still does, to have been a "mere springtime prank."

I do not feel that three demerits should have been given for this offense. I also feel that any mention of an unauthorized campus organization having any connection with this "springtime prank" should not be registered as student council opinion.

The Student Council be a representative body and voice the opinion of the majority of students. I do not feel the council should be used to promote the ideas of a small minority. If any organization is to be successful, I feel that it must work as a unit to promote the best interests of its members.

I have worked as a student council member on various projects which are well known to most of the students at Maryville, namely cars on campus and off campus drinking. I have worked on these projects, not for the reason that I, as an individual, agreed with them; but as an elected representative of the student body, it was and is my responsibility to voice the majority student opinion.

The student body should use its student council to register opinion. If the majority of the students on this campus do not want the two programs mentioned above, the student council should be made aware of this fact and not continue to promote these programs on the premise that the programs represent the thinking of the majority of the students.

We cannot, however, place the entire blame on student council. We as students have failed, I feel, to take an active part in student government. We have not used the representatives that we elected to voice our opinion.

If we as students care enough to have a student government, we should become involved and become interested in what is being proposed in student council and decide if this, as a student body, is what we want.

If the student government is to function as it should, it should not voice the opinion of the minority. We as students should be interested enough to make sure that the minority does not "rule."

our complaints so becloud our outlook that all constuctive effort is brought to a halt. There will always be administrative decisions unappreciated by the student body, and not all the actions of the students will be viewed with favor by the powers that be.

Perhaps this is a necessary state of affairs. I'm not at all sure that it's an undesirable situation. But we, as a student government, must carefully examine our own level of maturity. If the above does, as I feel, represent student opinion. then Student Council must reflect that opinion.

I think it's time that our vendetta with Anderson be brought to a halt. Student government can accomplish much for this campus, but we'll need to open our minds if this is to be a possibility.

BARNWARMING

by Sara Parker

Only thirty-three days until Christmas vacation—Miller's and Midland already are sporting lacey aluminum and spray glue. Thoughts have well churned past November twenty-sixth, the nearest day of legal rest . . . A labored consideration of the girl best suited to represent the class this year calls club presidents to their carnival tasks of washing apples for bobbing and of mixing shaving cream for throwing. The menial efforts of a Barning go unnoticed and perhaps unattended . . .

Yet the day arrives, full stomaches can be thankful for the extra apple gained by bobbing, and Maryville may yet settle gladly for scratchy hay, strong accents, and crude scenery. The softened people seen through panes of shaving cream have gained Warm-Barning looks like those at home — and the day of thanksgiving seems to have added a dimension . . .

Dr. David Stanley, with his wife the recipient of the 1963-64 Fred Hope Fund, is shown examining a child in a clinic in Laos. The Stanleys left the U. S. in February for an 18 months' stay as medical missionaries with the Tom Dooley foundation. They have set up a 20 bed hospital on an island in the Mekong river.

FRED HOPE FUND: MC'S PART IN ANOTHER WORLD

In a month or so students and faculty will be asked to pledge a contribution to Maryville's Fred Hope Fund. Although the words Fred Hope are part of every Maryville student's vocabulary, few students are well acquainted with the Fund's sixty year history.

Fred Hope supported until 1946

Fred Hope was a student at Maryville shortly after the turn of the century and was active in a YMCA group which raised money for missionary work in China.

When he graduated from Maryville and went as a missionary to Africa, the remaining students in this Y group continued to raise money, which they contributed to Fred Hope's industrial school, in which he taught industrial skills to African students. Maryville's students and faculty continued to send money to the school until Fred Hope's retirement in 1946.

Fund contributed $12,500 to Newton Hospital

For the next five years the Fred Hope Fund went to a Maryville graduate, Mary Edna Smith, who was teaching in a girls' school in South China, which was supported by the Presbyterian Mission Board.

In 1951-52 the Fund, for the first time, had two recipients: the Cameroun Christian College in Africa, and Dr. Dorothy Ferris, another MC graduate, at the Frances Newton Hospital, Ferozepur, India. The Fund also went to Ferozepur in the succeeding years through 1959, giving a total of $12,500 to the Frances Newton Hospital.

In 1959-60 Maryville contributed to Operation Crossroads, a student work program. In 1960-61, the Fred Hope Fund helped to build a medical clinic in Momjepom, Africa, and in 1961-62, a hospital mobile medical unit in Korea. The next year the Fund went to John and Parveen, two Indian Medical students.

1963-64 Fund to Stanleys in Laos

Last year the Fund was again divided, with part going to MC graduates Dr. and Mrs. David Stanley for their medical work in Laos, and part being used to establish a scholarship for a Negro student. As yet a recipient for the Fred Hope scholarship has not been found.

The Fred Hope Committee is at the present discussing possible uses for this year's fund. But whatever its object, the fund will provide Maryville students and faculty with an opportunity to extend a Christian love and interest to others in the world. Although perhaps in a relatively small way, it is an expression of our participation in world affairs.

Focus on Sports

by Phil Jerome

The history of soccer at Maryville College is short and interesting. It reaches back only about five years when a group of students decided to form a team. Since that time the squad has advanced to the point where it plays Berea and Warren Wilson Colleges — two of the finest teams in the South.

In this history the names of two faculty members are prominent — Mr. Arthur Ainsworth and Dr. David Young. Mr. Ainsworth was the original supporter of the team. His agreement to accompany the squad on their trips was the major factor in the decision of the administration to allow soccer to exist on an inter-collegiate basis. More recently, the name of Dr. Young has been foremost to the soccer team.

In his undergraduate days at Park College, Dr. Young was a member of the soccer team. When he arrived at Maryville College several years ago, he lent his services and experience to the improvement of the Scots' soccer team.

Working totally without compensation other than the pleasure he derives from playing the game. Dr. Young has taken over the duties of coach. He attends practices, faithfully spends his spare time in analyzing the problems of the team, and travels to the games at his own expense.

Although the team has not done well this season, the patience and coaching of Dr. Young has been a great asset. Men who are willing to devote a sizable portion of their time to the advancement of sports at Maryville College deserve to be recognized and applauded.

Dr. Young is such a man. It is hoped that this article will serve to make the student body aware of Dr. Young's contributions to the team, express in part the gratitude of the soccer squad, and act as a small tribute to Dr. Young himself.

Defense Halts Mars Hill

In preparation for the game with Mars Hill, Coach Howard Tomlinson pulled out eleven red practice jerseys and gave them to his best defensive players. Throughout the week Tomlinson worked almost solely with this "red squad." His purpose was to keep Mars Hill from scoring. He succeeded. Faced with the poorest offensive output of the year, the outstanding work of the defensive unit gave Maryville College its seventh truimph of the season with a 6 to 0 victory.

Webb Scores T.D.

The game was a defensive struggle on the part of both teams. The nationally ranked Maryville offense managed to score only one touchdown. Fortunately, it was enough to provide the Scots with the decision. The score came in the second quarter.

Taking the ball on their own 38 yard line, the Maryville Squad, led by the running of Jeff Slagle and the field generalship of Benny Monroe, moved 62 yards in eleven plays for the touchdown. The scoring play came on an eight yard pass from Monroe to Sonny Webb. Monroe's extra point attempt was wide.

Offense Lacks Punch

Maryville's poor offensive showing can be attributed to four factors.

1. The offensive line-up was stocked with players from the second team. Coach Tomlinson's plan to platoon his team into offensive and defensive units made it necessary to substitute second stringers for those who were playing exclusively defense.

2. The Scots lost the ball five times, four times on fumbles and one time on a pass interception.

3. Poor field position was a third factor. Long drives by Mars Hill forced the Scots to start under the pressure of being deep in their own territory.

4. The Maryville squad was greatly outweighed by their opponents. Meeting 260 pound tackles and 220 pound centers, the Highlanders were at a disadvantage of almost 25 pounds per man.

Pryor, Defense Stand Out

The heroes of the game were Maryville's defensive team. Four times Mars Hill drove deep into Maryville territory only to be stopped short of the end zone. Drives were halted on the 14, 7, 6, and 1 yard lines.

Spearheading the defense were Herman Ramsey who added to his team leading total by intercepting two passes; Gary Dutton, the Scots' massive 230 pound tackle; and Jim Pryor who played almost the entire game, serving on offense as well as defense.

Scots Meet Eagles

This evening the Maryville squad will face its sternest test of the year when it meets Carson-Newman College. The Eagles hold a 14 to 11 edge in the old rivalry that stretches back to 1924. Carrying a 5-3 record into the game, Carson-Newman will be trying to avenge Maryville's 17-14 victory last year.

Berea Squeaks by Improved Scots

A highly overconfident soccer team from Berea College had to make a strong second half comeback to defeat the Maryville College team 3 to 2.

On the basis of an 8 to 0 victory over the Scots earlier in the season, the Bears had underestimated the determination of the Highlanders. In the first half the Scots dominated play almost completely.

On the rare occasions that the ball was brought into Maryville territory, the Scots' fullbacks, Dave Taylor and Harry Repsher, booted the ball back to the line which continued its assault on the Berea goal.

Parrish Scores

Despite their dominace of play, the Scots only managed to score one goal in the first half. Halfback Dave Parrish sent a shot past the Berea goalie on a penalty kick. The goal was Parrish's second of the season.

Berea Takes Lead

Trailing by a score of 1 to 0, the Berea team came out strong at the start of the second half. Behind the play of center forward Austin Ahanotu, the Bears surged into the lead. Ahanotu scored twice and set up a third goal with a pass to Bruce McKinney.

Scots Push for Tie

However, the Scots were not out of the game. With five minutes left in the contest, Billy Evaul broke past the Berea fullbacks and beat the Bears' goalie to make the score 3 to 2. In the final moments of the game, the Scots pushed to tie the score, but were unable to send the ball into the nets.

Inability to Score

Although the defeat pushed the Scots' record to 0-5, the game was by far the best Highlanders have played this year. After completely dominating play in the first half, they met the Bears on even terms in the second half of play.

The defense was at its strongest peak of the season. The line, however, has still not solved the problem of how to put the ball into the net. Although they had numerous opportunities, they managed to score only twice.

Football Team Gains National Recognition

In the official statistics released by the National Collegiate Athletic Bureau on October 30th the Maryville College football team achieved national recognition in two areas among top small colleges.

The Scots were ranked fifteenth in the nation in total offense. The Scots have averaged 372.3 yards per game.

In forward pass offense, the Scots ranked twelfth, averaging 196.8 yards per game.

Many individuals deserve to be singled out for their play. Mike Mayo, starting his first game, did an outstanding job at halfback. Red Prudhon and Dave Parrish, the other halfbacks, played well as they have week after week. Adam Dale played a strong game in the goal. Fullback Dave Taylor and right wing Sonny Hughes also turned in fine performances.

Court, carnival, show make up Barnwarming

Barb Pettigrew and Koss Kerr were elected Barnwarming Queen and King by the student body on Friday, November 13. Chosen in the same election to represent their respective classes were Patti Feller, freshman; Betty Brown, junior; Judy Butler, senior; and Alice Leeth, sophomore.

by Sara Parker

November 26, 1964 — another blue Thursday? Not so — another Barnwarming — the best this year, we think. Begun by the Y's a number of years ago, the show has grown to gala proportions, and this year's Barnwarming Court will reign over a Thanksgiving carnival, and variety show.

Sponsored by UCCF

Vice-Presidents Nancy Buckwalter and Bill Erwin, working with the UCCF social commission, have decided to return again to the barn — and plans have been underway since early October.

Hal Schultz, chairman of booths, has asked all campus organizations to enter the carnival competition, in an effort to make this a campus-wide project. A cash prize will be awarded on the basis of proceeds, originality, and appeal.

Wayne Frey has been gathering acts for the variety show, and reports many headline names: Dean McClelland, the Pepper Shakers, the Nightwatchman, Ingrid Hellmer, Dr. Walker, David Evans, a chorus line directed by Mr. Mize, and a variety of more.

Proceeds go to Fred Hope Fund

Upon recommendation by the social commission and in agreement with the Fred Hope Committee, the UCCF Cabinet voted to contribute all Barnwarming proceeds to the Fred Hope Fund, and to use the entire Barnwarming project as a kick-off for the Fred Hope Fund Campaign (see feature article, this issue).

Held in alumni gym

The evening's activities will be centered in the alumni gym — carnival at 5:00, show at 8:00. Admission is 75 cents; tickets for booths and refreshments will be sold at the carnival. All students, faculty, and members of the community are invited.

Fort Mudge and Beyond

by Mike Moyers

Shades of Smudge

For such a closely knit group as we in the college family are, we seem to suffer from many strange misconceptions of one another. At least I hope they're misconceptions.

There is a general tendency on the part of faculty and administration to view present leaders as poor copies of the Good, those legions of cooperative officers who have passed on.

Students like to look forward to future faculty and administrators, knowing they'll be an improvement over the present situation. These opposite directions are hard to overcome; sometimes we don't.

Student Council has recently been mistaken for a small, minority cell, with definite leanings toward subversion and anarchy.

Executive Council, more often than not, is also classified as a small minority cell, but with no leanings at all. If you'll pardon a poor pun, these views are rather slanted.

Individuals too have not escaped classification. I'll just mention two of the more obvious personal misconceptions. Dean McClelland is often pictured as a sort of Scrooge, holding out the annual Christmas goose from the improverished student. Now that just isn't so—it's Miss Ware that's holding out.

Mike Moyers is sometimes misunderstood—seems he's sort of a morbid and methodic Mephistopheles. That's a heck of a way to talk about such a nice guy.

Now for a solution—and I always have one—might I just suggest an awareness of these misconceptions whch we hold. With these notions removed, or least suppressed, we should be able to be more honest with one another. I find it so much easier to breathe in an atmosphere of trust.

Nobody's Who

The Highland Echo is unable to publish the results of the Who's Who election in today's issue, contrary to an announcement in the November 11 minutes of student council.

The Echo will carry the results as soon as verification has been received from the National Association of Who's Who.

No 'Echo' Nov.28

Due to complications to publication because of the Thanksgiving holiday, there will be no Highland Echo Saturday, November 28.

Harter to attend NASM meeting

Maryville College will be represented at the fortieth annual meeting of the National Association of Schools of Music by Dr. Harry H. Harter, chairman of the department of fine arts.

The general sessions this year will be held at the Statler-Hilton in St. Louis, on November 27 and 28. Maryville College has been a member of the NASM since 1942.

The NASM has been designated by the National Committee on Accrediting as the responsible agency for the accreditation of all music degree curricula with specialization in the fields of applied music, music theory compostion, music therapy, musicology, and music as a major in liberal arts programs.

Its deliberations will play an important part in music education trends in this country during the coming years.

290 schools will be represented at the meeting.

Mr. Mair will be vespers speaker

The Reverend David T. Mair, pastor of Highland Presbyterian Church, will be the speaker at the Vespers service of Sunday, November 22, to be held in the Chapel at 7 p.m.

A native of Bronx, New York, and a graduate of Union Theological Seminary in New York City, Mr. Mair was a counselor for February Meetings last year.

He has been the pastor at Highland Church for approximately the past five years, having previously had pastorates at churches in Ohio and New York. He will be leaving December 1 to fill a position at Palmer Park Presbyterian Church in Detroit.

Choirs to present annual fall concert

The 55 voices of the women's and men's choirs singing sacred and secular music will present "Kaleidoscope of Music" at 8:15 p. m. this evening, November 21, in the theatre.

The choirs, under the direction of Lou Mize, will perform separately and combined. The three soloists of the program are Joy Hutcheson, Diane Kline, and Allan Fields.

Sig-Theta to hold winter formal

Alpha Sigma and Theta Epsilon are sponsoring the winter formal to be held Saturday, November 28, 1964, from 8 to 11:45 p.m. in the Christmas Mansion (alumni gymnasium). The theme of the dance is "An Olde Fashioned Christmas."

Mr. Layman attends meeting of AICT in Chattanooga

Frank Layman, treasurer of Maryville College, attended a meeting of the Affiliated Independent Colleges of Tennessee in Chattanooga Tuesday and Wednesday, November 17 and 18 at the Patten Hotel.

The organization, made up of four-year, non-tax supported colleges, meets each year at this time to call on industry for corporate giving to its current funds.

King College, Milligan College, Tusculum College, Carson-Newman College, Lincoln Memorial University, Belmont College, Union College, Lambeth College, Maryville College, Tennessee Wesleyan College, and Bethel College are members of AICT.

Hermann to be featured in Artists Series Patrons Concert

Herbert Hermann, pianist

The Maryville College-Community Artists Series committee will present a patrons concert featuring Herbert Hermann on Tuesday, December 1, 1964, at 8:15 in the Chapel.

Mr. Hermann, a pianist, has appeared in programs at cities throughout the United States. He received his bachelor and masters degrees as well as his doctorate in piano literature and performance from Indiana University.

Presently, Mr. Hermann is a member of the music faculty of Memphis State University. He has previously held similar positions at Queens College and the University of Kentucky.

The concert is being presented to honor the 81 members of the College-Community Patrons Association. It is open to all persons holding season tickets for Artists Series.

Speaking of vacations, the Echo is taking one too. The day off for the printers and the day off for students together has caused us to decide that we should publish the next issue December 5

* * * * * *

We'd like to say something about Letters to the Editor. They're welcome, and we can't think of any reason that we'd refuse to print one. If a letter doesn't appear immediately, it may be that we haven't had room for it, as is the case this week. We'll find it later.

* * * * * *

Not having heard any great complaints recently by anyone here, we hope that we may begin to understand each other; to tolerate each other, as Dr. Jackson so well said this week; and to trust each other, as Mr. Moyers says today.

* * * * * *

We hope for you a meaningful Thanksgiving.

Letter To The Editor

Dear Editor:

Perhaps your "mature" and "sophisticated" readers should be informed that most of them missed an outstanding concert given by the Maryville College-Community Orchestra. The student attendance — or should I say, the lack of student attendance — was pathetic.

I hope that none of the students argue for cars on campus in order to attend cultural events at the Civic Coliseum while I am within hearing distance. I'm not sure if my life insurance will pay if I die of laughter!

Harder Than Shakspere?

by Carole Brownlee

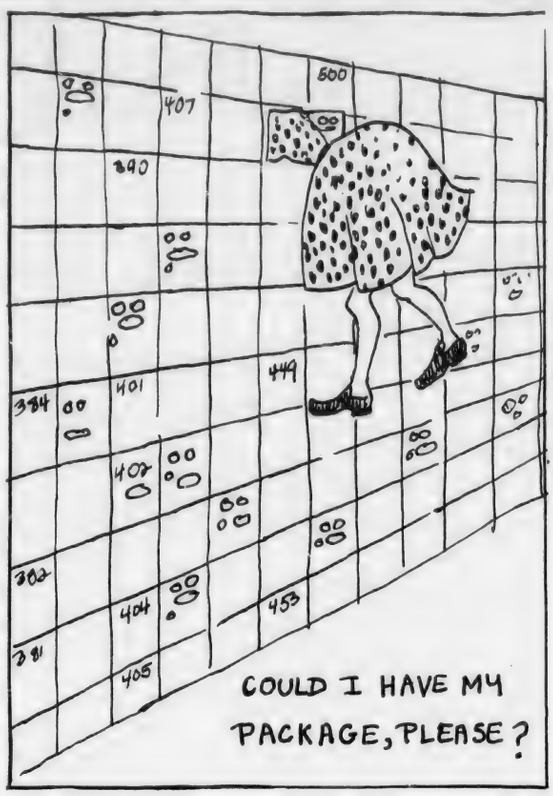
Duncan C. Bennett, Director of Information Services, has recently returned from a three day conference at the University of North Carolina, Chapel Hill. Sponsored by the American College Public Relations Association of which Maryville College is a member, the institute centered around the applications of communication research to public relations and development programs.

The conference was under the direction of thirteen experts in the field, most of whom are involved in university journalism or sociology.

One of the more interesting aspects of the presentation was a demonstration of an electronic computor used to determine the "readability" of news releases, broadcast scripts and other related material. In an analysis of the news releases sent out by Maryville College, it was found that they exceed in difficulty The Bible and Shakspere.

Among the topics discussed were the physiological, psychological and sociological bases for communication and persuasion; the relation of linguistics and semantics to "readablity" and "listenability"; and theories regarding the effects of messages on attitudes and opinions.

As a result of these meetings, Mr. Bennett sees the need for a redirection of effort in his department. Instead of concentrating on a non-existent general public, communication media should be aimed first at the students, then the parents, and finally the alumni.



GREAT SCOT...!

by Sara Parker

Assignment: read up on Fred Hope — and try to capture the excitement that proved his life . . . Conclusion: Fred Hope, hero of another generation, chancellor vanguard of past Maryville students, was one big man. Fred Hope, graduate of Maryville College, and director of the Frank James Industrial School, Elat, Cameroun, West Africa (or so it was then). To an African, "Ajap," a huge, straight, fruitful jungle tree. A man with a vision, whose generosity knew no bounds. A missionary on the West African Field for near to thirty-five years. A man with a hearty laugh, and a man who was big, hard to be forgotten.

Fred Hope, part of a tradition at Maryville College. Or perhaps I should say, from Maryville College. One of a long line of "Great Scots" who have kept ties with the Maryville community; ties which cannot be broken. A result: the continuation of the Fred Hope Fund from year to year. Not at all understood by new members of our community. The cliche Fred Hope has become only the name of a pledge drive, a committee that meets in the fall. So each year we retell the story of a great man — to remind some and acquaint others. But this fund is more than just an opportunity to participate in a missionary enterprise (although this is a valid reason in itself); there are certainly numerous other possibilities for this sort of thing. May I suggest that this Fund is rather an opportunity for each member of the Maryville community to become acquainted with and to renew the bonds of a tradition of learning — a tradition of graduates who have gone on to become "Great Scots." And the fund grows each year — thirty years of sending to Hope's work in Africa; five years to Mary Edna Smith, a Maryville graduate teaching in China; again to the Cameroun for three years; eight years to another MC graduate in India, one year to Indian students as a medical scholarship; and last year to graduates David and Mrs. Stanley for medical work in Laos. A total of some $41,000 in funds.

In light of these ties, the Fred Hope Committee has decided that the proceeds from this year's project should again be sent to the Frances Newton Hospital in Ferozepur, India. Over $12,000 has already been sent in past years, and a cable has been received this week from Dr. Dorothy Ferris, director of the hospital, suggesting her great excitement at the decision. The project efforts begin with Thanksgiving Barnwarming; the pledge drive will begin in December. Individuals and groups are encouraged to participate and to become a part of the living Great Scots, the living part of Maryville College.

Phi Notes

by Joe Thomas

To some the progress on Maryville's campus occurs slowly. To others the change which does occur appears to be a rapid degeneration of the institution. In either case, the fact of change remains.

This change, which some term "progress," is reflected in the Kappa Phi society.

Formerly the Athenian Literary Society, Phi has come a long way in the last century. In the dark days of yore prospective Athenians were brutually forced to make individual speeches before full acceptance into the society. (They say that Samuel Tyndale Wilson's knees "smote together mightily during his maiden speech.)

Now Phi pledges are only required to endure an evening of nameless terrors in the Maryville College Jungle.

In 1910 some progressive Athenians initiated the now venrated institution of dues collection, which remains strong to this day. Still, all this progress has not obliterated the Athenian spirit of sagacity, fraternity, and well-roundedness, present and growing in Phi.

In the interest of furthering progress, Beta and Phi will sponsor a skating party on Saturday, November 21. So c'mon out and progress with us.

Remember that when you say
"I will have none of this exile and this stranger
For his face is not like my face and his speech is strange,"
You have denied America with that word.

ON BEING THANKFUL IN THE FALL OF 1964

by E. Fay Campbell

Let us be thankful for people.

This world is full of all kinds of people. It is good to know some of them. It would be good to know more of them. So many of the people in the world are great. They respond to friendship. They want to be useful. It is amazing how many people overcome bad home situations, poverty, illness and ignorance.

Some people impose on friendship and affection. Most do not. It is worthwhile to take a chance. The people of the world need to find someone who will take a chance on them and trust them. Those people who distrust persons of a different color or race or economic or political philosophy do not understand the meaning of existence.

It is the genius of being truly alive to believe in people. Our first business, at Thanksgiving, is to be grateful that we belong to the human family.

Let us be thankful for our world. This is a beautiful place to live. The miracle of trees, rocks, lakes, birds, mountains, should never cease to inspire us with gratitude. For millions of years the Creator has been at work, making this home for man. We can count on it. It sustains and supports us. And we need to be thankful for our world. It is good.

Let us be thankful for institutions of government, worship, and education. The state provides order so that we can live with a degree of security and comfort. The Church provides places where we can stop to gain balance and power, where we can glorify God. The college and home educate us and teach us to grow up. They surround us with friends who share their knowledge with us. They give us affection and discipline which enable us to become mature.

Through the home and church and school we come to know the Bible, and so we get roots for our lives. Let us be thankful for these institutions in our society which enable us to become full grown human beings.

I.) Let us be honest in facing the fact that there are some things in our world which we find it almost impossible to accept. Such things as the following rob us of our trust in people:

1). Mr. Goldwater standing before an audience of some of our finest citizens and accusing some of our greatest leaders of being soft on Communism. So far as I know, at no time did Mr. Goldwater repudiate those people among his supporters who implied or stated openly that such men as Chief Justice Warren, Adlai Stevenson and Dwight Eisenhower could not be trusted in dealing with Communist countries.

It is one thing to disagree about the best way to deal with Communism, but it is a terrible thing when our leaders question the loyalty of other citizens to our American democracy.

2). A young man and young woman parading their physical attraction for one another before others, embarassing their friends and revealing that they lack a proper sense of dignity.

3). People who fear change and try to stand in the way of progress. These people forget that there is almost always a better way to do anything or everything than we have discovered. In a world in revolution they want to go back to the good old days that never were.

II.) But let us also be thankful for the people whom we find it easiest to accept. Let us be thankful for:

1). Pope John, who changed history just by being himself. He said that people were far more important than the theories they advocated.

2). Martin Luther King. He said that the streets of Birmingham might run red with blood, but if so, let it be Negro blood. No white man can ever be the same again after he has thought about that remark for half an hour.

3.) Karl Barth. He studied his Bible and allowed it to guide him. He took vital Christian faith out of his study into the world and mande mankind stir. He showed us how to get roots so that we can grow. At seventy-five he remains younger than most twenty year olds.

4.) All the teachers of the world. The men and women who get their great joy out of enabling a young person to think about some new idea. Let us be thankful for life.

Maryville Wins in Soccer, St. Bernard is 3-1 Victim

by Bill Evaul

The Maryville College soccer team won its first game of the season last Saturday against the unbeaten, thrice tied St. Bernard Saints from Alabama by a score of 3 to 1. Dr. Young, the coach of the squad, called the victory a "fine team effort."

Maryville scored three times in the first half and then clamped down on St. Bernard for the rest of the game. The Scots had complete control of the ball for the majority of the time and only the lack of power on the line prevented the score from being higher.

The Maryville squad was able to control the ball mainly through the efforts of the defensive lines and goalie Andy Dale. The Saints could find no way to pass through the halfbacks and fullbacks to gain a score.

Prudhon, Bernard Lead Scoring

The Scots broke into the lead in the first quarter when captain Red Prudhon dazzled the Saint defensive lines with his dribbling and then sizzled the ball by the goalie. But the star of the offensive line was a Bernard boy — Jim Bernard, the Scot center.

Early in the second quarter he took a Sonny Hughes pass from the side and put the ball behind the goalie. Later in the same quarter, he outraced the defense to a Bill Evaul pass from mid-field and pushed in his second goal.

Saints Notch Late Goal

The single St. Bernard tally came in the fourth period after goalie Andy Dale had made a dive to prevent a score. He punched the ball in front of the nets and Saint Inner Lou Chiozza was there a second sooner than the defense.

Others to be commended for their fine play are halfbacks Mike Mayo and Dave Parrish, fullback Dave 'Peacock' Taylor, and lineman Adam Deveney.

Seniors End Careers

This was the last game for five seniors. Co-captains Harry-Repsher and Red Prudhon ended outstanding careers. Harry Repsher, injured during the last week of practice and unable to play Saturday's game, has been an indispensable part of the defense all year, playing both halfback and fullback.

Red Prudhon has amazed many opponents with his remarkable dribbling skill and with his powerful, accurate kicks. Wing Phil Jerome is another senior who will be missed — his speed and ability make him an unequaled player on the line. Also playing their last game for the Scots were PeeWee Tongyai, who turned in a commendable job at fullback, and Don Elly, who began the year at goalie and was switched to inner at the end of the year.

Bernard Tops Scorers

The two goals scored by Jim Bernard qualified him for the honor of high scorer of the year with three goals. Dave Parrish was second, ending the season with two goals — both penalty shots. Those scoring once this season were Red Prudhon, Sonny Hughes, Bill Evaul, Bill Blackwood, and Ed Clark.

C-N Tops Scots in Finals

by Dave King

Well, you can't win them all and a 7 - 1 season record is something to be mighty proud of, but somehow it just isn't the same without a win over Carson-Newman. In case you hadn't heard, our previously undefeated Scots just couldn't get by an upset-minded Carson-Newman squad last Saturday night, as the Eagles added insult to injury and dumped the Scots, 24-14.

The Maryvillians never led in the game but the outcome wasn't decided until late in the fourth quarter as the Baptists scored an insurance touchdown.

Monroe Scores on Plunge

The game got off to an unfortunate start as the Eagles picked up a fumble in the Maryville backfield on the third play of the game and soon moved it over for a touchdown. The PAT attempt was no good, much to the delight of the enthusiastic Maryville fans, but nevertheless, the score stood at 6-0.

Late in the first quarter Maryville took over at its 46 and put together three first downs to the 10. Then, on fourth down, Benny Monroe sneaked over from the one yard line to tie up. Our point-after attempt was no good either and the score stood knotted at 6-6.

Fumble Aids Eagles

It was another Maryville fumble late in the second quarter that set up the next Carson-Newman score. With only seconds left on the clock the Eagles tried to penetrate Maryville scoring territory but had to settle for a field goal from the 14.

Slagle Scores for Scots

After the opposing schools' bands entertained (a yearly rivalry in itself) the Eagles returned to the field to pick up where they'd left off. Taking the second half kickoff it only took the Big Birds ten plays to score another touchdown and add the extra point.

The Scots again took the ball and just as it looked as though they'd have to surrender it; Mike White was roughed up as he attempted one of his long punts and we were given the ball with a first down.

Benny Monroe engineered his team downfield, handing off to Jeff Slagle and Danny Rogers and throwing to Archie Anderson until Slagle pushed over the goalline from the 1.

Slagle's run for the two points moved the score to 16-14 and the screaming Maryville fans, who refused to sit down for most of the game, began to see visions of another Scottie score in the dying seconds. Unfortunately, the Eagles weren't on the same wave length and just before the final gun, pushed through the tiring Maryville defense for a touchdown and 2 point conversion.

The last play of the game was the kickoff and Maryville's hopes for its first undefeated season since 1946 died on the playing field at Carson-Newman.

Tomlinson Deserves Praise

The loss was a hard one to take, both because it ruined our chances for our undefeated season and because nothing means more around here than a win over our arch-rivals, Carson-Newman.

For a number of us this was the last game we will see as students and the fact that it wasn't a victory was disappointing. But in the four years we've been here we've seen some mighty fine football for three years under Coach Baird and this year under new Head Coach Tomlinson.

In the past four years the football Scots have won 25 and lost only 8, four of those losses coming in one season.

The real significance of this mark is that we are a school of about 800 with no athletic scholarships as such, playing schools considerably larger than we are (Carson-Newman has 1557 students this year) who have 3 or 4 strings on scholarships.

Coach Tomlinson, a man whom the players respect very much, had a crew this year that he could rightly be proud of. We, as students, are certainly proud of the fine showing our boys made this year and wish them the best of luck for next year.

Alpha Sigma Wins 'Shoe' Game; Sledgehammers Take Championship

The Sledgehammers of Alpha Sigma dominated play in the intramural football league this fall. They began by marching through regular season play without a defeat, and then climaxed their season with a 26 to 12 victory over Kappa Phi in the Stinking Shoe game.

The Stinking Shoe game is the annual post-season game that matches the all-stars of the two societies against each other. The Kappa Phi squad was constituted with members from the Eagles and the Spartans while Alpha Sigma was represented by the Sledgehammers.

Kappa Phi opened the scoring when Rich Marshall passed to center Dare Hutchinson in the end zone after a brilliant reception by Ken Young had placed the ball deep in Alpha Sigma territory. The extra point attempt failed and Phi had a 6 to 0 lead.

At this point, however, the powerful Sledgehammer offense began to function efficiently. On the strong arm of Jerry Stewart, Sig's fine senior quarterback, they moved to three touchdowns before the half time break. Stewart passed for touchdowns to Bill Schellinger and John Agnew.

Sonny Hughes and Red Prudhon also caught Stewart passes to add PAT's to the Sig total. The third Sig touchdown in the first half occurred when Buck Petty carried the ball across the goal line on a burst through the middle of the line.

Returning from the half time break with a 20 to 6 lead, the Sledges added one more score to their total. Again it was a Stewart pass, this time to Joe Scheidler, that earned the six points.

Kappa Phi also added to their total when John Livingston caught a long pass from Rich Marshall and ran for the six points. However, the Sig defense was strong and repulsed all other Kappa Phi attempts to preserve their 26 to 12 margin and earn the victory.

Lest We Forget

What is an Independent Study? The sum total of two semesters' work, crowded into the month before Christmas. . . Long nights and gallons of coffee, or cokes, or . . . How many pages of legal pad make one typed page? . . . But I write bigger than most people . . . I know they say quality is more important than quantity, but 15 pages?? I spent three hours a day with those mice this summer — what more could anyone ask? . . . Can you graduate with a D in Special Studies? . . . I'm going to bed now — wake me up at 4 a.m. . . . Get up! It's ten til eight! . . . What happens if you don't finish? . . . Why didn't I transfer after my sophomore year? . . . Yamayama . . . Read Galatians before you work on your Independent Study: it will help . . . Security is putting the last period after the last sentence . . .

At this point, the Independent Study program is probably the most maligned, misunderstood portion of our curriculum.

But I have a feeling that, come January 9, we seniors may feel a little more benevolent toward the idea. And probably by the time we leave here, we'll be downright grateful that we had such an opportunity.

There are aspects of the program which need to be studied: the expense involved; the unfortunate fact that many juniors do not give enough thought to the selection of a topic before they are forced to decide; the need for a more consistent style manual.

But on the whole, we at Maryville can be grateful for Special Studies. The opportunity is there for a year of satisfying effort.

Christmas Vesper service is Sunday

The combined College and women's and men's choirs will sing at the Christmas Vesper service at 7 p. m., Sunday, December 6, in the chapel.

Also to be featured are Christmas poems to be read by Dr. Elizabeth Jackson, and "Laud to the Nativity", with Lou S. Mize conducting.

Soloists included in program

Vocal soloists include Carole Webster, soprano, as the angel; Martha Hall, soprano, as Mary; and James Breckenridge, tenor, as the shepherd.

The choreography by Cheryl VanMetre consists of Rebecca Smith as Mary, Dale Schellenger as Joseph, Sarajune Schue, soloist, as the angel, and an angel chorus and shepherds. There will be instrumental accompaniment by a woodwinds quintet, piano and the Lambert Memorial organ.

Tree lighting to follow

An official lighting ceremony of the campus Christmas tree will take place immediately after Vespers.

The Student Council in conjunction with MSC and WSGA will sponsor this project. This year the tree will be placed in the L-shaped area between President Copeland's and Dean Pres-Clelland's offices.

The tree will be put up this afternoon and decorated Sunday afternoon with the help of all interested persons. Classes and organizations are encouraged to contribute appropriate decorations and ornaments for the tree over the next ten days.

Dr. Thomas to speak for Fred Hope Fund

On Wednesday, December 9, The Reverend Winburn T. Thomas, secretary of interpretation and stewardship of the United Presbyterian Church of the United States of America, will speak in chapel for the Fred Hope Fund.

Dr. Thomas holds degrees from Oklahoma University, McCormick Theological Seminary. and Yale University. He spent 30 years as a missionary, representing the church on every continent.

Following his return to the United States in 1958, he served two years as visiting Professor of Missions at McCormick Theological Seminary in Chicago. He has also lectured at all of the United Presbyterian Theological Seminaries, and has given a series of missionary lectures at Yale, Virginia, Austin, Princeton, and the Presbyterian Theological Seminary in Mexico City.

Students attend science meeting

Joseph Futcher, John Riddle and John Chaki represented Maryville College at the annual meeting of the Tennessee Academy of Sciences held at Memphis State University November 27 and 28.

Topics of interest at the collegiate division meeting were a paper on Freidel-Crafts Isomerization of Xylenes using AlBr3 and HBrOS Catalysts by Riley C. Garner of Southwestern University, Memphis, and a laser built by Sam M. Goodson, a senior physics major at the University of Chattanooga.

The laser will be at Maryville College for the Eastern Regional section meeting in the spring over which the current president, John Chaki, will preside.

Volunteer from the Peace Corps to speak on Tues.

Robert L. McAndrews

Robert L. McAndrews from the office of public affairs of the Peace Corps will speak in chapel Tuesday, December 3.

As a Peace Corps volunteer Mr. McAndrews spent two years in Kpaiyea, Liberia, where he taught elementary school enabling Liberian teachers, many of whom had no education beyond the eighth grade level, to be free for additional schooling. He set up the first library there and showed the villagers the organizational techniques of such.

A graduate of San Fernando Valley State College, California, where he was a psychology major, Mr. McAndrews has done graduate work in philosophy and anthropology.

The chapel service will be extended.

College executives attend meetings

President Joseph J. Copeland and Dean Frank D. McClelland attended the annual meeting of the Southern Association of Colleges and Schools held in Louisville, Kentucky, November 30 to December 3.

Maryville College is accredited with this association.

Phi Notes

by Joe Thomas

Thanks to the work of the willing and willful pledges, the Phi house is complete. Last Saturday the house got the finishing touches which, along with our new floor surface, give every Phi just cause for pride and enthusiasm.

Kappa Phi, recognizing the deeper meanings of the Christmas season, will be collecting food for a Christmas basket for some needy families. Each Phi is asked to donate at least one can of food to the basket.

For every twenty cans donated Phi will add one turkey for the family. In this way we hope to give some people a truly merry Christmas.

JUST WAIT

Holmes Hall
Cambridge 38, Mass.
November 11, 1964

Dear Miss Ware,

I promised I'd write you about the food here, and Veterans' Day is a holiday, so here goes.

They eat on cafeteria style here — it's a pretty large cafeteria, equipped to handle about 1500 a meal I think. Prices are reasonable, but you usually end up paying 75 cents for breakfast and a dollar to a dollar and a half for other meals.

Or you can get a special "contract" where you get certain specified items each meal, and it costs 17 dollars a week for a 21-meal week, This is a pretty reasonable way to eat, and you get fair quantity — I haven't figured it up to see how it would compare with Maryville in price, but I'm sure it's somewhat more.

At any rate, even though you can get quite a bit more variety at every meal here than you could at Maryville, I'm appreciating your food at Maryville more every day!

In the beginning, all of the different dishes here seemed good, but now it seems like they have the same things day after day, and they always taste sort of tasteless.

Worse, the food is often pretty cold because the cafeteria style, even with modern heaters, etc, just makes it impossible to keep food fresh.

Another advantage which I never appreciated at Maryville was having someone who knew and cared enough about food to prepare a balanced meal. Here, on cafeteria style, it's easy to eat too much of one thing and not enough of another, and as a result, digestion problems are frequent.

In all, let me compliment you — a little late, I guess — on the job you're doing at Maryville. Your food always showed that you cared about how it tasted; here I often think they just want to get the job done.

Also, I remember you would always try a new dish on request, and they just stick to the same old routine here.

Don't let the complainers get you down; they'll appreciate what you're doing after they get out and have to eat somewhere else.

Best wishes,
Dave Marston

Beta Notes

by Anne Smith

Beta and Phi want to thank Sue Foreman and the Beta pledges for the dinner in the Y rooms Thursday for our hard-fighting Stinking Shoe football players. The food was good and so was the entertainment.

All Beta members are asked to see Judy Butler before Christmas to be sure all pledges have big sisters. Several activities involving big-little sisters are planned for after Christmas.

After the basketball game with Berry Saturday night, Chi Beta is sponsoring a dance for the student body.

To Sleep: Perchance to Dream

by Dave Powell

Time was when there was nothing — not black nor space nor cold nor sweet nor yes. This was neither before time nor after. It was. And is. . .

From nothing there came nothing, and God saw that it was good and allowed as how the delusion of description and classification was all right with Him if Man wanted it that way. As yet Man was a nothing — he was phosphorus and calcium, except, of course, that phosphorus and calcium were nothing because Man wasn't around to name them. And God chuckled thinking that Man might someday name calcium "root beer" and never know the difference.

So it was that the restlessness of Static became Life, and Life, looking for the mechanism as is its custom, became Man who, indignant at not being allowed in on the secrets from the first, proposed some secrets of his own — like language and war.

Wondering at the uselessness of space he shortly sent out a few tentative, cautious prayers — prayer being Man's longing for his original nothingness.

The uneasy, wandering people of Now would urge the poets, "Is it not a dream that has built our world?" and "Lord, what dream envisioned a teardrop before its reality?" The poets were content with brief flights into the infinite and the people were content with the poets.

Then one day, just like that, a great bus pulled up alongside the universe and flung open its doors. Naturally there were a number of adventurous souls who hastened to get aboard leaving behind them a multitude of vacant men who piddled around in their gardens awhile and shortly were turned into useful phosphorus and calcium upon which dandelions and peonies thrive.

As the bus pulled away from Earth the people could hardly contain their excitement. Down the aisles the word was passed, "We're going home."

Dear Editor:

Many thanks to the Echo for printing the ever pertinent opinion of Mr. Richard C. Gossweiler. Shame, Shame. Thrice shame.

As to his life insurance, I might just say it would be tragic to lose Mr. Gossweiler without some remuneration.

Massey, Bushing Attend Conference

by Louise Crawford

Dean Massey and Dean Bushing have recently attended a conference for presidents and student personnel deans held in St. Louis, Missouri, from October 25-27. It was sponsored by the Presbyterian College Union of the United Presbyterian Church and had 57 Presbyterian-related colleges represented.

The purpose of this conference as stated in a bulletin from the Board of Christian Education of the United Presbyterian Church was "to help give concerted thought to the problems of campus life posed by the changing value standards and patterns of behavior in our society as they are reflected by college students."

The conference centered around group discussions and three addresses. The keynote address by Dr. Cole, president of Lake Forest College, emphasized that student interests, the racial problem, the political campaigns, and the Peace Corps contribute to the make-up of today's student. In later adolescence the student needs guidance to aid him in avoiding emotional harm, just as in childhood he was guided to keep himself from physical injury.

The second address entitled "Ethics and Law the Relationship Between Students and College" by Dr. Wise of the Danforth Foundation presented an opposing viewpoint.

The last address was by the recent director of training for the Peace Corps. He spoke on "Student Dedication in the Sixties."

In addition to these addresses, the conference was divided into six study groups. Each group was given a topic pertinent to colleges today. Resource papers were available for background research. There were also resource people of national recognition who served as leaders.

Dean Massey attended the group on student attitudes. A major discussion centered on the question concerning the responsibility of a church-related college in regard to drinking and the ways that this problem should be met.

Dean Bushing was in the group studying the legal rights of students. This discussion brought out the universality of certain problems and new trends of thinking on them. One trend today is away from the college's interference between students and local officials. This means that the student alone would be responsible if he broke the law and should take the consequences.

The value of this conference lay in its broadening effect. Through meeting with representaives from other colleges, a clearer perspective of Maryville's particular problems was gained.

In order to catch up on the past events of the women's intramural program, it will be necessary to take a backward glance. A review of soccer shows that Theta Epsilon came out on top 6-0.

The Women's Athletic Association is now in the midst of volleyball with four teams representing Theta Epsilon, four teams representing Chi Beta, and one team representing the women of the faculty.

As of November 24 Chi Beta had won six, Theta Epsilon five, and the faculty one.

On December 7, there will be an all-star game played by the best players selected from each society. This game is to be at 6:30 in the Alumni Gym before the varsity University of Chattanooga game.

The society swim meet will be at 3:45 on Tuesday, December 8.

The second annual intercollegiate swim playday will be on December 12 with representatives from Virginia Intermont, Carson Newman, and Maryville. Nancy White and Arlene Larsen are coaching the team. The meet begins at 9:00 A.M., and everyone is invited to attend.

So far this year, the Women's Athletic Association has put forth a program which has been well organized, well operated, and well supported. If this pace is kept up, the program will continue, without a doubt, to be a most successful one.

Confidence, Desire Keys to Cage Success

Moyers McGowan Clark Martin Mitchell Llewellyn Meyers

Although lacking in height, experience and letterman. Coach Boydson Baird is enthusiastic about the chances of the 1964-65 edition of the Maryville College basketball team.

Promising that "the boys will be ready," Baird went on to say that he hopes to show improvement over last year.

Baird's optimism would seem unfounded in light of the fact that only three lettermen return from last year's team. Senior Kip Martin, who captained the team in the 1963-64 season, junior Denny McGowan, and senior Mike Moyers are the veterans.

A second factor that casts doubt on optimistic forecasts is the problem of injuries. Both Martin and McGowan are nursing ailments. It is hoped that McGowan will be ready for the opener against Shorter College, but Martin is definitely out until after the holidays.

Pre-Season Practices Lengthened

Baird bases his optimism on two factors. The first of these is the fact that the Scots will be better prepared to open the season than they have been in past years. Freed from his duties as head football coach, Baird has been able to devote his abilities solely to the progress of the basketball squad.

The lengthened pre-season practice schedule should result in superior conditioning and better coordination of the offensive patterns.

Improved Personnel

Baird's second cause for optimism is improved personnel. Heading the newcomers to the squad is Bob Clark, a 6-0 sophomore guard. Clark could be the key to the success of the team.

A good ball handler and shooter, Clark has a strong chance to lead the team in scoring, but more important, he could develop into a floor leader who would help mold the team into a unit.

Dave Alexander, who saw much experience in the first half of the season last year, is another non-letterman that Baird is counting on heavily. The tallest member of the team at 6-3½, Alexander will start at center for the Scots.

He is a good jumper and should be a major asset in Maryville's efforts to control the offensive and defensive boards. Alexander needs experience in working in the center slots before he develops into a first rate basketball player.

Jack Llewellyn came to the team at the start of the second semester last year. Llewellyn's major asset is an excellent outside shot that is both quick and accurate.

His marksmanship should force the Scots' opponents to abandon the zone defense in favor of a man-to-man which would leave them vulnerable to the clever drives of Clark.

Moyers, McGowan start at forwards

Llewellyn, Alexander, and Clark are all scheduled for starting assignments. Rounding out the first team will be forwards Mike Moyers and Denny McGowan.

Moyers (6-3) is big, strong, and fast. He has learned how to use his strength under the boards and should help Alexander with the rebounding chores. Moyers' major problem is erratic scoring, collecting anywhere from two to twenty points per game.

At the other forward spot is Denny McGowan (6-2), a much improved ball player. Possessed with good jumping ability, he has adopted a more aggresive nature under the boards. He has good moves and has improved on his outside shooting.

Mitchell, Meyers Head Reserves

Heading the substitutes are Danny Mitchell and Gary Meyers. Mitchell is the most improved player on the team. A good jumper and rebounder, Mitchell's major deficiency lies in lack of experience.

Meyers is a 5-8 guard who will see much action. He has established himself as a hustling, alert ball player.

Mike Dalton, an outstanding end on the football team and an experienced basketball player, and Darrell Stoker will also see much duty. Tom Ellis, Benny Headrick, James Hogue, and Jeff Slagle round out the team.

Success is Possible

The prospects of the team do not merit excessive optimism. However, pessimism is not in order either. There are several factors that could give the squad a winning record.

The first of these is the need to develop a strong floor leader. Without the benefit of scholarships. Maryville is consistently outclassed man per man. If the team is to compile a winning record, they will have to be a strong and closely knit unit, under the direction of a single play maker.

The second quality that must be developed is a combination of pride, confidence, and desire. These three elements transformed a group of outweighed football players into one of the finest small college teams in the South.

If the basketball squad can develop this quality, it is capable of posting a respectable record.

Knoxville N-S Names Four Scots to Area All-Stars

Maryville College capped its 7-1 football record by having four men named to the Knoxville News-Sentinel's All-Area college football team.

The squad was dominated by Carson-Newman which placed five men on the first team. Two members of the Emory & Henry Wasps rounded out the squad.

Monroe Heads Squad

Heading the team was Maryville's quarterback, Benny Monroe. Monroe led the Scots in rushing with 363 yards and in passing with 671 yards on 33 completions in 62 attempts. Carson-Newman's coach Bob Davis called Monroe "a truly great small college quarterback, deserving the highest possible honors."

Abbott, Dalton, Pryor Also Named

Monroe's favorite receiver, Mike Dalton, was given a first team berth. Dalton hauled in 21 passes for 488 yards and seven touchdowns.

Jim Pryor, 230 pound offensive and defensive standout, was named to a first team tackle spot, and co-captain Clint Abbott was switched from his guard position to center on the News-Sentinel's team to round out Maryville's first team representatives.

End Sonny Webb, guard Charles Berry, halfback Roland McClanahan, and halfback Jeff Slagle were given spots on the second team.

A Very Merry Crispness

For those so deeply involved in the pursuit of academic excellence that they've lost all track of time, we point out, with reluctance, that there are only five-more-waiting-days til Christmas vacation, a fact easily verified by the nearest calendar and|or freshman.

Although this is cause for joy in most circles, there are certain inherent dangers in going-home-for-Christmas that need be brought to the general attention.

The acclimation to the home environment is a vigorous process, and has brought disaster to many. Seniors well remember the tragic case of Bob Orr, who, on Christmas Eve of 1961, tied up Holland Tunnel traffic for fully three hours while he hid under the dashboard of his car, convinced that the toll collector was the Dean of Men, out to get him for dating a girl without car permission.

Fortunately, he soon recalled that she was his mother.

There are rewards to the readjustment process, however. Think of taking your date home with no thought of burglar alarms, and without the strong glare of the New Dorm anti-rape lights.

On the other hand, brace yourself for drastic variation in food; only the well-prepared can steel themselves to facing Sunday supper over a plate, rather than a bag. But then you could always convince yourself that you had donated yours to the Adam Clayton Powell retirement fund, or some other worthy cause.

A trip to town will also require adjustment. That fancy two-step you perfected in downtown Maryville, while dodging the frequent misfirings at the Saturday afternoon meetings of the Sons of the Confederacy and Cuspidor, is likely to prove a bit conspicuous in, say, Bayonne, New Jersey, or Youngstown, Ohio.

Still, Maryville does have its advantages. The grand exalted umlaut and the K.K.K. at the gates proved no addition to campus beauty, but then neither were James Farmer and the boys from C.O.R.E., on South Broad in the city of brotherly love last summer.

We might also mention several topics that won't make for enlightening conversation about the family supper table. Remember, forget your three for Bible books, don't mention the overcuts in chapel, drop all reference to special studies, censor remarks

College given $30,000 grant

The Lilly Endowment, Inc., of Indianapolis, Ind., has made a grant of $30,000 to Maryville College for use in a "Visiting Scholar and Faculty Improvement Program," according to an announcement today by Maryville President, Joseph J. Copeland.

The program provides financial resources to bring selected scholars from other colleges and universities to the Maryville campus to participate in its academic program, or to send members of the Maryville faculty to other institutions for advanced study under one or more of these men.

To begin second semester

The scholars involved in the program come from twenty-nine educational institutions, including several in foreign countries such as England, Italy, and Germany. The College may invite them to come to Maryville as lecturers, visiting professors for a semester or a year, and consultants to individual faculty members, or to participate in conferences, symposiums, debates, and special summer session programs. Or Maryville professors themselves may do research and advanced study under one or more of the designated scholars.

No time limit exists for expenditure of the grant. Plans are now being formulated, and individual scholars are being chosen for participation in the Maryville program. It is expected that beginning phases of the program will be under way in the second semester of the current academic year.

Copeland comments

In commenting on the grant, President Copeland said,

"We are most grateful to have this grant at this particular time because it becomes a part of our Development Fund Campaign, which will come to a close on Jan. 1, 1965. Included in this program was a sum for improvement of Faculty preparation for which the Lilly Endowment grant will be applied directly."

Chemistry instructor receives an award

The Frederick Gardner Cottrell grant has been awarded to Dr. David P. Young of the chemistry department by the Research Corporation.

The $2000 grant is for support of the research program in chemistry begun at Maryville College in 1963. It will pay for equipment, chemicals, and student assistance in the program.

Research will begin second semester and continue through the summer.

College-Community to present 'Messiah'

Fred Hope Fund campaign begins

Dr. Winburn T. Thomas, Secretary of Interpretation and Stewardship of the United Presbyterian Church in the U.S.A., spoke at the Maryville College Chapel service Wednesday, December 9, on behalf of the annual Fred Hope Fund campaign.

The Fred Hope Fund campaign is a fund-raising campaign among Maryville students and friends who choose the project to be aided. Funds raised this year will go to the Frances Newton Hospital in Ferozepore, India, where they will be used to provide equipment for a laboratory technician course.

Miss Hunter travels to Near East cities

Miss Nancy B. Hunter, formerly secretary to the President, left Monday, November 23, for Teheran where she plans to work as secretary for Park Johnson who is with the American Mission School.

Miss Hunter had originally planned to go to India to work for Dorothy Ferris, M. D., at the Frances Newton Hospital in East Punjah. Her intended trip there was cancelled due to complications involved in obtaining a visa from the Indian government. She had spent four months working at the hospital in 1958.

After leaving Maryville, Miss Hunter stayed in New York for two days to do some sightseeing. From there she flew to Cairo, Jerusalem, Beirut and finally to Teheran.

Christmas readings to follow 'Messiah' on Sunday evening

The annual Christmas readings sponsored by the U. C. C. F. Social Commission, will be held tomorrow evening, December 13, at 7 p. m. in the dining hall.

The readers will include Dr. Edwin Hunter, Mr. Thomas Jones, Martha Cook, Martha Hess, and Richard Boyd. Dr. Hunter will read Christmas poetry he has written. There will be special music provided and caroling.

Following the readings Hal Laster will lead caroling around the campus to the homes of the Deans, Morningside and the House-in-the-Woods.

Nancy Buckwalter and Bill Erwin, who are in charge of the event, urge those planning to attend to bring a blanket to sit on in the dining hall, and to dress warmly.

UPUSA magazine accepts articles by Dr. Swenson

The Board of Christian Education of the United Presbyterian Church in the U. S. A. has accepted for publication three articles written by Dr. Esther C. Swenson, Assistant Professor of Sociology and Christian Education at Maryville College.

The articles are entitled "Church Education: Its Dependence Upon Proclamation," "The Dependence of Teaching Upon the Searching of Scriptures," and "Worship and Its Fulfillment." They are to be published in the church's magazine entitled "Counsel" in October, 1966, January, 1967, and April, 1967.

Alpha Gamma Sigma scholarship winner named

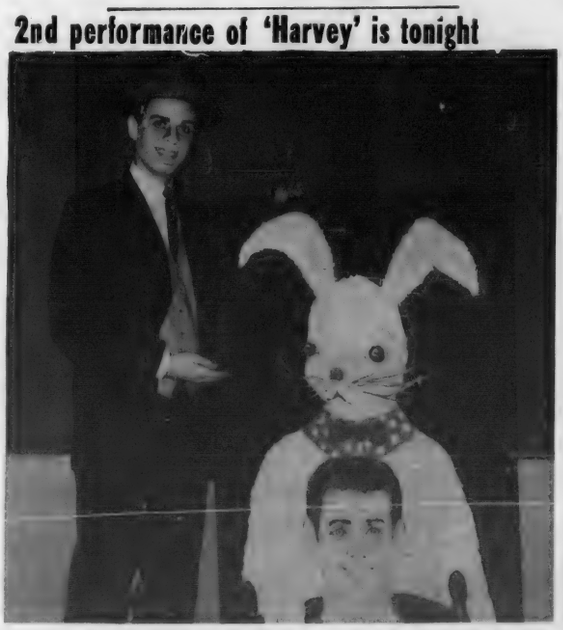
Miss Louise Crawford, daughter of Mr. and Mrs. Hugh Crawford, is the holder this year of the annual Alpha Gamma Sigma Scholarship Award.

The award is made possible by the alumni members of the Maryville College scholarship honor society. They have provided a fund to establish a scholarship which is awarded to the incoming Junior with the highest scholarship record in his class and who is judged superior in character, campus citizenship, and leadership.

Chorus, orchestra number over 300

The 32nd annual presentation by Maryville College of Handel's "Messiah" will be at 3 p.m. Sunday, December 13, in the chapel. Dr. Harry H. Harter, fine arts department chairman, will direct the chorus of 262 voices and 13 soloists and the 40-piece College-Community Orchestra.

The work is divided into three parts. Part I is the prophecy and the nativity; Part II the crucifixion and resurrection, ending with the "Halleujah Chorus"; and Part III is the promise of immortality. Because the total work is considered too long for a single presentation, almost all of Part I will be performed along with most of Parts II and III. The final chorus, "Worthy Is the Lamb," will be sung, followed by the concluding "Amen Chorus."



Members of the music faculty taking part include Dr. James Bloy, organist, Mrs. Sallie Schoen, harpsichordist, Kent Perry, concertmaster, and Mrs. Linda Perry, pianist.

The annual presentation of the "Messiah" for many years has drawn capacity crowds, and the 1200-seat chapel in recent years been overfull, with extra seating in the aisles and narthex.

Mr. Lindahl returns from meeting in S.C.

Roy E. Lindahl, Jr., Assistant Professor of Classical Languages at Maryville College, recently returned from a meeting of the Southern Section of the classicists held in Charleston, S. C., Nov. 26-28.

2nd performance of 'Harvey' is tonight

The invisible white rabbit will reappear this evening at 8:15 as the Maryville College Playhouse again presents the prize-winning comedy, Harvey, in the theatre. Alan Childs is shown above as Elwood P. Dowd.

Lip service

Well, there is a variety of things we could say, like Boy, we can hardly wait for Christmas vacation; or Boy, we can hardly wait for independent study to be finished; or Boy, we can hardly wait for Mama's cooking; or Boy, we can hardly wait to get drunk.

But we think probably the more mature thing to do would be to look upon it all as worthwhile, even if the temptation is to cry, Vanity of vanities; all is vanity.

After three-two weeks at home, we shall long for the first chapel service and the welcome by Dr. McClelland (don't misunderstand—we like our home, but we like Dr. McClelland too).

* * * * * *

Tomorrow we will hear The Messiah for the seventh year straight. That is, we will have either heard or have sung in it for seven straight years. This year we hear. There is probably no other occasion we await with so much eagerness or regret so much its being over. Don't miss it. Go.

* * * * * *

We have noticed what looks like repair work being done on the Fine Arts Center. This too we have awaited eagerly. We didn't mean to get into this, but we do think it's shameful to let a building which is, at least architecturally, so good, become so worn.

* * * * * *

We would like to apologize for the mistake in Echo last week. We don't know how we got the impression that Mr. McAndrews was speaking in chapel. We caused some people some embarrassment, which we regret. We do realize the importance of reporting the truth.

A Lesson

by Sandra Chittick

Christmas Vespers had ended and an enthusiastic group walked to the Sunnybrook area to do a Christmas good deed. The notes were sour, however, as lights snapped off, doors slammed, a man menaced, and a car zoomed past. The "Christmas spirit" was sobered, replaced by a new realization as the poor little rich kids trudged back to the safety of the Hill.

Letters To The Editor

Dear Editor:

On reading in "Phi Notes" of Kappa Phi's attempt to give needy families "a truly merry Christmas" by means of Christmas baskets, the idea was brought home again that such gestures are just so much . . . superficiality.

However noble the thought, it is along the same lines as the Christmas caroling fiasco in the Sunnybrook area. Speaking as a member of a family that has been at times (to our surprise) on the receiving end of such charitable Christmas baskets, my reactions to them have been those of mild resentment and amusement at the feeble efforts of do-gooders. I can only imagine the intensification of such feelings on the part of those whose situation is so much worse.

I have no right to be critical of people with good intentions: I can only say that we should be thinking of ways to get down to the basics in trying to solve such problems as poverty. I'm not offering any suggestions, only asking for some.

Sincerely,
Sandy Haggart

Dear Miss Easterly,

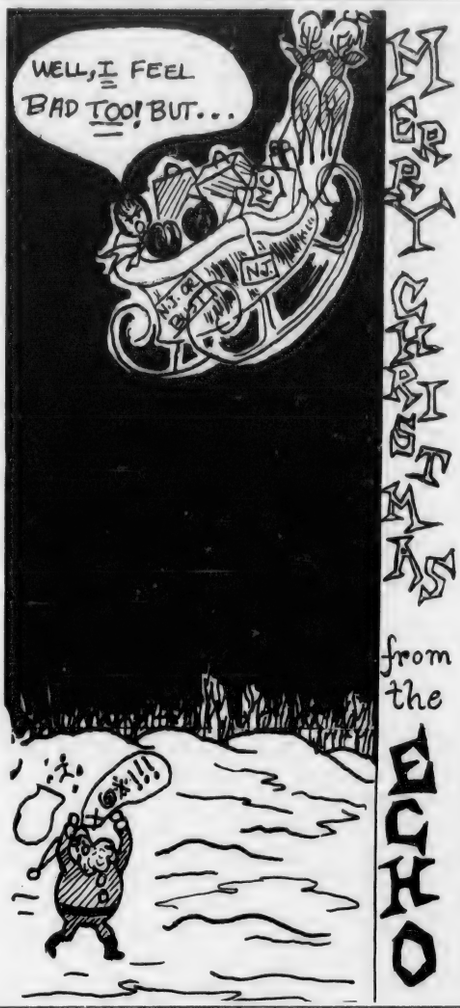
I vehemently protest the article concerning the basketball team which appeared in the December 5 edition of the Echo.

It is neither right nor correct to print derogatory opinions about a group with which one has a personal attachment and which one represents.

Such lines "Baird's optimism would seem unfounded in light of the fact that only three lettermen return from last year's team"; "Alexander needs experience in working the center slots before he develops into a first rate basketball player"; "Moyers' major problem is erratic scoring"; and "A good jumper and rebounder. Mitchell's major deficiency lies in lack of experience" are anything but praiseworthy and speak only of the ignorance of their author.

Since there is not a byline to the article, I cannot be sure Mr. Jerome wrote it; but that is not important; what is important is that the author develop a decent attitude before he again attempts to report on anything, whether it be basketball or basket weaving.

There is an old song which might well serve as a rule of thumb in the future. Its first line is, "If you can't say good things about your neighbor, don't say nothin' at all."



Respectively, (sic)
Charles L. Petze III

Talented Frosh Strengthen Wrestling Team

Blessed with a wealth of talented newcomers and a solid core of veterans, Coach J. D. Davis' 1964-65 edition of the Maryville College wrestling team promises to be one of the strongest in recent years.

The strong freshman turn-out helps, in part, to compensate for the loss of several key performers in the 1963-64 season who were counted on to head this year's squad.

Roy Ries, Gary Hall, Van Pallas, and Joe Kucinski are all established performers who did not return. Ries, Hall, and Kucinski won medals in the SEC tournament last year.

Wilie Heads 115 Class

In the 115 class, Coach Davis will have Tom Wilie. Wilie reported to the team several weeks late and is not yet in top condition. However, he is hard worker and is learning rapidly. He is a conservative wrestler, but could develop into a fine grappler.

Henderson Better than Baxter

John Henderson, the 123 pounder, is the best of the newcomers. Bringing four years of high school experience with him, he is fast and knowledgeable, but must learn to adapt to the style of college wrestling.

It is inevitable that he will be compared with Jim Baxter, one of the great wrestlers in Maryville College history. Coach Davis states that Henderson at present is better than Baxter, when the three time SEC champion was a freshman.

Johnson Brings Experience

The 130 pound class is headed by yet another freshman — Ralph Johnson. Johnson also brings four years of experience to the team. The Long Island freshman is another conservative wrestler who would rather ride a man for a victory by points than take a chance on a pin.

He had a string of 26 victories that stretched back to his sophomore year in high school before he lost a close decision at Applachian last week. Johnson will be backed up by Steve Hodgson and John Mullendore.

Lettermen Mitchell Heads 137 Class

Will Mitchell, a letterman, will be the Scots' representative in the 137 pound class. According to Davis, Mitchell has great potential. He is fast, experienced and aggressive. Futhermore, he has dropped debate so he may devote full time to developing his skills on the mat.

Behind Mitchell are Dale Hudler, a veteran with three years' experience who will win many exhibition bouts, and Gene Keeler.

Dixon Wrestles at 147

The 147 pound division finds Gene Dixon, another veteran letterman, in control. He is strong and fairly fast. Although Davis feels that Dixon ought to be at 137, he will give anyone in the heavier weight class a tough battle with his aggressive style. Hal Shultz, Lee Davis, and George Patton will back up Dixon.

Frosh Nicholas Top Grappler

Bob Nicholas, another excellent freshman prospect, is the 157 pounder on the team. Strong, fast and a good rider, Nicholas' only drawback is that he doesn't take full advantage of his vast knowledge of holds.

Nicholas will be pushed by Don Shields, a letterman. Shields is another wrestler with a good knowledge of holds, pins, and reverse. Because he has not been able to beat Nicholas, Shields is wrestling at 167 at present.

Although he is extremely aggressive, Shields is not big enough for this weight class, and ought to be in the 147 pound division

O'Bryan, Gehman struggle at 177

Pat O'Bryan and Carl Gehare battling for the 177 pound berth. O'Bryan is not exceptionally big, fast, or strong. However, he has a good mental attitude and works fairly hard, giving him the edge over Gehman in the division.

Gehman is exceptionally strong and is learning fast. He will make O'Bryan work to keep his top rating. John Forgety also wrestles in the 177 pound division.

Abbot — Best on Team

Clint Abbott, co-captain of the football team, is the 191 pounder on the team. According to Davis, Abbott might be the best man on the team. He is fast, aggressive, and smart. In addition he had good strength.

Abbott reported late because of the football season, and he has not yet rounded into shape. When he does this and moves down into the 177 pound class where he does his best work, Abbott's experience and terrific determination will make him one of the top Scot performers.

Pryor Shows Improvement

Another football star, Jim Pryor, handles the heavyweight duties. Pryor went out for the first time last year to fill a gap in the top division. Short on experience, Pryor had a rough season.

However, he has made great strides over the year and will surprise many of his heavyweight foes. Against Milligan, for example, Pryor lost by a pin last year. In this year's encounter, the Milligan heavyweight was fortunate to win, topping Pryor by a single point.

When Pryor rounds into shape, he will provide the Scots with strength in his division that they had not counted on before.

Scots Split First Two Matches

The Scots have already had two matches this year. In their first encounter, they defeated Milligan Colleges 26 to 8. They were less fortunate in their second match, losing to Appalachian State, 25 to 3.

John Henderson copped the only victory for the Highlanders. However, the meet with Appalachian was far closer than the lop-sided score would indicate In almost every class, only a few points separated the two wrestlers. After the match, the Applachian coach told Davis that the current crop of Maryville wrestlers is "the strongest team Maryville's ever had."

Coach Davis himself has said that the team this year "is better than it was at the close of the season last year." The overall outlook is bright. Coach Davis' grapplers should present the college with the finest team it has had in recent years.

The gallery in which the reporters sit has become a fourth estate of the realm.

Cagers Drop Two Openers; Moyers, Clark Pace Team

The Maryville College basketball team got off to a poor start, losing their first two games of the season. Shorter College turned back the Scots 74-30 two nights before the Highlanders were turned back by Berry College, 54-38.

Scots Outclassed by Shorter

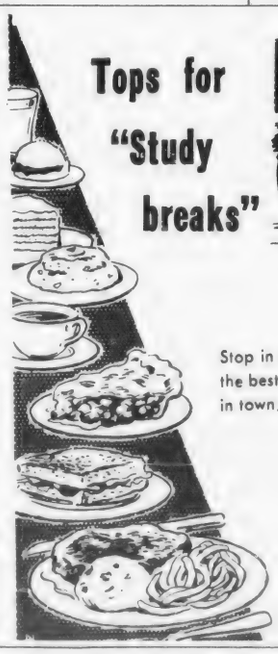
Against Shorter, the Scots were plainly outclassed. Pitted against much taller opponents, Maryville was unable to keep Shorter off the boards, and the Georgia team moved to a solid 74-30 victory.

Mike Moyers paced the Scots with seven points. He was followed by Dave Alexander who tallied six.

Show Improvement Against Berry

The Maryville squad did considerably better against Berry. Running their shuffle offense against Berry's man to man defense, the Scots came on with a surge just before half-time to take the lead and then lose it by one point on a last-second basket.

In the second half, the Georgia school put on a spurt and pulled away from the Highlanders to register a 54 to 38 victory.



Moyers, Alexander Top Scorers

Once again the Maryville team was led by Moyers in scoring. The senior history major netted 12 points. Alexander and Bob Clark followed Moyers in scoring, collecting 8 and 7 points respectively.

Clark also did a fine job directing the Scots' offense against the zone thrown up by Berry in the second half.

PMA

It has been supposed in the past that all Maryville alumni had either died or entered the ministry or some other form of poverty. Until recently, the alumni was made up of those few who miraculously appear at the annual barbecue, with perhaps a few relatives included.

But concepts change, and this one was destroyed by a little over a million dollars.

The successfully completed financial campaign, ended last year, represents the first such extensive canvass of alumni. The results of this wide appeal surprised and gratified: obviously a large block of alumni are still clinging to life.

But their hold on their wallets seemed less secure, and their checks and old coins (two tin cans of Spanish doubloons were reported) made up a substantial portion of the campaign funds.

The success of this campaign points to coming and continuing progress in development. Expansion of facilities will reflect expansion of the student body, expected to rise to a somewhat higher level.

A new dormitory or dormitories are expected to be ready sometime in the next school year. Students look forward to a dorm constructed on the smaller unit system, which is gaining in popularity.

And class after class of Maryville women look with mixed emotions toward the coming demolition of Baldwin Hall, still scheduled for the near future.

A new science building will then come, expected to rise in the area back of Fayerweather Hall. Students will watch with interest the location and size of the new parking lot. The science building will provide extended facilities for laboratory work and technical instruction.

And what of Fayerweather? It may become that long awaited student center. Remodeled and fumigated, Fayerweather could provide the facilities for recreation and relaxation and offices for student organizations -- uniting in one building much of the business and pleasure of being a student. The location could not be more central, nor the end more coveted.

These are some things that we students have to look forward to and backward to. We will soon, as alumni, be called upon to support this expansion. And this support can help to make Maryville the dynamic institution of our wildest dreams. We watch the college adapt to changing circumstances and look forward to further participation in this progress.

MC raises over $1,000,000

Examining the plans for the new science building with Raymond I. Brahams and Dr. Frank McClelland are Student Council members Jerry Stewart, Will Mitchell, John Mulholland, Frank Jablonski, Harold Cones, Jon Hinderer and Mike Moyers.

With over $1,000,000 recorded by the end of he year, Maryville College is well "over the top" in its $920,000 Development Fund Campaign, according to an announcement made January 5 by D. W. Proffitt, general chairman of the special drive.

"Late pledges or gifts are still being counted, but the figure now stands at $1,014,875 in this phase of the college's over-all effort," Mr. Proffitt said.

Use of money planned

The campaign funds will be used primarily for the construction of a new science building. The building, already well into the planning stages, will be finally designed after a study of a survey recently made specifically for Maryville College by Taylor, Lieberfeld and Heldman, Inc., of New York.

The survey was made so the College could offer the most modern and efficient facilities for instruction and laboratory work in the sciences.

In addition, campaign funds are expected to remove the debt on the Samuel Tyndale Wilson Chapel, and to provide some student aid and scholarship funds. The remainder of the current operating income is usually obtained on Maryville College Day in Blount County and from the annual Alumni Fund.

"The year-long campaign produced many heartening indications of faith in Maryville's future and in the plans for its growth and progress under President Joseph J. Copeland," Mr. Proffitt said in summing up the effort.

College administrative officials, along with campaign leaders, were encouraged by the widespread participation. Among the alumni, although figures are not yet fully tabulated, participation will exceed 30 per cent, President Copeland said. Early personal gifts by members of the Board of Directors, faculty, and staff amounted to more than $140,000 with nearly 100 per cent participation.

Late gift assures goal

The $920,000 goal was actually assured when a prominent resident of Blount County made a gift of $30,000 on December 23 as an annuity agreement.

Faculty member speaks in Montana

Dr. Esther C. Swenson, Assistant Professor of Sociology and Christian Education, was one of a six-member Religious Emphasis Week team January 13 to 20 at Bozeman State College in Bozeman, Montana.

Dr. Swenson, nationally known for her work in philosophy, and theology, spoke on "The Oneness of Marriage," "The Psychology of Belief," "Believing and Questioning," "Society and Religion," and "The Origin of Religion." She addressed the faculty on "The Cry of Existentialism" and spoke at the First Baptist Church in Bozeman.

European tour again is College-sponsored

Maryville College again this year is sponsoring a European tour for students, faculty and staff, and friends of the college, This year's group will be going to Scandinavia and England July 20 to August 10.

Last year, the College-sponsored tour included England, France, and Italy on the itinerary, with 28 on the tour.

The tour is open to all in the area who would like to join. Total cost from New York, including all transportation, meals, and lodging, is $918, with a deposit of $100 required by March 1.

Artists Series presentation to be February 9

The Kaleidoscope Players will bring to the Maryville College stage the best of Carl Sandburg's poetry and prose when they present "The World of Carl Sandburg" in the College Chapel Tuesday, Feb. 9, at 8:15 p.m. The program is the second in the regular Maryville College-Community Artists Series programs.

The adaptation of the poet's writings is by Norman Corwin. The work was originally presented on tour and for a limited Broadway engagement three years ago starring Bette Davis. The Kaleidoscope production enlarges the original from a reading to a staged presentation, and enlarges the cast from three to four players, including a folk singer with selections from the poet's "American Songbag."

Included in the works presented are selections heretofore unpublished and released by Sandburg for the stage version of his writings. Many familiar selections are also included, such as his "Chicago Poems" and excerpts from his biography of Abraham Lincoln.

Heading the Kaleidoscope Players again is Bill Fegan, founder and manager of the group.

'Cretan Woman' Cast Chosen

The tentative cast for the next playhouse production, "The Cretan Woman" by Robinson Jeffers, was announced January 20 by Thomas E. Jones, director of the Theatre.

The company includes Margaret Shaklee as Selene; Margaret Moffett as Phaedra; Davron King as The Goddess Aphrodite; Keith Jones as Hippolytus; John Meyers as Alcyon; Robert Dickerson as Messenger; David Harris as Theseus; Jill Dickinson as Artemis; Linda Gisselmann, Joanne Gidley, Charlene Lamb, Shelby Sulivan, and Carol Kaufman as the chorus; and Ross Kerr, John Weiler, and Bud Beachum as the armed attendants of Theseus.

Virginia Wells is the assistant director of the play which will be presented March 12 and 13.

Deaths of College associates noted

The chapel service January 6, 1965 was in memory of Miss Gertrude E. Meiselwitz, member of the College faculty for 36 years and head of the home economics department for 29 years, who died in Maryville December 31 after a brief illness.

Also eulogized in the service conducted by President Joseph J. Copeland was Dr. Lea Callaway, a Maryville College graduate and member of the Board of Directors, who died unexpectedly December 30.

Chemistry professor gets second grant

Dr. David P. Young, assistant professor of chemistry has received a second research grant, this one for $7,380, for a two-year-period for research in organophosphorus chemistry. The grant was made by the Petroleum Research Fund of the American Chemical Society.

It is to be used for fundamental research at the undergraduate level, and will pay for student help and necessary chemicals and equipment.

Earlier, Dr. Young received a grant of $2,000 from the Research Corporation. The two grants will allow Dr. Young to have two students working with him in the research program next summer and additional work will be done during the school year.

Dates for transition between semesters are set by offices

The Treasurer's Office will be open for payment of second semester bills Friday, January 29, and Monday and Tuesday, February 1 and 2. At that time students will fill out class cards. A late payment fee of $5 will be charged after Tuesday, February 2.

First semester textbooks must be returned to the book store not later than 5 p.m. on Saturday, January 30, or a fine of 50c per book will be charged. Texts to be re-used second semester may be rerented during examination day without being returned to the bookstore. Second semester textbooks will be issued February 1 and 2.

Necessary changes in schedule must be made at the Registrar's Office on February 5. No changes will be allowed after that date.

Class attendance will be required from the first day of second semester, February 3, and absences will be reported from that date. As usual, absence penalties as stated in the catalogue will apply on the first two days after semester break.

Allan Hoke gives his senior recital

Allan S. Hoke, senior organ student, presented a recital Thursday, January 21, at 8:15 p.m. in the Music Hall of the Fine Arts Center.

Hoke is the composer of a number of original organ works. One of the selections in his recital was a chorale which he had harmonized. The program consisted of a variety of organ works ranging from Buxtehude in the 17th century to the contemporary Dupre. Included were major works by Handel, Mendelssohn, and Liszt.

Lip service

The time of reckoning approacheth. It is, at least, disconcerting to think about it. Exam week is usually thought of as a week of little sleep, black coffee, short tempers, active nerves, and concentration.

Nobody wants final exams. Who thought them up, anyhow? (Once upon a time there lived in the woods . . .) Why doesn't the teacher cover only the material since the last test? (Still, some teachers would be covering the whole semester.) Why can't we have an honor system so we can leave and have a smoke? (It's a long way back to the dorms.) Why can't we have free chapel cuts during this week? (We need to pray.) Why must final exams count 1000 points? (Somebody up there checks on those people.)

But don't be too hard on the teachers. They are a part of it. They go through a lot: think of reading all those papers; think of assessing the knowledge of all those students; think of writing the grades on all those grade slips. They work, too.

And after only a week, it's all over. We breathe freely for three days, and then we start anew. There'll be the delightful preliminaries of registration.

It'll take us all about a month to get behind again.

* * * * * *

It's the people here at MC that make the place. These people have at lot. If we developed individual relationships with some of them we might learn something.

But we don't notice people as individuals. We don't know why, but we know it's true. Certainly, unfortunately, we know the vital info on each other. We walk past someone, and we think. There goes the MKAKABKJAKS president.

We don't know the people. The real people. And that's a Fault.

came possible early last summer when Algie Sutton of Greenville, South Carolina, gave $250,000 with the understanding that, including this sum, the $920,000 goal would be met by January 1, 1965.

He pledged an addittional $250,000 on the basis of total alumni giving reaching $500,000 during the campaign and beyond. The last four weeks of the campaign especially brought in many sizeable contributions and much of the giving was in response to the challenge by Mr. Sutton, President Copeland pointed out.

The campaign just concluded constitutes Phase II of a $7,000,000 development program. Its success has boosted the decade total well over the $3,300,000 mark toward the total goal without Mr. Sutton's second commitment of $250,000.

In the Sesquicentennial program, to be concluded in 1969, improvement of the faculty and increasing faculty salaries are the main objectives, in addition to new facilities and additional student aid.

Boots

by Dave Powell

Wonderful fields that stretched as far as little eyes could see; stretching as far as need be for little eyes to see what little minds conceived.

Battlefields and forts yesterday, and on the brink of today . . . what?

And tomorrow . . .

Enough! The world of the wee is now or never. Always building today on yesterday for today's sake, not for the sake of tomorrow. Live now for now and build the forts and fly the kites and shoot the tigers . . .

I tugged at the sliding lock and pulled at the door that stuck with the dampness of springtime. I bounded down the steps prepared for a search, but stopped at the bottom and paused to unwind, for there they were.

I can see them now, black as Hallowe'en shadows, tall as chimneys and big enough for two explorers to wear. Rubber knee-boots that my father wore whenever he shoveled water from our cellar. Knee-boots for my dad but hip-boots on me; explorer's boots, hunter's boots, general's boots — wonderful, wonderful, wonderful boots.

An on this day the boots were big enough for a sailor. They patiently plodded through fields that today were long, white, rippling sand beaches. They protected the sailor from the gritty grains of "sand" as he walked to the sea.

And on this day the pond was bigger than it had ever been before. Today it stretched over the horizon and out of sight, and the fields that were limitless the day before were now a respectable size for any seashore.

The sailboat sailed straight and true across the pond past sunken logs and pirate ships. The winds came and the waves rose to furious heights that threatened to overturn the craft. The ocean roared and the elements battered the ship relentlessly.

All day the storm attacked. All day long sharks swam just below the surface waiting for the sailors to lose footing. Even as the sun was setting in the West the pirates boarded and raised the jollyroger and fought fierce battles in the crow's nest and in the hold and made the captain walk the plank.

Or so it was to me.

From not too far away came the voice with the laughter and happiness in it; the siren who beckoned the sailor to his destruction; the voice from the mouth that smiled at what the grown-up eye saw, what the grown-up mind perceived — the little field and the little pond that scrinched its face at the orange sun that sank in the West that framed the little boy that wore the big, big boots that dragged the boat toward bedtime and dreams.

—" and home is the sailor, home from the sea."

— and so it was for me.

A Lesson on How to Shock an Audience

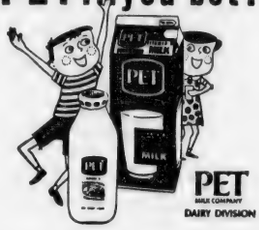
by David Clinkman

PART THE FIRST: "A Phoenix Too Frequent" (Christopher Fry.) When performed as a reading in the Salt Cellar last fall, "Phoenix" was a delightful little story of attempted seduction. As performed on the MC stage it was unconvincing.

All the actors seemed to recite their lines, and this, combined with a lack of eye contact and Tegeus' nervousness, was annoying. The attitude of the three toward the wine flask which they bandied about is partially representative of the effect of the play, as is the chess-like determination with which each considered his coming stage directions, while the action was elsewhere.

Joanne Gidley was perhaps the best of the three actors. She showed an adequate grasp of her part (Doto), but the rapidity with which she spoke detracted from the effectiveness of her characterization. Her projection was also a bit below par, but her interpretation was ripe with possibilities.

PART THE SECOND: "Escurial" (Michel de Gherolde) was the deepest play of the evening, and the choice of the two principals was admirable. Dale Schellenger played the part of the old, vengeful king well, but his make-up was inadequate to his characterization. This and his occasional lapses into his own voice timbre were the only points of criticism of an otherwise effective job. David Powell, as the King's Fool, was thoroughly revolting in his impersonation of a dog and captured the Fool's pathos with accuracy. The main point of criticism in this play deals with the two minor characters, who at times seemed to be hesitant and uncertain about what they were doing.



PART THE THIRD: "Hello Out There" (William Saroyan) supplied all the profanity for the evening and in doing so left itself open to charges of sensationalism. To be sure, the play is rough and southwestern, but the characterizations were not such as to support the language that was sometimes used.

The high point of this presentation was the manner in which David Armentrout (The Young Gambler) and Margaret Shaklee (The Girl) played to each other, laying the foundation for a somewhat better performance than each gave individually. Mr. Armentrout could have been somewhat more greasy in appearance; he also has a certain pout with which he imbues his lines. Miss Shaklee, retaining her sensitivity, could have interpreted her part in a more lascivious manner. David King was repulsively satisfying as The Husband, and it is unfortunate that his crassness did not permeate the whole play.

PART THE FOURTH: Aria Da Capo" (Edna St. Vincent Millay) Of all the paired characters who appeared during the evening, Lin Allen's Columbine and Keith Jones' Pierrot were the best. Nibbling a nonexistent macaroon and bubbling gaily, Miss Allen was a tastefully frothy bit of nothing, and Mr. Jones' suave, procuring Pierrot took every possible advantage of her friskiness. Although the other actors were not so excellent as these two, the direction of the play was generally sufficient to make up for whatever deficiencies they had.

Two years ago, I returned from the Theatre of the Absurd thoroughly stunned by what I had seen. This year's efforts were not to that standard, and although the program was, admittedly, an example of student directing, I returned from the Theatre no more convinced than when I had left of a philosophy which I find rather incomplete anyway.

Scot Cagers Take Third In Florida Tournament Play

The Maryville College basketball team won its first game of the season and copped the third-place trophy in the Suncoast Classic Tournament held on the eigth and ninth of January in St. Petersburg, Florida.

The Scots gained their victory in the second game, but they played their finest basketball in losing to tournament champion Charlotte College in the opening game. With center Dave Alexander scoring eight points and guard Jack Llewellyn hitting for eleven, the Maryville team held a 32-22 edge at half-time. Coach Baird reported that the team played "nearly perfect ball" in the first half of the game. The North Carolina school, however, gained momentum in the second half, scoring 46 points while the Scots were able to add only 22 to their total, and the game ended with Charlotte holding a 68-55 advantage.

The loss pushed the Scots' season record to 0-6. The following night they were matched against Millsaps (0-13) in the runner-up game. The Scots rolled to their highest score of the year against the hapless Colonels. Scoring 46 points in each half, Maryville collected a total of 92 while holding Millsaps to 69. Leading the Maryville scorers was center Dave Alexander with 24 points on eleven field goals and a free throw. The 6'3½" sophomore also hauled in 18 rebounds.

Against Bryan College, the Scots moved off to a 42-36 half time lead, added three points to that margin in the second half play, and finished the game with a 75 to 66 victory. Once again it was center Dave Alexander who topped the Scots in scoring with 20 points. Denny McGowan, Mike Moyers, and Jack Llewellyn also scored in double figures, collecting 14, 12, and 10 points respectively.

After losing to Lincoln Memorial University 65 to 46, the Scots returned to their home court to face a polished Hiwassee team that had defeated them 86-55 earlier in the season. With two men scoring all but 13 points, the Hiwassee team held a 6 point, 35-29, lead at the half. In the second half, the Scots went to work on whittling the Hiwassee lead. The accurate backcourt shooting of Jack Llewellyn and the fine team leadership of Kip Martin forced the Tigers out of their zone defense into a man-to-man alignment. The move was a smart one for it slowed the Maryville surge. In the last minute the Scots moved to within 2 points of the Tigers a 59-57. With 14 seconds left, Darrel Stoker managed to get a hand on a Hiwassee pass. The deflected ball went out of bounds, however, before either Stoker or Mike Moyers could retrieve it, and Hiwassee stalled for the remaining second to keep their 59-57 victory in tact.

Wrestlers Lose to Auburn, Le Tourneau

On the 8th and 9th of January the Scot wrestling team traveled to Auburn for a triangular meet with Auburn and LeTourneau College of Longview, Texas. Although the meet was a round-robin tournament in three rounds, the scoring was just as if 3 separate dual meets were in progress. In addition, there were a number of exhibition bouts featuring primarily the Scots' and Auburn's second string and freshmen. The Maryville squad brought the most experience to the meet, but sported only a 1-3 record. The Scots went down 22-15 to Auburn and 20-11 to LeTourneau.

The varsity tally went as follows: at 123, John Henderson went down 6-2 to Auburn's SEC champ, but beat LeTourneau 7-3. Auburn won the class. Ralph Johnson won the 130 class by defeating his LeTorneau opponent 4-0 while Auburn forfeited. Will Mitchell lost to LeTourneau 4-1, but pinned his Auburn opponent in the last period. LeTourneau won the 137 class. Gene Dixon lost to Auburn 4-2 and LeTourneau 5-3 as Auburn won the 147 class. Don Shields, wrestling 157 for the first time, garnered the Scots' first pin against LeTourneau, but bowed 6-1 to another SEC champ from Auburn, the latter winning the class. Carl Gehman wrestled 167, losing a close match to LeTourneau, but getting a forfeit from Auburn. LeTourneau won this class. Pat O'Bryan was pinned by Auburn and beaten 13-1 by LeTourneau as Auburn won 177 also. Clint Abbot had the same luck, losing 1-0 to Auburn and 4-0 to LeTourneau, both in the same day. Jim Pryor found himself out-classed, being pinned twice. Auburn won both the 191 and heavyweigh classifications. Tournament score: Auburn 42, LeTourneau 36, Maryville 26.

Athletic-Academic Scholarships To Be Given by Honaker Club

After extensive discussion with the administration of Maryville College, the Honaker Cub has agreed to offer academic-athletic scholarships. The Club named in honor of the late Maryville coach, has named these scholarships the Lombe Scott Honaker Academic Scholarships.

Academic Requirements

To be eligible, the applicant must have compiled a 2.6 average in those high school subjects accepted for admission to Maryville College and maintain that average throughout college. In addition, recipients must score at least a 24 on the A.C.T. college admission test and a combined score of 1050 on the college boards.

The actual awarding of the scholarships is based on financial need as determined by a confidential statement filed with the college student help office. All decisions will be made by the vote of the student help committee on recommendation of Director of Athetics Boydson Baird.

Club Gives Endowment

The money for the scholarships will come from the Honaker Fund. This is a permanent fund which will be established in a minimum amount of $25,000 to be raised by the Honaker Club. The academic scholarships will be set up when the $25,000 permanent fund has been added to the college's endowment. It will produce $1,000 yearly for the program.

It was further agreed that an annual cash fund could be raised to match the income from the permanent fund, providing that no more than half of the amount granted each year will come from the cash fund. The program will thus begin when $26,000 has been raised.

Copeland Comments

Appraising the new scholarships, Dr. Copeland said, "We are pleased to participate in this additional recognition of Coach Honaker, and will do all we can to assume completion of the minimum fund requirements. Meanwhile, we trust that the Coach's friends and former athletes will respond enthusiastically We feel it is a sound and workable program which will make Maryville a better college by providing leadership in two vital areas — the classroom and the athletic field, and at the same time will help deserving athletes and create a fitting additional memorial to an outstanding and highly respected coach and gentleman."

The Care and Feeding of Academic Dishonesty

There are many ways in which college professors and students can aid the cultivation of academic dishonesty or "cheating," as it is known in the vernacular. Some of the most effective ways require little or no effort on the part of either the student or the professor.

For instance, there is the matter of careful proctoring by professors during examinations. It is a well-known fact that such proctoring serves to let the student know that he is assumed to have absolutely no personal honor — certain to foster a positive attitude on his part.

Futhermore, this practice encourages the student to attempt to outsmart the teacher, to make sort of a game out of cheating, so to speak. Of course this ties in with the traditional concept that learning can be fun — but cheating can be even more fun.

The reverse of the above situation also applies, however. Teachers who are notably lax as far as proctoring goes have been known to be responsible for some of the more successful athletic pursuits on American college campuses.

Another excellent aid is the rather common practice of some professors to give the same examination to two sections of the class — and to give them the same examination (either the whole or various parts) which was given the year before, and the year before, and . . .

This provides not only fertile ground for academic dishonesty, but also an opportunity for students and faculty members to work together for a common purpose. Thoughtful students who save examinations and pass them on to their friends and relatives are to be commended for their participation in a worthy cause.

Still another way in which all members of the academic community can spur on the growth of academic dishonesty is to realize the impossibility of its existence in small Christian colleges, particular those "nestled in the anthills of the you-know-what mountains."

As far as our particular situation goes, we are pleased to report that steps are being taken in the right direction. Students who are dissatisfied with our rate of progress are reminded of the possibility of transferring to our sister institution located in the thriving metropolis fifteen miles to the north.

Success of campaign to be celebrated

Maryville College will hold a complimentary victory dinner at 7 p.m. on Monday, February 15, in celebration of the successful conclusion of the Development Fund Campaign of 1964. The dinner will be held in the college dining hall, with D. W. Proffitt, general chairman of the campaign, presiding.

Recent gifts to the campaign have now moved the total to $1,035,000. Several pieces of property received during the campaign period have not been finally appraised and have not had their value added to the total. President Joseph J. Copeland expressed hope that the final total might rise to $1,100,000 when these items of property are added.

The successful campaign assures construction of the new science building, which is already well into the planning stages. A contract for the building can probably be let this summer, and the facility may be ready for the 1966-67 academic year.

Lecture Series features Rojas

Sergio Rojas, former Cuban ambassador to Great Britain, spoke on "The Coming Explosion in Latin America" as the second presentation in the Maryville College Lecture Series Friday, February 12.

Ambassador Rojas is a director of the Cuban Center for Studies of Freedom, a group made up of Cuban exiles throughout the world who are waiting for an opportunity to return to their native land. He was an early leader in the revolution which brought Castro to power, working as a coordinator in Venezuela, where he purchased arms, raised funds, and sought various support for the July 26 revolutionary group.

The same forces which enabled Castro to gain power in Cuba are at work in other countries in Latin America, and Ambassador Rojas talked about these problems in his appearance at Maryville College.

Over $1400 pledged to Fred Hope Fund

The Fred Hope Fund, to be used this year to support a program of training for laboratory technicians in the Frances Newton Hospital in Ferozepore, India, has pledges totaling $1,458.60 to date. Students have also contributed the proceeds from this year's Barnwarming and a student dance.

The hospital, which is run by Dorothy Ferris, '28, has received over $13,000 in contributions from Maryville College students since 1952.

Dr. Docherty to lead February Meetings

Dr. George M. Docherty
February Meetings speaker

Dr. George M. Docherty, pastor of the New York Avenue Presbyterian Church in Washington, D. C., will be the leader of the annual February Meetings, a period of religious emphasis, February 18 through 24.

A native of Scotland and a graduate of Glasgow University where he received his M.A. in 1935 and his B.D. in 1938, Dr. Docherty held pastorates in Scotland before coming to his present position in the national capital. He holds a Doctor of Divinity degree from Temple University in Philadelphia and a Doctor of Letters degree from Monmouth College.

Five to assist

Assisting in the February Meetings program this year will be Dr. Theodore Stevenson, medical secretary for the Commission on Ecumenical Mission and Relations of the United Presbyterian Church; Miss Emily Gibbes, secretary of the Women's Department of the Board of Christian Education; the Rev. and Mrs. Ernest D. Matthews, missionaries on furlough from Yucatan, Mexico.

The Rev. Dale Watson, assistant pastor at New Providence Presbyterian Church, will be a consultant.

To begin Thursday

The February Meetings will begin at 9:40 a.m., February 18. Dr. Docherty will speak each morning, and at the Vespers service on the evening of Sunday, February 21. A series of panel discussions with Dr. Docherty and other leaders is planned for the evenings. There will be a communion service Tuesday February 23.

Plans are developing for summer activities

Plans for the use of the Maryville College campus during the summer are beginning to materialize. A summer term will again be offered by the College; other plans include a music workshop featuring Fred Waring, and meetings of the Synod.

The six weeks summer term, similar to the successful summer school conducted last year, will be held again from June 14 to July 24. Courses will be offered in three areas—advanced college work, freshman college work, and college orientation.

Nature study course offered

In addition, Dr. Randolph Shields, head of the biology department and former naturalist for the Great Smoky Mountains National Park, will conduct a nature study course which may be taken on either a credit or non-credit basis.

The pre-college courses given for the first time last summer, provide no college credit, but proved to be valuable for high school graduates who were planning to attend Maryville or some other college in the fall.

Waring to be at MC

A Fred Waring music workshop, designed for high school and church music directors, will be held at Maryville College in Maryville, Tenn., June 13-18.

The workshop, only one outside the popular Waring organization's home base in Pennsylvania this summer, will bring Waring himself to the Maryville campus, plus members of his professional production crew. These will include Dr. John Raymond, Director of Music at LaFayette College; Ray Schroeder, choreographer and producer for the Pennsylvanians; and Hawley Ades, arranger and pianist for the Royal Pennsylvanians.

Bloy recital, art show opening held

Dr. James A. Bloy, member of the Maryville College music faculty and organist and choir director at St. Andrew's Episcopal Church, presented an organ recital February 5 at 8:15 p. m. in the music hall of the Fine Arts Center.

The recital program consisted of selections from French organ music from the 16th to the 20th centuries, featuring the most important of the French composers.

Following the recital, an exhibition of contemporary religious art works, being shown during the month of February, opened. The special exhibition is an attempt to show what a few contemporary artists are doing, and is partly an attempt to define the nature of contemporary religious art.

Riddle is recipient of assistantship at U-T

Riddle is majoring at Maryville in inorganic chemistry and plans to teach chemistry at the college level. He was also offered an assistantship at the University of Kentucky.

Lip service

It's great to have a few warm days. It takes away part, at least, of the weariness of a heavy load of classes. We can hardly wait for the rest of the weeks of winter to pass. We expect the dogwoods to be pretty this year and for the daffodils to stay longer.

We cannot ever, even when we consciously try, remember when these things come. But this year we do remember that last spring was not up to par for East Tennessee.

* * * * * *

Once we wrote about people who do not care enough to get to know other people. Since then, we have heard people say how tired they are of talk about communication. However, we're going to say some more about it.

We've gotten the idea lately that the greatest infidelity between a man and a woman is the unwillingness to communicate. And that this is applicable universally—to the relationship of all men to all men.

It seems a greater wrong to be stagnant, not trying to grow in a relationship, than to turn completely to another for affection. It seems a greater wrong to feign a friendship, but not care to understand another person, than it is not to know him at all.

This shows an indifference, or apathy—that which our people are often accused of. Once we thought indifference was sometimes a good thing—a protection. But now we do not.

Since people are the only physical, tangible, touchable things that truly matter in world—and only because they have spirits within—we think it is wrong to treat these people, and our so-called meetings with them, lightly.

Maryville's Progress

by Sandra Chittick and Sandra Haggart

On Wednesday, February 3, a group of Maryville College students and several faculty members attended a meeting, in the Little Chapel, of Maryville community leaders. The meeting provided a valuable insight into the workings of the community.

The speakers of the evening discussed the topics of urban renewal: a plan for public housing units in Maryville, political action, and human rights. To those of us who had heard much talk on similar subjects before, nothing new or very radical was said. And except for the facts on urban renewal, nothing of a concrete nature was stated.

However, as an interracial meeting of Maryville people of all ages, including many older ones, this was more than just a step in the right direction. The meeting let us know that things are happening in Maryville, and that the city does have political problems.

With words from Dale Watson, the meeting closed on a promise of meetings of a more concrete nature in the future.

Boehmer of FoR to be at MC

Peter J. Boehmer, assistant director of field work for the Fellowship of Reconciliation, will be at Maryville College Wednesday, February 17 to meet with interested students and town citizens. Boehmer is touring the South to determine how FoR might work more effectively here.

FoR was founded during World War I in England and America. It is a pacifist organization which seeks to settle by peaceful methods disputes both local and international.

Small in membership, FoR has provided the impetus for movements in race relations, and its members have been instrumental in founding better known organizations, such as the American Civil Liberties Union, the National Conference of Christians and Jews, and the Congress of Racial Equality.

Pryor, Dalton Lead Scots

Jim Pryor, a 230 pound All-Area tackle, and Mike Dalton, one of the finest offensive ends in Maryville history, were named co-captains of the 1965 Maryville College football team at the annual banquet at Green Meadows Country Club. The captains were selected by the votes of their teammates.

The banquet, provided by the recently reorganized Honaker Club, was also the scene of several other awards. Benny Monroe, Maryville's Little All-American quarterback, was given the Most Valuable Player trophy by the Alumni.

Don Story was awarded the best First-Year-Letterman trophy by the Student Council, and Archie Anderson was selected as the Most Improved Player.

The speaker for the evening was John Mauer, an NFL scout from Knoxville. He was introduced by Bob Woodruff, Athletic Director at the University of Tennessee. Mauer spoke on his personal relationship with the late Lombe Honnaker and his job as a professional scout.

Those who would treat politics and morality apart will never understand the one or the other.

Scots Take Third Victory

Determined to improve on their season's record of 2 wins and 8 losses, the Maryville College basketball team took to the court six times during the past few weeks. When the action was completed, however, the Scots had gained only one victory, a 58 to 51 conquest of Berry College, while falling to Shorter, Mars Hill, Asheville Biltmore, L.M.U., and Emory and Henry.

Maryville 58, Berry 51

The Maryville squad opened their series of games with a victory over Berry College. The two teams played on even terms throughout the first half of the encounter, the Scots walking off the court at halftime with a one point, 26 to 25 lead.

When the teams returned to the court for the last half, the Scots, led by Dave Alexander's 14 points, outscored their Georgia opponents 32 to 26 to secure the victory. Alexander led Maryville's scorers with 18 points. Mike Moyers had 14.

Maryville 33, Shorter 74

Shorter College, which has one of the leading defensive teams in the country, inflicted the worst defeat of the year against the Scots.

With their well-trained man-to-man defense holding the Highlanders to an unbelievable 5 points in the first period of play, Shorter took an insurmountable lead into the last half. Loosening their defensive press and substituting freely, the Georgia school allowed the Maryville team to score 28 points and raise their score to a more respectable 74 to 33.

Maryville 62, Asheville-Biltmore 66

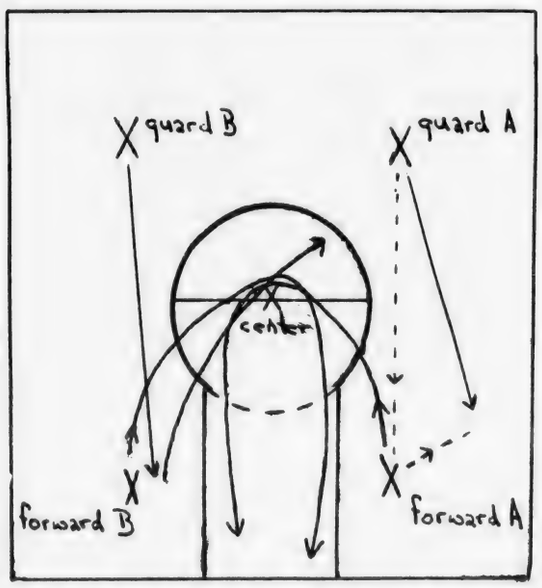
In the game with Asheville-Biltmore, Maryville experienced one of its closest encounters of the year. As in their other contests, a slight letdown in the second half was the cause of Maryville's defeat.

Leading by five points at the mid-way break, the Scots saw the North Carolina school whittle their lead and finally pass them.

Four free throws in the closing minutes by Asheville-Biltmore guard Nick McCury proved to the decisive margin.

Maryville 62, Mars Hill 74

Returning to their home court, the Scots met Mars Hill. Trailing by only one point at half time, the Scots were outscored in the second period by their opponents from North Carolina, who tallied 43 points.



The difference in the game was made at the foul line. Both teams hit on 11 field goals during the second half, but Mars Hill was awarded an unusually high 26 free throws, sinking 21 while the Scots were making 10 of 16.

The Scots' twelfth defeat came at the hands of Lincoln Memorial University. Although leading by a mere 3 points after the first half, the L.M.U. team scored 35 points in the second period while Maryville was collecting only 23.

Maryville 68, Emory & Henry 72

The most obvious example of Maryville's second half letdown occurred in their game against Emory & Henry. The Scots hit for 37 points in the first half, and seemed to have a commanding lead with their opponents 10 points behind at 27.

The Wasps, however, came on strong in the second period of play, narrowed the Maryville margin, and finally took the lead and the victory in the final minutes of play.

The Shuffle is a basic part of the offensive system of the Maryville College basketball team. Used against man-to-man defenses, the shuffle is designed to separate three men from their defenders through a series of screens, or, picks.

In the "odd-number" shuffle (diagrammed above), the team operates from a basic 2-1-2 offensive set-up. Guard A passes the ball to forward A, and both the guards run in and set up screens for the forwards. The forwards break off these screens, forward A returning the ball to guard A, cut around the center, receiving screens not only from the center, but also from each other as they criss-cross, and break for the basket. If either is open, guard A hits him with a pass. If both are covered, however, guard B breaks out past the center, and guard A feeds him the ball for a long shot.

Fort Mudge and Beyond

by Jon Hinderer

Second Thoughts On Cosmozoic Theory

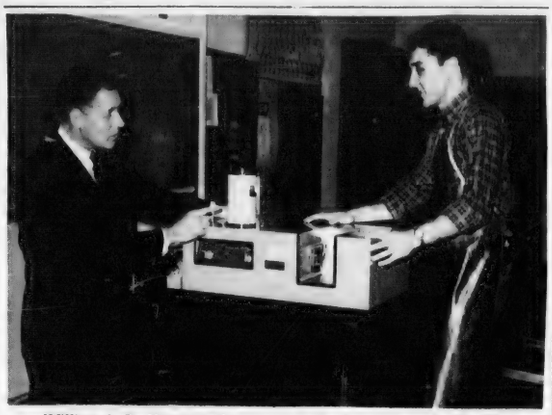
Early one morn, while dank vapors still held the emerging sun from the swamp, the following missive was found impaled, by means of a rosewood peg, on the stockade door of Fort Mudge. A faint spoor trailed back into the marsh, the odor as of a long-dead armpit wafted on the wind. From afar I heard the faint ticking of a visceral clock.

Know that:
all is wonder in the world: event confounds logic: reason is a harlot: and crocodiles are among you smiling in the sun blinking lazily: beware lest these same devour you in the slime at the river's bottom . . .

all is wonder in the world: madness is called respectability and idiocy pretends to profundity: a weed grows to poison the lungs with smoke and the counterparts of howland owl advance the cause of scholarship for the benefit of grasping lumbermen everywhere: beware the footnoting crocodiles . . .

all is wonder in the world: the spewed venom of many wombs stumbles chemically stupored of fermented harvests: beware in the month of twenty-eight of crocodiles lisping in learned or humble accents of a nowhere light . . .

all is wonder in the world: the cripple's crutch stumbles to leap: winds of doctrine and doctrines of wind enjoy the periodicity of a return to the mumblings of that inarticulate guildsman's son: beware the crocodiles who bear the aegis and their sucklings that nominate in darkness . . .



all is wonder in the world: in the land of darkness jaundice lurks grey in the wings dedalus fashioned for the disciples of Euphues that know no word for falsehood near at hand: the sword of fire blinds the dottering to the day and bitter virgins sow thorns and waste the land: beware for the crocodiles read and find their way with jaded eyes . . .

all is wonder in the world: janus thinks that it was he that pulled the sword from stone and made the table round a place of wonder: his umble manner speaks him out a scaly beast: beware lest the tower crocodiles refuse to swallow the wet bird that flies at night . . .
all is wonder in the world . . .

Copeland announces plans for Fund

William J. R. Hargrave demonstrates to chemistry major Phil Rittersbacher some features characteristic of the new 137 Perkin-Elmer infrared spectrophotometer.

Total pledges and gifts in the Maryville College development campaign just concluded are $1,053,405, it was announced February 15, 1965, by Dr. Joseph J. Copeland at the victory banquet.

President Copeland also announced plans for a total of seven new dormitories on the Maryville College campus, four for women and three for men. In the dormitory program, the present Baldwin Hall, a women's residence will eventually be razed. A new science building was the goal of the campaign just completed; plans for a new student center were announced.

"Two of the dormitories for women and one of the new dormitories for men will tentatively be ready during the next school year." President Copeland said. "Work will start on them in a matter of months."

Faculty salaries rise

In addition to the plans for new buildings, President Copeland pointed out that the amount of money spent for faculty salaries at Maryville College has almost doubled since 1958-59, and that the salary scale will continue to rise.

Maryville College, at the beginning of 1964, set out to raise $920,000, primarily for the construction of a new science building on the campus. This campaign was an intensive part of the college's over-all Sesquicentennial program in which $7,000,000 is sought by the 150th anniversary in 1969.

Chairman of the Maryville College Board of Directors Joe C. Gamble told the 400 area Maryville supporters at the banquet that night that "a $100,000 gift from the Aluminum Company of America really put us to work. That gave us the encouragement and got the campaign started."

The Rev. Brubaker is MC

The Rev. Edward Brubaker of Englewood, N. J., a member of the College Board of Directors, served as master of ceremonies. He introduced Dave Proffitt of Maryville, General Campaign chairman, who, in turn, introduced chairmen of the campaign divisions. Proffitt thanked all of those who worked and gave to make last year's special effort a success.

Gamble, in citing the success of the campaign, pointed out

Dr. Docherty To Lead Vespers

Dr. George M. Docherty, leader of the February Meetings, will conduct Vespers Sunday evening, February 21, at 8 p.m. in the Chapel.

Grant enables purchase for chemistry lab

A grant from the National Science Foundation has made the purchase of a spectrophotometer and its accessories, and a flame photometer costing over $7000 possible.

The investment, the first such by the chemistry department, was specifically enabled by the grant which provided funds for half of the cost. The College and outside gifts paid for the other half.

Perkin-Elmer, manufacturer of the instruments, donated an additional $450 of accessories for the spectrophotometer. The gift was arranged through William J. R. Hargrave, a 1943 Maryville College graduate, who is the international sales manager for the company.

The spectrophotometer, used primarily for instruction and investigation in organic chemistry, determines the material being tested by use of infrared rays, recording the results in a series of lines which have to be interpreted.

The second piece of equipment, the flame photometer, to be used in advanced analytical work, cost $1100 with its recorder.

According to Dr. Fred A. Griffitts, chairman of the chemistry department, the aquisition of these instruments will "provide students with the opportunity to use and be familiar with current means of chemical study and investigation."

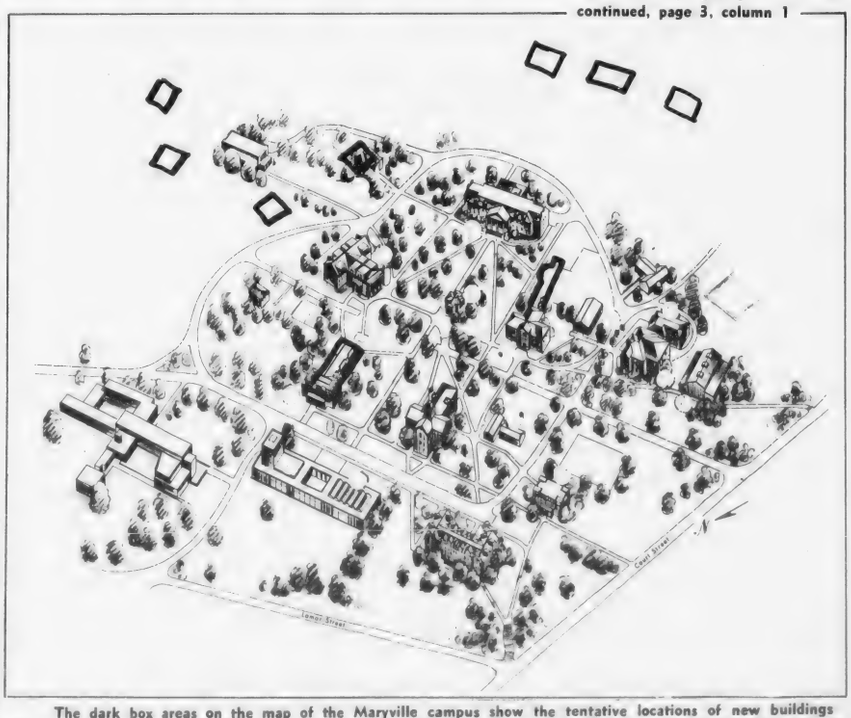
Delta Gamma Has Four New Members

Delta Gamma, Maryville chapter of the national French honor society Pi Delta Phi, initiated four new members at a banquet Tuesday evening, February 6.

Recognized for their achievement in French study were Ruth Bates, Alice Brownlee, Walter Goodwyne, and Joseph Thomas.

Present officers of the society are Sandra Chittick, president, Sandra Haggart, vice president, and Cecelia Bridges, secretary.

College given paintings by well-known artists



Four paintings by 18th century European masters, recently given to Maryville College by an alumnus, will be displayed for the first time in Maryville March 1 and 2 at the opening of a month-long Fine Arts Festival.

The paintings are a portrait by Francisco de Goya y Lucienties, a Spaniard; a landscape by Thomas Gainsborough, an English painter; and two landscapes by Francesco Zuccarelli, an Italian.

Goya, who lived from 1746-1828, excelled in portrait work, and his portraits are life-like and unexaggerated. He painted many of the leading citizens of his day, and much of his work is owned by The Prado in Spain, the leading Spanish museum. Goya also is recognized for his etchings and for his work as a designer of tapestry.

The dark box areas on the map of the Maryville campus show the tentative locations of new buildings planned by the College. The four in the vicinity of New Dorm will be women's dormitories and the three behind Thaw Hall will be for men. The new student center will stand on the site of Baldwin Hall. The soon to be constructed addition to the science hall will be located directly behind the present building.

Lip service

Several mornings ago we were walking across campus. We noticed that there were all sorts of paper lying on the ground. We thought how unusually ugly it looked.

Not more than ten minutes later we ran into a friend, who asked us to take a walk to see the mess.

Thus we were prompted to write this. Our campus is a beautiful one, and it is well taken care of by the maintenance department. It's ridiculous for people our age to throw paper on the ground and ridiculous for men to waste their time picking it up.

* * * * * *

We recently got a magazine put out by Dare Publications, called Dare. It is a picture magazine with little narrative.

It is good. It presents a challenge for men to dare to be great—not just successful, but great in the present revolution of the world. It reminded us of the phrase from a hymn we sing often: "Oh for Christ at least be men."

In some class recently we talked about daring to be different, to be an unusual, dynamic personality. It was pointed out that men are no longer this way.

We always are a little turned off by these generalities, but it may be true that men are less individual — there are fewer men with the inner strength it takes to adventure.

Because we constantly get mail containing information on work for better race relations and for bettering conditions of proverty, we wonder why more people don't become involved in it.

More about communication.

In a discussion about this the other day the question of protection came up. That is, protection from being hurt by other people.

We think that no one deserves this. We don't believe one is a bigger person because he closes off communication, is unhurtable, closes off response to things outside himself and thus within himself.

And men do not deserve protection by others, a buffer between him and any of the numerous painful things which we are subject to.

We should condition ourselves to living in the world today, no matter what be our personal principles, our religious belief, our background.

Certain things are unlikely to change, and the first that comes to mind is the old idea, change itself. So we must learn to give and take, be flexible, roll with the punches.

"The Virgin Spring" to be presented by MC playhouse

The Maryville College Playhouse will sponsor the showing of Ingmar Bergman's "The Virgin Spring" on Friday evening, February 26, in the Theatre.

The film is based on a medieval folk song, "The Daughter of Tore of Vange." The song was romantic in origin, but gained the character of a legend and the connection with spring and the churchin Scandinavia.

According to the legend, a young virgin, Karin, was raped and killed on her way to church by three herdsmen. The story is a primitive drama of violence and revenge, put into a Christian setting.

Nu Gamma Will Hold Fashion Show

The Nu Gamma leaders, in conjunction with UCCF, will hold a fashion show Saturday, February 27, in the basement of New Dormitory.

The show, for all women students, is to be held from 4 to 5 p.m. and will be sponsored by Proffitt's.

Sunday dress will be in order, and refreshments will be served.

Nancy Buckwalter is in charge of arrangements.

WSGA-MSC Dance Is Tonight

WSGA and MSC will sponsor a dance in the Intramural Gym after the ballgame tonight. Music will be provided by the Blue Shades and records.

There will be free refreshments. Everyone is welcome.

The Fire Drill

by Norman Cleesattel

It was night, and in the darkness things were as usual. Then sirens disrupted the regularity and rumbling fire engines charged the indifference of Carnegie Hall. From everywhere young men poured into the halls and out the doors in a mad dash for Baldwin. They flowed to where the engines were but there was no fire. As the girls trundled out in motley attire a few jibes issued forth but momentum was at slack tide and the shout for a panty raid voiced by a few die-hard agitators failed to strike a sympathetic note in the crowd. Someone said how funny it was that Carnegie had emptied before Baldwin, chuckled, and turned as if some mute signal were given that it was over.

SOME OF MY BEST FRIENDS HAVE WHISKERS

by Dave Powell

Marvin was a pussycat. Indeed he was a very exceptional pussycat as far as pussycats go, and some of them can go pretty far because I know of a little old lady in Toronto who had one that walked 900 miles — but that's another story.

To begin with. Marvin was neat. He always licked his feet after every meal and brushed himself against a tree or somebody's leg whenever he had been lying in the grass. I might add here that Marv (for that is what his best friends called him) congenitally thought of his paws as feet, and because of this idiosyncrasy, everyone who knew him was careful to refer to them as such. In fact it was never said that he wore white boots — he wore sneakers instead and low-cuts at that.

Secondly Marv was courteous. He was careful to show those little white feet of his to anyone he walked past because except for those feet, Marv was otherwise a "dark black," and he never really wanted to frighten anyone. Moreover, he always played with mice before he ate them.

Then too for a pussycat he was amazingly unselfish. As a lot, pussycats are known for their independence and aloofness. Marvin, on the other hand, never lost an opportunity to put himself last. Marv was always the last to go out in the rain or the last to go down into a dark cellar or the last to say anything mean about anybody (which may be stretching the point a little since he couldn't talk anyway).

Now that I've begun this story I might as well tell you the whole truth. You see, Marvin wasn't always exceptional and neat and courteous and selfless. No sirree! When he was just a kitten he would roll in the dirt and never bother to lick himself off. He would dash in front of visitors to our house and scare them clean fierce. On special days like Christmas or Sunday he would drag old moth-eaten rats or moles right in where everyone was eating turkey or chicken giblets gravy on rice. When people would go into the cellar Marv would leap ahead of them causing whoever it was to fall the rest of the way down the steps. Also, no amount of badgering could ever get him to come out unless he felt like coming.

Marvin was a mess.

It comes back to me now just as clear as if it happened yesterday.

Mom was hanging up clothes in the yard, and Marv was helping her by pulling her shoestrings loose with his teeth and claws, pretending, like the rascal he was, to be playing. On one swing he missed the shoelace and latched onto an ankle instead which caused Mom to leap some distance into the air and tip over the hanging basket of clothespins which fell as a wooden rainstorm smack on Marvin's head.

When he tried to stand up he fell on his back instead, and his feet went straight up in the air, then he rolled over on his other side. His face suddenly contorted in a grimace and I knew then and there that he was in the rinse cycle. I found myself looking forward to spin dry. When his legs went back and forth in a running motion. and since he was really on his side, and he just spun around and around on the ground, I took it as a confirmation of my suspicions.

After he quieted down I had half a notion to hang him up on the line by his tail, but I figured he had had enough humiliation in one day for a passle of pussycats so I quietly walked away. When I came back later he was gone.

Next day around suppertime there was not the usual scratching at the door. I figured our boy had probably skipped town rather than face us again.

However, when I went out to call for him, there he sat calmly waiting for someone to fill his bowl. He didn't avert his eyes, but looked straight at me. He certainly wasn't wishy-washy (so to speak) and I knew it took courage to bounce back like that so I nodded in his direction and went in to get his supper. He accepted fate so graciously that I think I may have even slipped him an extra spoonful of Puss 'n Boots.

And that is how I got a "new" Marvin.

Slick as goose grease Marv and his pride were in the cellar. Though he sniffed from place to place like nothing had happened, inside I knew his composure was all bunged up.

It was twenty minutes before Mom went back into the cellar for another load of clothes and by then the washer was just clicking off . . .

Try to imagine opening the top of your automatic washer and seeing a black (except for the feet) pussycat tangled in the sheets. Mom just stood there shouting, "Oo-oo-oo-oo," and Marvin opened his mouth to say heaven knows what but couldn't make a sound because one of Dad's socks was in his mouth.

Well the best I could figure when Mom called me down to get him out was that she had forgotten to close the lid, which as you know prevents the washer from starting, and Marv in his sniffing was so preoccupied with his feelings that he slipped on the porcelain into the tub and the lid slammed down starting the cycle.

I lifted Mary up about as tenderly as you can fondle a soggy cat, unraveled the sheets and took him outside on the lawn to dry. Once in the sunshine he just lay there on his side and scrinched his eyes up so you could see his teeth and you know how rarely you get to see eat teeth so that was a loss of pride right there. I started to suspect rather early in the proceedings an order to the madness that followed, although I couldn't tell exactly what he was thinking cause he just sorta wheezed a little and looked very mumpish.

Intelligence appears to be the thing that enables a man to get along without education. Education appears to be the thing that enables a man to get along without the use of his intelligence.

An educated man stands, as it were, in the midst of a boundless arsenal and magazine, filled with all the weapons and engines which man's skill has been able to devise from the earliest time.

that members of the Board gave $133,146, not including a $500,000 commitment by Algie Sutton of Greenville, S. C., and that the college faculty and staff contributed another $23,355.

"Mr. Sutton really gave us the second boost," Gamble added. "He made a $500,000 commitment of which $250,000 was to be given on a matching basis in this campaign for funds for a science building. The other $250,000 is to be given when total alumni giving reaches $500,000. The $1,053,405 announced last night does not include the second $250,000 pledge by Sutton.

President Copeland pointed out that alumni participation in the campaign was over 39 per cent, a degree of participation never before reached at Maryville College. He also announced that in the over-all $7,000,000 campaign, $3,800,000 has been raised to date, leaving $3,200,000 to be obtained before the end of the fiscal year 1969.

February meetings last through Wednesay

The February Meetings this year bring to Maryville College Dr. George M. Docherty, main speaker, Dr. Theodore S. Stevens, Miss Emily Gibbes, the Reverend and Mrs. Ernest Mathews, the Reverend William Jones, and the Reverend Dale Watson.

These leaders will fulfill several functions: speaking at regular services, personal interviews, Salt Cellar discussions, and dormitory discussions.

The regular services are at 9:40 a.m. and 7 p.m., continuing through Wednesday. For personal interviews, students may make appointments in the chaplain's office. Salt Cellar discussions will begin at 8:30. Dormitory discussions will be from 10:30 to 11:15.

Gainsborough, who lived from 1727 to 1788, is a well-known English portrait and landscape painter. He also was noted for his truthful likenesses in portraiture, and like Goya, worked verv rapidly. Many of the great and near-great of the time sat for portraits by Gainsborough. His work has largely been represented in private collections in England and the United States.

The Gainsborough painting given to Maryville College is a landscape known as "The Leaning Birch." It was painted about 1765 and was originally in the collection of Viscount Temple. It shows a farm girl and three cows on the left bank of a small rivulet opposite a thatch-roofed farmhouse protected by a group of trees in autumn foliage. A flock of sheep is in the meadow at the center of the painting, with hills in the background.

Zuccarelli, who lived from 1702 to 1788, has been called one of the best landscape painters of the 18th century. He lived much of his life in England and was one of the foundation members of the British Royal Academy, in which Gainsborough was also a leader.

He is known for his landscapes showing classic ruins and small figures in the background. His paintings are at Windsor Castle, the Louvre, and the National Gallery of Art.

The two pictures by Zuccarelli given to Maryville College are a pair of landscapes with figures. The first shows a sandy path winding through a wooded landscape where herdsmen are driving a flock of sheep. A shepherdess in front is talking to two Franciscans, who are seated by the wayside. The second shows gypsies resting around an open fire at the edge of a mountain road. An elegantly dressed cavalier, with his god, stands talking to them.

The value of the paintings, not yet established, will be added to the Development Fund.

ROJAS DISCUSSES LATIN AMERICA

by Vicki Green

Friday evening, February 12, Sergio Rojas, former ambassador to Great Britain from Cuba, lectured in the Chapel on "The Coming Explosion in Latin America." In his lecture, Ambassador Rojas discussed the growing population and stature of Latin America. By 2000 its population will be double that of the United States. Such a development makes it imperative that the United States establish a better relationship with Latin American countries in order to cultivate allies rather than enemies. He mentioned the need for U. S. propaganda to combat Communism in these countries.

Earlier in the evening while meeting with the Lecture Series Committee, Rojas compared the education system in the United States with that of Europe (his eleven-year-old daugher has been educated under both systems). He stated that the American student has more freedom in choosing his course of study than does the European student. In America a student becomes expert in a special field, whereas in Europe the student gains a more general and cultured education.

A question and answer period followed the lecture. In answer to questions, Rojas commended our efforts in the Peace Corps as a more effective effort than the Alliance for Progress program. The latter needs more funds.

Educational relations make the strongest tie.

McGowan Paces Cagers; Scots Take Two Games

A late season surge led by junior forward Denny McGowan gave the Maryville College two victories in their past three games. The triumphs came at the expense of Berea College, which fell by a score of 59-55, and Milligan College, which lost in the final second of play, 70-69.

The wins pushed the Scots' season's record to 5 and 14.

Maryville 59, Berea 55

The victory over Berea was one of the most satisfying of the year for Coach Baird and his cagers. Still smarting from last year's 106-39 debacle in which Berea officials forced four Maryville starters to the bench on personal fouls and called five technical fouls on the Scots, the Highlanders had been waiting for a chance to gain revenge.

The game started slowly. Unable to hit on their outside shots and hampered by poor rebounding, the Scots scored only 17 points in the first half, while the Bears were picking up 27.

In the second half, however, the Maryville squad began to gain momentum. Led by Denny McGowan's 15 points, the Highlanders scored a total of 42 tallies. With the score tied, 55 to 55, guard Kip Martin hit on a pair of foul shots to pull the Scots into the lead.

A few seconds later two more free throws clinched the victory for the Highlanders.

McGowan led all Maryville scorers with 19 points. He was backed up by Jack Llewellyn, who had 10.

Maryville 70, Milligan 69

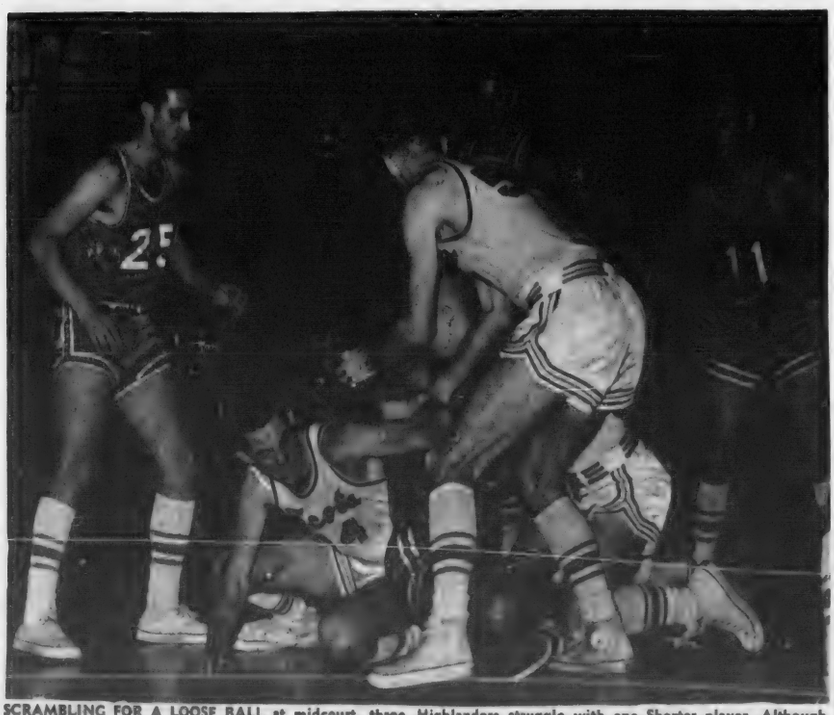
The game with Milligan was a tense one. At the half, Milligan had compiled a 3 point, 35-32 lead. The Scots came on strong in the second half, however, to gain the win.

It was again McGowan who provided the spark. Scoring 17 points after the half-time break, the 6'2" forward combined with Jack Llewellyn, who tallied 10, to account for all but 11 of Maryville's second half total.

The heroics, however, belonged to Mike Dalton. With less than 10 seconds left in the game, the Milligan squad hung tenaciously to a 69-68 lead. A last-second shot by the Buffs was wide and Dalton pulled down the rebound, only to be fouled by a too zealous Milligan forward.

With one second left in the game, Dalton stepped to the foul line with a one-and-one situation. The husky forward sank the first shot, pulling the Scots even with the Buffs.

Dalton's second shot hit the rim, bounced around, and finally fell through to give Maryville their second straight triumph.



McGowan again led all Maryville scorers with 24 points. He was backed up by Kip Martin and Jack Llewellyn, who hit for 15 and 10 points respectively.

Maryville 60, Centre 70

Hoping to extend their victory streak to 3 straight, Maryville took on Centre College. The Praying Colonels, however, proved to be too much for the Highlanders.

Leading by 4 points at the half, Centre overcame another fine second half performance by McGowan to outscore the Scots 40-34 and secure a 70-60 triumph.

McGowan's 19 points in the second half gave him a total of 25, to top all scorers. Dave Alexander hit for 14.

SCRAMBLING FOR A LOOSE BALL at midcourt, three Highlanders struggle with one Shorter player. Although surrounded by Dave Alexander, Mike Moyers, and Jim Hogue, the lone Shorter player has only to look a few feet further for the rest of his teammates.

Henderson, Johnson, Mitchell Lead Scots Into SEC Finals

The Maryville College wrestling team, tuning up for the rapidly approaching SEC Tournament, won three of their last five matches. Falling before the Scot grapplers were Milligan, the Knoxville Y, and Emory College, while the University of the South and Georgia Tech both registered triumphs over the Highlanders.

Maryville registered a 21-11 victory over Milligan College. John Henderson, Ralph Johnson, Will Mitchell, and Carl Gehman decisioned their opponents, and Don Shields pinned his man to pace the Scots' triumph.

The Highlanders continued their winning ways against the Knoxville Y. Only Will Mitchell, Don Shields, and Carl Gehman, all of whom tied, failed to score wins over the Y wrestlers. Ralph Johnson and Gene Dixon registered pins.

Against the University of the South, the luck of the Scots turned, and Maryville was turned back by a score of 20-11. The Scots got off to a good start with John Henderson and Ralph Johnson taking easy decisions.

Will Mitchell continued the opening success of the two fine freshman grapplers by pinning his opponent. However, after these opening triumphs, the Highlanders were shut out by the Sewanee wrestlers.

Georgia Tech also defeated the Maryville team, 20-11. Again it was Mitchell who topped the Scots' showing by pinning his man. Mitchell's success, however, was no greater than was Maryville's fine 123 pound grappler John Henderson, who decisioned last year's 115 pound SEC champion.

Traveling the few miles from Georgia Tech to Emory University, Maryville had considerably more success. John Henderson and 167 pounder Carl Gehman scored decisions and the rest of the Scots all pinned their Georgia opponents to gain a 36-3 victory.

Another fine freshman, Ralph Johnson, who wrestles at 130 pounds, topped the Maryville pins, by forcing his opponent's shoulders to the mat in one minute. Will Mitchell and Clint Abbott also scored their pins in the first period.

Two more matches are on the Scots' schedule before the SEC tournament takes place. The tournament, which brings the finest wrestlers from the South together, will be held at Maryville College this year on the 26 and 27 of February.

Sports Focus: Wrestling

Although wrestling has long been a popular sport at Maryville, there are members of the student body, especially among the freshmen, who have never seen a wrestling match. Several have expressed their desire for a brief account of the scoring rules so that they may understand what is happening. In answer to these requests the Highland Echo is running this article in which these rules will be listed.

Reversal Worth 2 Points

There are six ways in which a wrestler may earn points. The first of these is the take down. The initial take down is worth two points, and each succeeding take down scores one point. After the take down, the wrestler must maintain control of his opponent.

If the man on the bottom frees himself, he is credited with an escape and one point. If, however, he manages to gain the top position and control of his opponent, he is given two points for a reversal.

Pin Gets Decision

The most decisive finish to a match is the pin. There are several ways, however, in which a wrestler cannot succeed in pinning his oppoent and still win points. One of these is the near-pin.

This is a situation in which the offensive wrestler has control of his opponent in a pinning combination, with both shoulders or the scapula area held in contact with the mat for one full second; or when one shoulder of the defensive wrestler is touching the mat, and the other shoulder is held within one inch of the mat for two full seconds.

A near-fall is worth three points. Closely connected with it is the predicament. Awarded with two points, the predicament is said to occur when the offersive wrestler has control of his opponent in a pinning combination and a near-fall or fall is imminent.

Riding Time Important

If the match is completed and the two wrestlers are tied, the decision is determined by riding time. When a wrestler secures a position of advantage, he starts to accumulate time, scoring one point for each minute of net time advantage. In other words if one wrestler has "ridden" his opponent for one minute above the time that he has been "ridden." he wins a point. Frequently, riding time is the decisive factor in a match.

Mike Moyers

In my four years here at Maryville, student government has engaged in a constant and sometimes rather bold dialogue with the college administration. Student opinion has been formulated and expressed in many ways. And its reception has varied with the time and the subject. Let's take a few examples.

In my freshman year, a student poll taken by every class showed Maryville College students heavily in favor of such things as Sunday athletics and Sunday dating, if these two activities need separating. These student ideas spent several months in a committee, were evaluated by the students and faculty members, and emerged as constructive recommendations for changes in Maryville's social habits. In sharp contrast to this meeting of minds was another major policy change in the same year. News concerning the end of the Church Attendance Law reached most Maryville students one morning in chapel. The printed sheets presented us seemed to be an apology, the furtive work of a committee that realized its own heresy. Not that the change was not appreciated, but do note the different character of the two new policy formations.

We were told in that first year of our new president that there was no area of our campus life and education which would not be open to scrutiny. And student government began scrutinizing almost immediately. Our discussions in the next two years took the pattern of council proposals, discussions together, and administrative rejection. This form was followed in three areas: cars for campus students, the "alcohol situation," and a proposal for reconstituting the Discipline Committee. Council's proposals, very extensive in nature and generally well thought out, were met with several types of reaction. There was the strange feeling implied, from several sources, that there could be no other situation for Maryville than the status quo. This attitude was not predominant, and most administrators began patiently to explain just "why we have found this to be the best policy here at Maryville." Very few administrators — and without a doubt, this is an indictment — viewed these student expressions as an indication of a problem which needed to be solved. What was necessary was not to discover what was right for the Maryville situation, but to

Dr. Hunter's record to be released soon

A recording of Dr. Edwin R. Hunter reading selections from his latest book, This Man's Art, will be ready for release about March 15. The 12-inch long-playing record may be ordered for $5, including postage and handling.

Orders for the recording may be made through the Development Office. Copies of the book are still available at $5 each.

'Echo' returns to bi-weekly status

The Highland Echo, published first semester experimentally as a weekly newspaper, will return to bi-weekly publication. The editorial staff made the decision last week.

The Echo will be published on March 20, March 27, April 17, May 1, May 15, and May 29 for the rest of this semester.

Observance to be for entire month of March

A Fine Arts Festival, including showings of paintings by 18th century masters recently given to Maryville College, plus special music programs, and a lecture by an outstanding alumnus is being held at Maryville College during the month of March.

The first showing of the paintings by Francisco de Goya y Lucientes, Thomas Gainsborough and Francesco Zuccarelli was in the art gallery of the Fine Arts Center March 1 and 2.

Knoxville symphony plays

The works included a portrait entitled "La Joven" by Goya, a seated figure at three-quarter length of a youthful girl; a landscape called "The Leaning Birch" by the British painter Gainsborough; and two landscapes by the Italian Zuccarelli.

The opening musical program of the Fine Arts Festival was a program by the Knoxville Symphony Orchestra under David Van Vactor on March 2 in the College Chapel. The orchestra played Bach's "Suite No. 3 in D Major," followed by "La Folia" (Variations serieuses) by Corelli with Kent Perry of the College faculty as violin soloist. The pipe organ in the chapel was played by Dr. James A. Bloy of the faculty for the orchestra and organ "Concerto for Organ in G Minor" by Poulenc. Closing the program was Rachmaninoff's "The Bells."

Dancers to be presented by Artists Series

The San Francisco Contemporary Dancers Company will perform for the Maryville College-Community Artists Series on Thursday, March 18.

The company headed by J Marks, director-choreographer, plans to present a program of six dances including sets done solo, duo, and with the entire company. The program will be based on various media including music by Maurice Ravel and Dave Brubeck, and fables by James Thurber.

The troupe was organized by J Marks in the spring of 1954 with the specific idea of the creation of a unique dance company.

The Contemporary Dancers have become famous for the powerful drama of their dances. They were the first group to be invited to perform at the Monterey Jazz Festival.

The presentation will begin at 8:15 p.m. in the Chapel.

Lip service

As you can read elsewhere in the paper, the Echo is returning to bi-weekly publication. We (the staff) voted last spring to experiment with a weekly paper the first semester, but we found it impractical because of circumstances which seem to be inalterable.

The Echo must pay for itself. We do receive a subsidy from the students' activity fee, but this is not sufficient for our expenses. We solicit advertising, but we have not been able to get enough ads consistently to meet these expenses.

When we have gotten the required inches of advertising, there is not enough space left in which to cover campus activities. So people complain that the paper is one big ad. Everyone and his great aunt thinks he knows how to run a newspaper.

The lack of space has caused the "feature section" to suffer—in the case of the usual four-page issue, the two inside pages.

So we are returning, regretfully, to a bi-weekly, six or eight-page paper, hoping to remedy all these situations.

We (the editor) have come to an unfortunate conclusion: Money makes the world go round.

* * * * * *

Two weeks ago, in the February 20 issue, we printed a story by David Powell, "Some of My Best Friends Have Whiskers." If you read it and thought Dave was out of his skull, please read it again. Start at the top and read for six paragraphs. After "Marvin was a mess" skip seven paragraphs and start again at "Slick as a goose . . ." After reading down to the last, go back to the place you first stopped and start again at "It comes back to me . . ." and read through to the end. "And that's how I got a 'new' Marvin." We don't know what happened, but we apologize.

* * * * * *

Our policy for some time has been not to accept poetry from students for the paper. However, we'd like to begin printing it again. You may submit poetry to us, Box 182, or to Barbara Bullard, Box 93. We reserve the right not to print anything we consider, for one reason or another, not suitable. We'd like to have any other form of creative writing, too.

Letters To The Editor

Dear Editor,

Tokyo, Japan is the largest city in the world. Last summer when I was there, I realized, for the first time, what it meant to be alone, and yet to be surrounded by millions of people.

I was alone because I couldn't read any signs, I could not understand conversations around me, and I could not speak to anyone. I was alone also because I was an American, the only American in that particular group of Japanese.

I greatly appreciated the help given me by these people when I was trying to find my way around Tokyo. Instead of merely giving directions, they would take me to the place I needed to go. I found myself wondering if Americans would do the same for a visitor in our country.

I compared the Tokyo subways to those of New York City, and as an American citizen I am ashamed to admit that the Tokyo subways were much better. Not only were they spotlessly clean, but they were easier to get around in, in spite of the language barrier. I think we could learn a lesson from the Japanese in the matter of public cleanliness and the absence of littering.

As a military dependent, and as a friend of many other military dependents, I have seen the arrogance of Americans give bad impressions of our citizens to the peoples of other countries. I think we need to see that we can get other ideas, even better ideas, from other lands.

I have really been disappointed in the lack of interest of the students of this campus to the increasingly tense situation in Vietnam. Many students have heard the name, but the recollection is rather vague. What would be the reaction if we should one day hear the annoucement that war has been declared? How many students will know why and what events led to that announcement?

I want to urge students to care enough about the welfare of the United States to listen to radio newcasts, read newspapers, or watch TV newcasts.

We have been called the "shook-up generation." Why shouldn't we prove that we have more stability than we have been given credit for?

OPTIMISM FAILS AGAIN

by Sandra Chittick

"Jeepers, this paper is nothing but one big ad," often seemed to be a good criticism of the Echo. Upon inquiry I soon found out that the Echo rarely carries even enough advertising to pay for itself. Failing to oppose the multitudinous ads, I decided to join the struggle to obtain them.

Spending two afternoons trudging the "Broadway beat," I was repeatedly met with "maybe next time" — even though Echo advertising is reasonable: $1.80 for an ad 2" X 3".

I rapidly reached a few conclusions: (1) my salesmanship was lousy; (2) the phenomenon advertising had not yet reached the Maryville metropolis; (3) local merchants were unimpressed by the Echo; or (4) the buying power of the Maryville College student wasn't very attractive.

I felt a little better when a kind optician whom I failed to persuade to put in an ad for prescription sunglasses (it was against the law for him to advertise) insisted on putting in a space "From A Friend." A true Southern gentleman? No — a doctor from New York! And the paper was saved by the diligent efforts of the regular "ad man" — Bill Erwin.

Sunshine in the Gallery

by Kathie Kirk

This Wednesday a gang of seniors from Alcoa High School invaded the Fine Arts Center, not with the intention of lifting the Goya, but to put up a display of their work.

The entire art department of the Alcoa school system has been working feverishly to prepare this exhibit. Mrs. Martha Wright and some of her more industrious students have been busy mounting and labelling the work of almost every student involved in the art program.

The exhibit includes grades one through twelve. Variety is the keynote. Works range from a first grader's interpretation of brushing his teeth (which are represented as long long yellow fangs — "I didn't have a white crayon!") to the seniors' execution of such products as YUM-YUM Shark Repellent and Pink Pansy Shampoo.

Marionettes, masks, junk constructions, paper mosaics, collages, murals, ceramics and sculpture are just a few of the gems which are displayed, and they are gems. There is no end to the creativity of a child. The imagination and untarnished vistas of life would warm Dr. Docherty's heart.

What a Gainsborough can't do to freshen your outlook, this exhibit can. It will remain in the Fine Arts Gallery throughout the month of March.

Haynes and Reagin to be Vesper speakers

The Vespers speaker for Sunday evening at 7 p.m., March 7, will be the Reverend Warren Haynes, Rector of St. Andrews Episcopal Church, Maryville. The College Choir will sing.

On Sunday evening at 7 p.m., March 14, the Reverend Ewell Reagin, University Pastor at the Presbyterian Center at the University of Tennessee, will be the Vespers speaker. The Alcoa High School Choir will sing.

Education is a thing of which only the few are capable; teach as you will only a small percentage will profit by your most zealous energy.

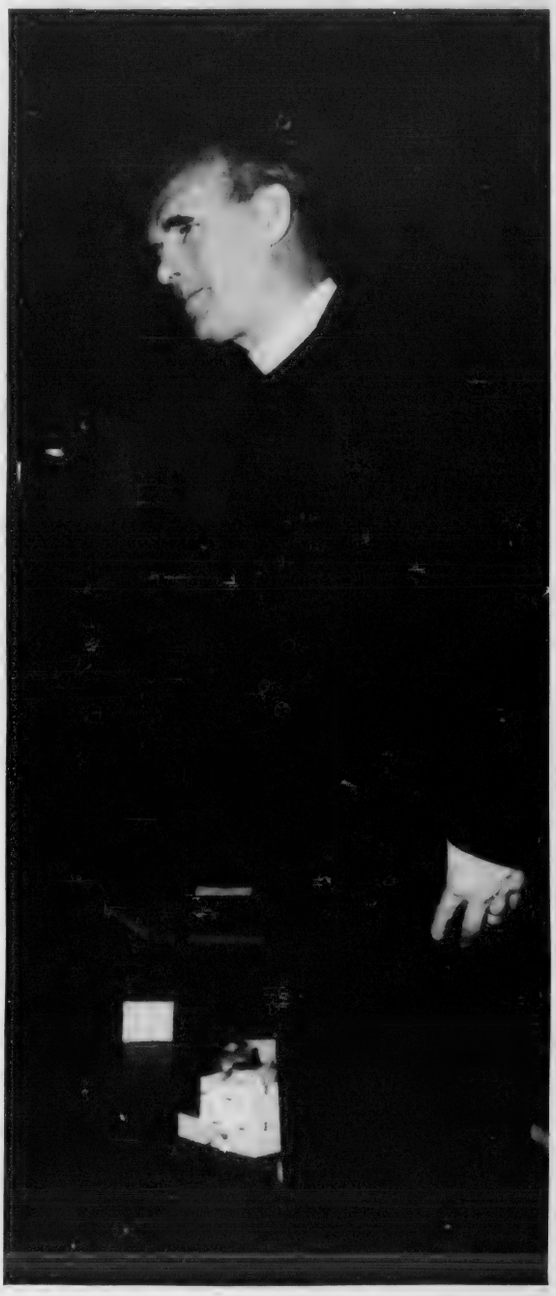
DR. HUNTER'S ART ON RECORD

by Carole Brownlee

Scheduled to appear in the middle of this month is a long-playing recording by Dr. Edwin R. Hunter of the English Department. Dr. Hunter has chosen to include some of his favorite poems from the recently published This Man's Art, a book which collects his poetic work from a period of 52 years.



The monologue "A Man from Stratford Entertains Ben Jonson" was selected for recording because Dr. Hunter considers it to be his best work. He also reads his "Three Sonnets for E.A.R.' which are dedicated to Edwin Arlington Robinson, the man whose work had great literary influence on the early poems. Other poems on the record include the popular parodies, the catchy haikus, and the familiar Christmas poems.

Dr. Hunter's colleague, Dr. Carolyn L. Blair, has written a short critique which will appear on the back of the record jacket along with a biographical note about the poet. An interesting pen sketch of Dr. Hunter has been done for the cover of the jacket by William Swenson of the Art Department.

Orders for the record are now being received by Raymond I. Brahams in the Development Office, and copies of it will soon be available.

Fayerweather Flash -----

There has been a reactionary group organized to oppose the movement of throwing said Alanus hughus dogfish shark into the fishpond. Said Sandus gretus cat was found in the autoclave—a sudden and unexpected reaction to what had started out as a humorous prank.

Other reactions also occurring (whether organized is not known) are the sounds of a strange voice audible only to overworked and frustrated students — better known as "the ghost of Fayerweather Hall."

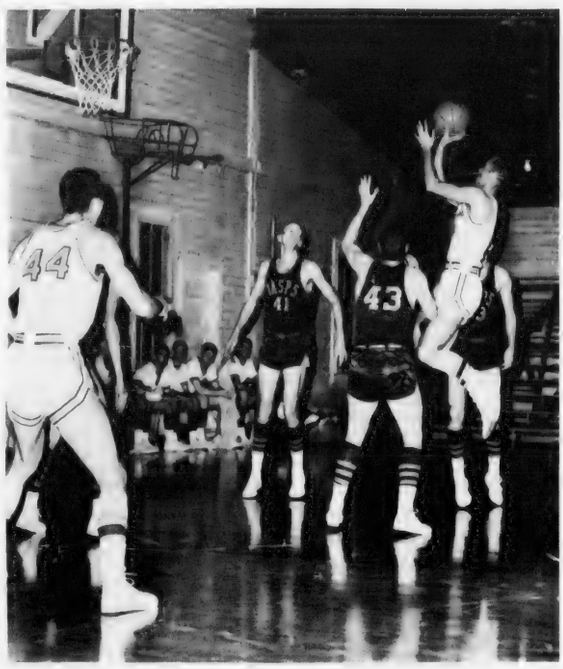
Scot Cagers Take Sixth Victory; Martin, Moyers Close Careers



Hoping to improve on their season's record of 5 wins and 16 losses, the Maryville College basketball team went on a scoring binge in the last three games of the season.

However, although averaging just under 76 points per contest, the Scots were able to cop only one victory, a 79-62 trouncing of Emory & Henry in the last home game of the year. Leaving their own court, the Highlanders were less fortunate and dropped games to Asheville-Biltmore and Mars Hill.

Maryville 79, Emory & Henry 62

The 79-62 conquest of Emory and Henry avenged a loss to the Wasp squad earlier in the season. The Maryville cagers presented a balanced attack, hitting for 39 points in the first half and scoring 40 in the second.

It was in the first part of the game that they built up the decisive margin. The Scots were led in their first half activities by senior forward Mike Moyers and guard Jack Llewellyn, each of whom tallied 8 points.

MARTIN SCORES FOR SCOTS: Senior guard Kip Martin is shown driving for a basket against the Emory and Henry Wasps in the Scots' last home game of the season. Martin joined forward Mike Moyers as the two seniors making their last home appearance. No. 44 is Dave Alexander.

Kip Martin and Mike Dalton were close behind Moyers and Llewellyn as they scored 6 points apiece. The balanced attack gave the Scots a 39-24 edge over their opponents from Virginia.

Maryville continued to have facility in putting the ball in Emory and Henry's basket throughout the second half. Again it was Moyers who topped the Scots, hitting for 12 points. Kip Martin added 10 and Denny McGowan scored 8.

The Wasps, who nearly matched Maryville's second half output, were unable to overcome the margin compiled by the Highlanders in the first half of the game, and fell by a score of 79-62.

The last home contest of the season saw two seniors in their final game before the Maryville fans. Guard Kip Martin and forward Mike Moyers were making their farewell oppearance. Both seemed to respond to the stimulus as they led Maryville's scoring. Moyers had 20 points while Martin collected 16.

Maryville 70, Asheville-Biltmore 75

The Scots had high hopes of increasing their winning streak to two games when they journeyed to Asheville, North Carolina, to meet the Asheville-Biltmore team. The North Carolina squad had won a close 76 to 72 victory over the Highlanders earlier in the season.

When the game was over, however, the outcome was approximately the same with Biltmore adding a single point to their victory margin.

Maryville started off well. Led by Denny McGowan's 14 points, the Scots held a 40-36 lead at the half time break. The second half, however, turned out to be a different story. The Asheville cagers concentrated their defenses on McGowan and held him to a mere 6 points, while the rest of the Scots were unable to pick up the slack.

Biltmore overcame the Scots and pulled away to register a 75-70 triumph. Maryville scorers were led by McGowan with 20 points, while guard Jack Llewellyn added 16 to the Maryville total.

A few miles outside of Asheville, the Scots ran into one of the most potent offensives they had seen all year. The Mars Hill squad put together halves of 41 and 53 points to leave the Maryville cagers far behind with a respectable, but inadequate, 78 tallies.

Through the efforts of Mike Moyers and Denny McGowan, who scored 10 and nine points respectively, Maryville trailed by only six at half time. However, the Highlanders were unable to keep up with the torrid pace set by the North Carolina school in the last half of action.

Denny McGowan's 17 points topped all Maryville scorers, although Moyers was only a point behind him with 16. Mike Dalton tallied 14 points for the Scot's cause.

Scots Show Improvement

The victory and pair of losses set the Highlanders' season's record at six wins and 18 defeats. Although the record is not an admirable one, it is a marked improvement over the 1963-64 season in which the Scots won only two games. The Highlanders were also involved in several close contests in which a fortuitously placed field goal would have improved their record even further.

Only two seniors are on the team — Mike Moyers and Kip Martin. With Dave Alexander and Denny McGowan returning to the forecourt and Jack Llewellyn and Mike Dalton returning to the guard positions Coach Baird will have an experienced nucleus around which to build his squad in the 1965-66 season.

Johnson Comments on Wrestling

by Phil Jerome

Dr. Jerry Waters, a former SEC wrestling champion at 123 pounds in 1955 and again in 1956, had words of praise for Maryville's new 130 pound champion, Ralph Johnson. Dr. Waters stressed that Johnson's achievement was made more remarkable by the fact that he is only a freshman.

The Echo has undertaken to record some of Johnson's feelings and opinions on his championship match. The interview was held approximately 24 hours after he had won the title.

ON NERVOUSNESS: "I wasn't nervous for the tournament. I've been wrestling so long that I don't get nervous anymore. I get sort of an electric feeling; it's not butterflies, but my hands get sweaty, and I want to get out and wrestle."

ON HIS EARLY TAKEDOWN in the championship match with Georgia's Mike Godewski: "Wrestling is a combination of a lot of things. It's part desire, part experience, part knowledge, but it's at least half psychological. I wanted to worry him. That's why I nailed him in the first seconds."

ON VICTORY: "I took him down early and rode him throughout the first period. Then I won the toss. That's the first time I've won the toss in a long time, and I rode him for all of the second period. It was in the second period that I knew I was going to beat him."

ON THE THIRD PERIOD in which it seemed that Godewski might pin him: "I'm good friends with Greek (Georgia Tech's 123 pound champion), and he told me that Godewski is a good rider. I just tried to stay loose, because I knew that I had him on points. He (Godewski) wasn't as close to a pin as it may have looked. I wasn't worried at all. For one thing, I've never been pinned before. Also, he only had one arm and I knew that for the pin he was trying for he needed to have both arms."

ON RON PRITTS: "The guy who really did a good job was Ron Pritts (Maryville's third place winner in the 137 pound class). He was wrestling guys who were much heavier than he was. He should have been in the 123 class. He's one of the smartest wrestlers I've ever seen. He thinks a lot, and he's always about two or three moves ahead of his opponent."

Auburn Takes 18th SEC Championship; Scots' Ralph Johnson Wins 130 Crown

Auburn won its eighteenth consecutive Southeastern Conference Intercollegiate wrestling championship here last week. The Tigers swept their way to four individual championships while compiling a total of 81 team points. Georgia Tech with 56 points was second.

Johnson Leads Scots

Although Maryville finished a disappointing eighth in the ten team tournament, there were several bright spots for the Scots' enthusiasts. Ralph Johnson headed the Maryville delegation. By copping the 130 pound division championship, the freshman grappler became the first Maryville man to take first place honors since Jim Baxter accomplished the feat in 1962.

SCOT FALLS TO GEORGIAN: Maryville's 157 pounder, Don Shields, is shown here in his match with Georgia's James Wheeler. Wheeler went on to defeat Shields to take third place in the division. Shields was fourth.

Johnson was backed up by two other newcomers to the Maryville wrestling scene. Ron Pritts, a sophomore transfer student from Syracuse, took third place in the 137 pound division, and freshman John Henderson grabbed another third place finish in the 115 pound class. The Maryville scoring was rounded out by two-year veteran Don Shields, who was fourth at 157 pounds.

Godewski Defeated for Title

Chattanooga's Schach Van Deusen was Johnson's first victim on his climb to the title. Van Deusen lost by a score of 4-0. Saturday afternoon Johnson took the second step on his way to the crown, defeating Paul May of Georgia Tech four to one.

That evening Johnson met his final foe, Georgia's Mike Godewski. The 130 pound freshman moved in fast in the opening seconds to secure the take down, rode Godewski throught the first and second periods and then held on to win 5 to 3.

Pritts Overcomes Obstacles

J. D. Davis, Maryville's popular grappling mentor, praised his new champion, saying that Johnson had done "an exceptionally good job, doing everything but pinning his opponent."

Davis also had words of commendation for Ron Pritts. Pritts, a tough 128 pounder from New York, worked under several severe handicaps while wrestling to a third place finish in the 137 pound division. The first of these handicaps was the fact that because he is a newcomer to the SEC, Pritts had no way of knowing any of his opponents.

Secondly, he was forced to wrestle men that weighed from eight to ten pounds more than he. Although he could have been eligible for the 123 pound division, a last minute change in Maryville's plans put the 128 pounder in the 137 pound division.

Pritts Takes Third

A third handicap was that he was unseeded because of his recent appearance on the SEC scene. Placed in the lowest bracket, Pritts had to wrestle the defending champion, George Farr from Chattanooga, in the first match.

At the end of nine minutes, the score was even at four all, but Farr was awarded the victory on riding time. Following his first round defeat, Pritts defeated Milligan's Sam Bower and Auburn's Jim Wellingham to take third place honors.

Henderson Loses to Brown

Another of the Scots' best grapplers, John Henderson, was the victim of a division filled with top wrestlers. Leonard Brown, defending 115 pound champion from Georgia Tech, and Auburn's Sal Zarcone, last year's 123 pound champion, made the 115 pound class one of the toughest in the tournament.

On the basis of a Henderson victory over defending champion Brown earlier in the season, Coach Davis gave the 115 pound Maryville wrestler a good chance for taking the championship. After defeating Milligan's Tom McCune by a score of 15-1 in the first round, Henderson had his second shutdown with Tech's Brown on Saturday afternoon.

Suffering from anxiety and SEC tournament inexperience, Henderson made several early mistakes and the defending champion held a 6-0 lead after the first period. Henderson tried to catch up, but the six point margin was too great, and he lost the match 11 to 7.

In the consolation matches Saturday night, Henderson clinched third place, defeating Sewanee's Bill Harwell, while Brown was losing his championship to Auburn's Zarcone.

Champion Defeats Shields

Don Shields, a 157 pounder, was the fourth Maryville wrestler to take SEC honors. Like Henderson and Pritts, Shields had to meet a returning champion early in the matches. Shields found himself pitted against 1964's 147 pound champion, Auburn's Henry Starnes in the opening round. Starnes disposed of Shields ad went on to win the division championship.

Shields came back to win his second match and then lost to James Wheeler of Georgia in the consolation round for his fourth place medal.

Coach Davis noted that his squad had scored less points than it ever has before. One of the reasons for this was that his wrestlers had suffered from the seedings. Ron Pritts, Don Shields, and Van Pallas all drew defending champions in the opening round.

The team scores in order of finish were as follows: Auburn 81, Georgia Tech 56, Chattanooga 35, Sewanee 32, Carson-Newman 30, Milligan 28, Georgia 27, Maryville 25, Emory 11, and University of Tennessee 1.

Individual Champions

Individual championships were taken by Auburn's Sal Zarcone at 115; Phil Greek of Georgia Tech at 123 (his second consecutive championship); Maryville's Ralph Johnson at 130; Georgia Tech's James Pond in the 137 pound division; Rick Umbach of Auburn at 147; Auburn's Henry Starnes (last year's 147 pound champion) at 157; Paul Tessman of Sewanee for the third straight time) in the 167 pound class; Rex Jackson of Milligan at 177; Georgia Tech's Mike Givens at 191; and John McAfee of Auburn captured his third straight championship in the heavyweight division.

M'ville Grapplers Paced By Henderson, Johnson, Mitchell

Winning five of their last seven meets, the Maryville College wrestling team finished the regular season with a record of six victories and nine losses. The Scots' rapid improvement at the end of the year compensated for a slow start which gave the Maryville squad a record of one and seven midway in the year.

Leading the Maryville grapplers was freshman star Ralph Johnson. Starting in the 137 pound division and working his way down to 130, Johnson scored 48 points on four decisions, five pins, three draws, and a forfeit.

Senior letterman Will Mitchell followed Johnson in the point totals. Mitchell closed with a rush, pinning four of his last five opponents, bringing his total to 36 points.

Another freshman, John Henderson, was only three points behind Mitchell. All 33 of Henderson's points came on decisions.

Below are the scoring totals of the whole squad. The scoring is done on the following basis: a pin earns five points, a decision is given three and draws are awarded two points. Forfeits, although not listed below, are given five points.

John Henderson (123)	11	9	0	3	33

Five of the six Maryville College debaters who attended the tournament at Sewanee February 18-20 are shown above with trophies they won. They are Jan Rickards and Will Mitchell in back; and Sherry Proffitt, Wanda Hannah, and Annette Sensenig in frot. Not pictured is Lee Sikes.

Debate team places third in Tennessee tournament

Six members of the Maryville College Debate Team received awards in the annual Tennessee State Debate Tournament held February 18 through 20 at the University of the South, Sewanee. Tennessee.

Annette Sensenig, captain of the team, and Wanda Hannah won first place in the women's division in the state. Other winners included Will Mitchell, second place extemporary speaking; Lee Sikes, second place oratory; Jan Rickards, third place extemporary speaking, third place impromptu speaking; and Sherry Proffitt, third place Peace Oratory, third place impromptu speaking.

Maryville took third place in the sweepstakes, a prize for over-all good work. Vanderbilt University placed first, and Memphis second by one point, making Maryville the only small school to rank high.

The tournament was described by a member of the team as "one of our best—much fun and good and competitive." The team was accompanied on the trip by Dr. Walker and Mr. Gossweiler.

Phi and Beta honor seniors

Last week Kappa Phi selected the following girls as their 1965 Leading Ladies: Cecelia Bridges, Nancy Buckwalter, Judy Butler, Tena Criner, Cheryl Robbins, and Judy Wasson.

In the new program designed to honor senior, active Phis who have contributed much to the society, Chi Beta elected Dennis Edelman, John Gardepe, John Gresham, Bob Hutchison, Hal Laster, and Ken Young as Favorite Phis.

These twelve will be honored at a banquet on Saturday evening, March 6. Col. and Mrs. William Taylor will speak.

convince the student of the rightness of the status quo. In other words, Anderson Hall could not understand the point of view of the student; it was simply unfathomable. We students were constantly reminded of the problems of administration, by administrators who failed to appreciate the student problem.

Without raving on at too much length, let me point out a possible result of such a situation. And this is, I hope, without a judgment of the status quo. I have watched my classmates becomes less and less concerned with the rules situation here at Maryville. It seems to be an attitude directly related to the numbers of years spent at the institution. Many would explain this as maturation, a gradual realization of the values inherent in the status quo. I think its relation to maturity is altogether secondary. When students approach me with ideas they think pertinent to our Maryville situation — suggestions for rules changes, if they must be called that — invariably there is included an "I know we've talked about this before, and I'm sure nothing will come of it, but could we just...." There are, simply speaking, very few places for students to register opinion or offer ideas relative to college policy. Consequently, students learn to keep their mouths shut. And perhaps this is maturity. But as the cost of this maturity, the college is deprived of day-to-day evaluation of our status quo by the people most capable of giving it. And without this evaluation, we may well find in our midst some seething (or sulking) students and some decaying anachronisms.

Discussions this year have not been without complications. There has been "over-criticism" by students and "under-reception" by administration. But in Student-Faculty Senate we have engaged in several cooperative and constructive discussions. Our talks have centered around our academic policies and have ranged from finances to curriculum to classroom cheating to teacher rating. One reason for the open atmosphere of these discussions is the realization that we face in the future a continuing readjustment of our educational practices. This realization of the problem area has been accompanied by less insistence on the part of the student. Perhaps this is related to that maturing process we have already spoken of. There have been exceptions — such as the administrator who felt that the best way, and by implication the only way, to handle cheating was through the present disciplinary system. But generally speaking these two factors (more receptive administrators and less adamant students) have led to fruitful exchange of ideas on the problems of academics. Hopefully, this present discussion will continue and will lead to more and better means of expressing student ideas and opinions — not to tell the administration how to run the college, but to aid the administrators, and thus Maryville College, in carrying out this business of higher education.

On March 16 a woodwind and brass ensemble of Maryville College faculty and students will present a recital in the Fine Arts Center Music Hall at 4:30 p. m., and on March 19 there will be a string chamber music recital by Mr. Perry; his wife, Linda, pianist; and Martha Noyes, cellist at 8:15 p. m. in the Music Hall.

An art exhibit by public school students, Maryville College student recitals, and the East Tennessee School Band and Orchestra Association Middle Area String Clinic March 6 complete the program for the special Maryville College fine arts observance.

Perhaps the most valuable pursuit of all education is the ability to make yourself do the thing you have to do, when it ought to be done, whether you like it or not . . . however early a man's training begins, it is probably the last lesson that he learns thoroughly.

The Short Happy Life of Arthur the Turtle

WASHINGTON, Mar. 1 — The stands here are empty now. The sound and fury of 51 hard shells scraping the wooden ramp in the granddaddy of all turtle races has died.

But somewhere in Washington, yesterday's competitors are today's pets and have slipped back into their long winter's sleep.

Students at American University, where the race was held, are still talking about how Goy, AU's favorite son, held off a last-minute rally by Vassar's tiny Matty and charged across the finish line in 58 seconds, hardly winded by his 35-foot romp to the winner's circle.

It was a day to remember — last Friday afternoon — as Washington's press corps turned out en masse for the grand prix of indoor turtle racing.

But when the last turtle had weaily trudged across the finish line, it was the Muscular Dystrophy Fund which came away the big winner. Proceeds from the race, annually donated to the fund, were estimated at well over $400.

So came the press release from AU. The top thirty turtles were listed. We read eagerly. No Arthur. Then we read: "Other colleges and universities whose turtles finished, went to sleep at the starting gate, or were cleared off the track to make way for the next heat were . . ." Sure enough there was Maryville College.

Then we received the following letter from our turtle trainer:

Student Council Members:

Such an honor: "official turtle trainer." My neighbors and friends poked fun — due to envy.

Weeks in advance our family set aside February 26 as turtle-race day. We arrived at the gymnasium in time to hear American University's president make a dignified speech. Then the ling, horn blowing — which excitement — yelling, whist- went completely unnoticed by the participants.

Some were pushed off at the starting gate and never woke up. It was all so thrilling that I took pictures of the first and third heats (Arthur being in the second) and failed to wind the camera . . .

Lots of comments to make. Goy, the winner, was so

Group organized for positive action

During February Meetings at a discussion in the Salt Cellar, a group of students came to the realization that action on the Maryville campus was, in a number of areas, sorely lacking. The possibility was discussed of forming a group to do something in regard to these voids — improving relations, communication and understanding between members of the college community. A meeting was set for later in that week, and since then approximately 25 to 30 students have met every Thursday in the Salt Cellar.

What has been accomplished? Nothing very startling. An open-ended committee, a structure that is flexible and allows mobility, has been formed with three people, Joan Simmons, Prachak Tongyai, and Margie Henderson, heading it; Dr. Swenson is the advisor.

The purpose of this group was debated at length. There seemed to be as many ideas on what it should be as there are people in the group. However it was agreed that concerns should include international relations, race relations, and in general, people relations.

In the past two weeks there has been some exchange between faculty and students which the group advocates. The reaction to the situation in Selma, Alabama, at least showed that everyone is not apathetic. It does not matter whether one signed the petition as long as a stand was taken one way or the other. Students spoke and read about this issue; such communication is an example of one of the aims of the members. They would like to see more thought and voice given to contemporary problems of this day and age, because it is felt that we owe it to ourselves as students to be more informed and concerned about the world which we are supposedly preparing to enter.

It is the hope of this group to involve the campus in a search for understanding, acceptance and communication. Much can be done to improve the apathetic atmosphere which at times seems so prevalent. Their idea is not a new one — there have been other attempts to form such a group before. But the feeling is that positive expression and positive action will result in effectiveness and satisfaction.

Many who support the status quo or who are just plain indifferent have said and will continue to say that "this is the way it is around here and this is the way it will always be." Apparently not everyone agrees.

Petition Carries 375 Signatures

The petition sent to the Federal government protesting the situation in Selma, Alabama, circulated March 10, 11, and 12, was signed by approximately 375 members of the faculty, student body and community.

Woodrow Wilson Fellowship awarded to Carolyn Huff

Carolyn Huff

Carolyn Huff, senior history major from Maryville, has won an appointment as a Woodrow Wilson Fellow for one year of graduate study at the university of her choice with tuition and set fees paid as well as a stipend of $1,800 for living expenses.

Miss Huff, who has cumulative average of 3.8, has chosen to study at the University if North Carolina at Chapel Hill.

Competition for the award was based on grade point average (minimum of 3.3), faculty nomination and recommendation, graduate records score and a personal interview. Over 11,000 college seniors competed for the grants, and 1,395 were chosen for the academic year of 1965-1966. Colleges represented with Fellowship winners this year numbered 361.

The Woodrow Wilson National Fellowship Foundation accorded honorable mention to 1,242 students including Norma N. Fischer, who is also a history major from Maryville.

The Foundation is the largest private source of support for advanced study in liberal arts in the United States and Canada. It has been financed, since expansion of its present size in 1958, by two Ford Foundation

Concert by Choir is tomorrow night

The Maryville College Choir, under the direction of Harry H. Harter, will present its Choir Tour program at a home concert tomorrow evening, March 21, at 7 p.m. in the Chapel.

The program which has three divisions will include pieces of music from sixteenth to eighteenth century England and America, nineteenth century Russia and Germany, and twentieth century unpublished manuscripts by living American composers. The latter include Allan Hoke, Harry H. Harter, and Richard Yardumian who has been commissioned to compose an oratorio on the story of Joseph, the world premiere performance of which will be in conjunction with the celebration of the College's Sesquisentenial in 1969-70.

Also to be presented in the program is a Brass Quartet the personnel of which is Jonathan Gesham, Kendrick Young, Harold Laster, and Thomas Dickson. Compositions to be played by them include an original piece by Gresham.

Chapter of Student Affiliates of ACS formed

On March 5, at Spike's Restaurant, Dr. William E. Bull, chairman of the East Tennessee section of the American Chemical Society, presented a charter for the formation of the Student Affiliate Chapter of the ACS to Reed Tarwater, chapter chairman. After the dinner, Dr. Bull spoke on the founding, purposes and services of the ACS.

Dr. Fred A. Griffitts, chairman of the chemistry department, is the sponsor of the group.

During this semester a series of student-presented topics in the area of chemistry has been arranged for chapter meetings. A trip to a chemical plant and a picnic are also planned.

In one week we depart for home or Florida or a friend's home. Spring vacation. It seems to be coming sooner after Christmas vacation than it has in earlier years. (We may be just a senior reminiscing, showing her age.) We thought that by this time people were usually going around with their tongues hanging out, thirsty for a rest. But it doesn't seem to be so this year. People seem perky — we haven't noticed that anyone is about to collapse.

* * * * * *

Spring is almost here — it also seems to us that sunny and more cheerful weather is here sooner. Which could account for cheerful people.

Spring is when people breathe deeply, and supposedly they take a new start, after having loused up the one they took at the beginning of the new year. And in September they will take another start, having loused up the one they took in the spring.

* * * * * *

Several people have asked us to do this, and so, although we have done it before (we think we are apologizing), we do so again. As long as we're taking new starts, we should resolve not to throw papers on the ground, wear paths across the lawns, or stand on potential flowers.

Our campus is a "spring-promised place," and we know from previous years that here we can spend a beautiful spring. If we do not throw papers on the ground, wear paths . . .

* * * * * *

We will have an Echo next Saturday, departing slightly from our bi-weekly schedule. The first Echo after spring vacation will be April 17.

DAG HAMMARSKJOLD THE MYSTIC

by Carole Brownlee

MARKINGS by Dag Hammarskjold. Alfred A. Knopf, Publishers. $4.95.

One of the greatest literary sensations of our century, Dag Hammarskjold's Markings, came before the public three years after the author's tragic death in Rhodesia. The number of reviews since that time has been startling, with not one critic (to my knowledge) venturing to say that he dislikes the book or that he finds it of little consequence.

By virtue of his prominent position as Secretary General of the United Nations, Mr. Hammarskjold's "autobiography" would attract widespread attention regardless of its merit. But in this case, the attention is much warranted by reason of the inherent value of the work.

Markings was begun by Hammarskjold as a simple diary, but his fame in later life led him to consider its usefulness as a public document. In a letter found after his death, he explains that the diary's entries contain the only real picture of him that can be drawn.

To the world this man appeared as a shy, withdrawn leader who quietly went about his work — often giving the impression of aloofness and even of egotism. The diary says differently. Here we see at first a confused, lonely young man, yet sensitive to the earth and its offerings and aware of human potential.

Slowly he progresses, thinking of life ("Is life so wretched? Isn't it rather your hands which are too small, your vision which is muddied? You are the one who must grow up."), position ("Only he deserves power who every day justifies it."), goodness ("Goodness is something so simple: always to live for others, never to seek one's own advantage."), and death ("The hardest thing of all — to die rightly. — An exam nobody is spared — and how many pass it? And you? You pray for strength to meet the test — but also for leniency on the part of the Examiner.").

Of all these thoughts, death is the one which pervades the entire work. Hammarskjold seems obsessed with it — physically and spiritually. And he forsees to some extent the type of death which he will meet: "Do not seek death. Death will find you. But seek the road which makes death a fulfillment."

A mind and soul revealed is an impressive thing, especially when that mind belongs to a man of our age. It is possible that Markings (Trail Marks, Guideposts) will emerge as one of the great books representative of the twentieth century.

Have mercy
Upon us.
Have mercy
Upon our efforts,
That we
Before Thee,
In love and in faith,
Righteousness and humility,
May follow Thee,
With self-denial, steadfastness and courage,
And meet Thee
In the silence.

Give us
A pure heart
That we may see Thee,
A humble heart
That we may hear Thee,
A heart of love
That we may serve Thee,
A heart of faith
That we may live Thee,

But Whose I am.

Thou
Whom I do not comprehend
But Who hast dedicated me
To my fate.

Skit Night Tonight

Tonight at 8 p.m. in the Theater the four societies on campus will each present a twenty-minute skit, in competition for the Skit Night trophy.

After the skits Kappa Phi and Chi Beta will sponsor a party in New Dorm basement. Special guests will be the Dignitaries Barbershop Quartet. Last year in international competition at San Antonio, Texas the Dignitaries placed twenty-second out of four thousand entries. This summer they will be in competition in Boston.

Greek Gaslight

by Karen Keen

Step into the Gaslight Restaurant on Knoxville's Gay Street and you step into 1900 — with a Greek flavor. The lobby is a sitting room like the one in great-grandma's home, with velvet settees and a grandfather clock.

Waiters in vests and bowties and waitresses in black hose and ruffled collars take your order as you sit at a table under an electric gaslight. The place settings are heavy, ruby glasses and ornate silverware. The service is fast, just like in the good old days.

The menu has more a 1965 than a 1900 look. Be sure to try the Greek salad dressing. It's not turn-of-the century, but it is delicious.

For the main dish, have the flaming shishkabob. The vegetables, brown rice and peas, are garnished with orange and lemon slices, which gives the food an interesting flavor.

If you'd like something new for dessert, bakclava, a Greek pastry, is the thing. I'm not sure what's in it, but it is rich and scrumptious.

When you're tried of the Pearsons dining hall delights, go to the Gaslight for dinner.

Two Juniors to do Research

Sandra Briggs and Reed Tarwater, both junior chemistry majors, will be working in an organic chemistry research program for eight weeks this summer. Dr. David P. Young will direct the study and will himself be working on a research grant.

Making the program financially possible were two grants awarded on the basis of proposals submitted by Dr. Young. The Petroleum Research Fund of the American Chemical Society awarded a grant of $7,380 for a period of two years, and Research Corporation awarded $2,000 for this summer.

The research will be synthesizing and studying reactions of organo-phosphorous compounds, organic compounds containing a carbon phosporous bond. This is a continuation of study began last summer by Bill Deweese and Dr. Young.

A REVIEW OF 'HIPPOLYTUS': GREEK TRAGEDY AT MC

by Ann Jordan

Perhaps the colossal task that the Maryville College Playhouse set itself was impossible to execute successfully. By box office standards at least, Robinson Jeffers' adaptation of Hippolytus was a comparative failure, and much of the audience left the play disappointed and bewildered.

But the college players were presenting a type of drama with which most of the audience had had, at best, limited contact. High Greek tragedy cannot be judged by the same standards as "realistic" contemporary theater.

The techniques which are likely to repel twentieth-century playgoers — stylized acting, continued intensity without relief, lengthy "set" speeches — are integral to the form itself.

Greek drama is more abstract than most modern theater; its interest is in problems unusual rather than situations primarily valid for the here and now.

Hippolytus is typical in that the audience cannot identify with any character, but Selene, by addressing many of her speeches to it invites the audience to participate as a body in the developing tragedy. The extreme concentration required for even barely adequate comprehension of such a play is beyond that which modern audiences are accustomed to exerting.

Since characterization is primarily revealed through speech rather than action, each speech bears an increased weight of importance, yet there are fewer external aids to understanding — even facial expression is minimized.

In addition, Hippolytus resembles other Greek tragedies in that throughout the play there is hardly a letup in intensity. It all seems to be variations in a single mood — helpless horror in the face of inevitable destruction. The emotional strain is exhausting. Even an audience used to such modes of expression would probably encounter serious difficulties; with the experience of Maryville students, including this reviewer, these difficulties seem overpowering.

Nevertheless it was a brilliant production and the predominantly new cast deserves high praise for its accomplishments. Perhaps Margaret Moffett as Phaedra and David Harris as Theseus were especially outstanding, but Margaret Shaklee as Selene and Keith Jones as Hippolytus were also excellent. Special honors go to Davron King for her chilling portrayal of Aphrodite.

However, the handling of the chorus was questionable. It is admittedly true that even for practiced actors a Greek chorus presents special problems. Nevertheless the solution chosen seemed to be a technique lifted from J. B. and loosely tacked onto Hippolytus. It did not really seem to agree with the rest of the production.

A rather minor problem with the play itself was the dominance of women's voices in the opening scene. The piercing shrillness became extremely irritating after a while, and Hippolytus' entrance was welcomed with almost frenzied relief.

The performance of Greek tragedy on our stage was a noble experiment, and Mr. Jones and the cast demonstrated their willingness to tackle the nearly impossible. If it failed, and that is debatable, the failure was more worthwhile than many easy successes.

MARYVILLE COLLEGE CHOIR TOUR

by Hal Laster

On March 26, before the hour of Chapel here on campus, members of the Maryville College Choir and Brass Quartet will be on the road to their first concert of the 1965 tour.

Returning to Maryville 12 days later, the Choir will have given 21 concerts to high schools, community groups, and churches. These 12 days are rough — full of strain and tension — but at the same time filled with much fun, fellowship, and excitement.

The feeling of the ensemble before the first concert is one of a little nervousness, but as the tour continues, the "old pros" begin to feel at ease. After the first week the group is usually very tired, and this is the time when Dr. Harter gives one of his "Choir spirit pep talks," which rejuvenates all the group.

There is a similarity, toward the end of the tour, to the opening day. The excitement builds toward the final concert — a joyful, tearful occasion. It is something which can't be put into words. And all the work, sweat, worry, anxiety, and fatigue are thrown out when Roger drives the huge Trailways Silver Eagle bus onto campus — beautiful and green — home.

It is a glorious sound when the Choir stands on the Chapel steps and sings, "Hail the Queen of all the Highlands, Hail to Maryville."

FOR TERRI

Nothing real, of course
Save dreams tied end to end.
With fantasies we built our lives,
But I was younger then.

The one great stage of summer
With its soft green curtain of spring
The opening act of creation
With its promises to bring.

Yea Time itself was neglected
In the land of the let's pretend.
The sparrow of youth was contented,
But I was younger then.

How lightly we lived those summers
When autumn was none too soon
To dream of the following springtime
When our tucked-away fancies could bloom.

Oh, I had pink thoughts to ponder
And pennies of hope to lend
Would that I were younger now
As I was younger then.

No Dragging at Jeans Drag

by Sue Haldeman

About fifty pairs of jeans were dragged to the annual square dance in the Alumni Gym on March 6. The boys came dressed in their Sunday best farm clothes, with one group adding some distinguishing extras which gave that real hillbilly spirit. The caller, Lonnie Fugate, got the dancing started with a Grand March, and the pace didn't slacken all night.

About 9:30 time was taken for the corsage judging. The judges — Dean Massey, Mrs. Robinson, and Mr. and Mrs. Crawford — had a difficult time because the girls had really created some exquisite masterpieces.

The prize for the funniest (naturally) went to Dave Powell whose date made him a living fish corsage — a goldfish in a plastic bag. The prettiest corsage was Ken MacHarg's, a beautiful floral arrangement constructed of such likely things as sponges. Lloyd Bogart received the prize for the most original, a collage-like arrangement made completely of pills.

At 11:00 the sole-weary dancers stopped. But the evening had been a joy — a chance to let go, to bounce, and to yell . . . and to forget that college kids just aren't supposed to act like that.

Tau Kappa Chi Accepts New Members

by Mary Rucker

Tau Kappa Chi, the honorary music society of Maryville College, has announced the acceptance of three new members, Charles Meeker, Charles Doscher, and William Rumsey. Other members of the organization include Carole Webster, president; Tom Llewellyn, secretary-treasurer; Margaret Hanson, Peggy Gross, Edna Jo Mantz, Karen Summerlin, Sarah Thompkins, David Evans, Tom Allen, and Mary Rucker.

Tau Kappa Chi is not restricted to music majors, but accepts a percentage of non-majors who participate in music organizations on campus. To be considered for membership, a student must maintain a 2.5 average over-all and a 3.00 average in his music courses for two consecutive semester. He must also be approved by the music faculty.

This year, the group of thirteen Tau Kappa Chi members, with Dr. James Bloy as advisor, has sponsored two photographic exhibits concerning the lives and works of Maurice Ravel and Hector Berlioz. Further plans for spring include a dinner meeting with a speaker to be announced; during Holy Week records for the enjoyment of anyone interested will be played in the Fine Arts Center Lounge.

Bob Paul Elected Captain; Netters Show Enthusiasm

by Rich Marshall

The 1965 edition of the Maryville College tennis team does not promise to be as strong as the 1964 squad that stroked its way to a record of 9 wins and 5 losses.

Coach Lauren Kardatzke said that his team was "definitely hurting this year." One of the biggest problems facing Kardatzke will be to replace four lettermen who either graduated or transferred. It is hoped, however, that some of the team's losses in experience and ability will be compensated for by increased hustle and desire.

Howard Moves To First Position

Leading the returnees is two year letterman Lynn Howard, a junior. After playing in the number 2 singles position since his freshman season, Howard is working diligently to move up to the number one position vacated by the graduation of Todd Owers.

His height gives him a considerable advantage over his opponents, and he possesses a strong serve and forehand, but he must improve his backhand and net play if he is to win at the number one slot.

Unorthodox Forehand

Following Howard will be another two year letterman, Rich Marshall. Marshall has served at the number four singles slot for the past two years. In his own words, Marshall admits to being "the team clown" and must get serious if he is to play at the level he is capable of.

Marshall's strongest shot is his forehand, an unorthodox drive which may be the hardest stroke on the squad. If the experienced junior can gain confidence and improve his backhand, he can give his opponents some anxious moments.

Paul Elected Captain

Slated for the third singles slot on the team is senior Bob Paul from Fayetteville, North Carolina. Paul, who was recently elected team captain, has a powerful serve to go along with his strong forehand and backhand. If he can improve his reactions at the net, Paul will challenge for one of the two top positions.

Gass Shows Improvement

Among the non-lettermen, Coach Kardatzke is depending highly on Bill Gass. After having labored behind the more talented members of the strong 1964 squad, Gass is ready to move into the regular line-up.

Performing admirably on the Florida tour last year, the tall, thin junior barely failed to letter. This year, however, Gass has shown considerable improvement over his 1964 play. If he can combine his experience with his rapid improvement, he may prove to be a consistent winner.

COACH LAUREN KARDATZKE: Directing the Scot tennis team will be Coach Kardatzke. He will have 3 lettermen from the 1964 squad returning to give experience to his charges.

Freshmen Led by Parks

Heading the list of new-comers is freshman Pete Parks, a Maryville product who brings an impressive high school record to the team. He is considered to be a definite threat to any of the top positions. Much of his success, however, will be determined by how well he has recovered from a pr .nged illness.

Last Slot Open

Five other men will be battling for the remaining open spot. At present, Allan Childs from Bethesda, Maryland, and Norman Cleesattel from Buffalo, New York, are the top two contenders. They are followed by junior John Mulholland, freshman Dick Stevenson, and Steve Floyd, another freshman.

Doubles Team To Be Determined

In doubles competition, Howard and Marshall will be the team to beat, after a season of experience as a team. The other combinations will be determined as the season progresses.

Overall, the Scots' tennis team will be definitely weaker than the squad which represented the college last year, but with the enthusiasm and spirit that has permeated practices so far and the excellent tutoring of Coach Kardatzke, the team should win its share of matches.

Eight Lettermen To Bolster Baseballers

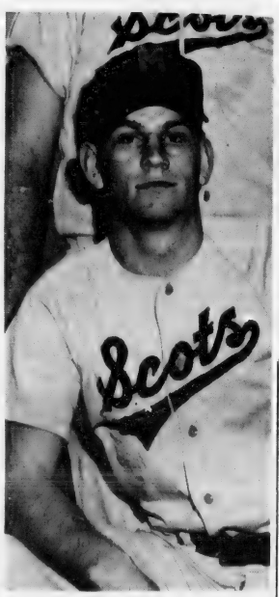
by Terry Petze

The Scots open their 1965 baseball season this Thursday, playing the University of Tennessee on the home diamond. Game time is 2:30.

The Scots will be fielding a well-rounded club of eight lettermen and eleven newcomers. Coach Baird is very pleased with the way the team has been getting into shape. He says, "The boys are in better condition than ever before. They have been working hard for the past few weeks, and it is paying off."

Don Pickford, Alcoa High School Football Coach, is assisting Coach Baird this season. With the weather problems affecting practice, Don has been working with the pitchers and catchers in the gym, leaving Coach Baird free to devote his time to the fielders and Mike (the pitching machine) outside.

Six Pitchers on Staff



The pitching staff is six strong this year. With lettermen Benny Monroe and Jack Llewellyn leading them, the mound staff should be improved over last year. Freshman hurlers vying for assignments are Randy Smith, Bob Nicholas, John Agnew, and Dan Rothey.

According to Coach Baird, the only two positions not filled with lettermen are first base and shortstop. Tommy Bowers, letterman of two years ago, is almost certain to win one of these.

Coach Baird

The Scots are playing a twenty game schedule this year. After U-T Thursday, the Scots return from spring vacation to play eleven home and eight away games.

Benny Monroe

The lettermen are seniors Tommy Bowers, Kip Martin, Benny Monroe, Buck Petty, and Joe Scheideler; junior Sonny Hughes; and sophomores Jack Llewellyn and Sonny Webb.

Talented Runners Lead M'ville in Track

8 Lettermen Bolster Forces

If it were necessary, Maryville College track coach Howard Tomlinson could dismiss the rest of his team and confront opponents with Dave Alexander. A tall, powerful sophomore, Alexander can run the 100, 220, 440, a leg of the mile relay, pole vault, broad jump, high jump, throw the discus, hurl the javelin, and put the shot.

Tomlinson, however, does not have to rely totally on Alexander. Behind the talented sophomore, he has a wealth of running talent that could place the Scots in reach of their most successful season in recent years.

880 To Be Strong

With nine lettermen returning to the track section of the track and field sport, Maryville has the strongest selection of running talent it has had in recent years. The Scots are strongest in the middle distance races.

Rich Reed and Hugh McCampbell provide Coach Tomlinson with a strong 1-2 punch in the half-mile. Reed, a junior, is capable of a 1:56 although his best time last year was only 2:04:8. McCampbell is also capable of sub-two minute performances in the 880. He was only a step behind Reed last year with a 2:05 flat.

Livingston Stars in Distances

Moving to the mile run, Maryville has John Livingston, a senior who has never lived up to his fullest potential. Livingston has been timed at 4:35. However, Tomlinson thinks the tall miler could turn in a 4:10. Reed and McCampbell will also run the mile.

In the two mile race, the Scots are again led by the long-limbed Livingston. Among the newcomers in the half mile, and two mile are senior Phil Jerome, freshmen Keith Jones and Andy Ruhlin, and sophomore Billy Evaul. Jerome will be teamed with Reed and McCampbell in running the mile and 880, while Evaul, Jones, and Ruhlin will share mile and two mile duties with Livingston.

REED AND LIVINGSTON: Pacing the Scots' distance runners will be half-miler Rich Reed and miler John Livingston.

BELL AND ALEXANDER: Two of the outstanding performers on the Maryville track team will be Jerry Bell and Dave Alexander. Bell is a fine quarter-miler, while Alexander's versatility make him invaluable to the team.

Sprinters Led By Craig

In the sprints, the Scots are counting heavily on sophomore Jack Smoot and a list of freshmen including Dick Craig, Gary Phillips, and Bob Leach. Tomlinson is counting heavily on Craig to become a first-rate 100 and 220 yard dash man and the anchor on the 440 relay. Tomlinson will insert Alexander in the 220.

Bell, Alexander in 440

The 440 is another Maryville strong point with Alexander combining with Jerry Bell to give the squad a 1-2 punch that rivals Reed and McCampbell in the half. Bell has been working long hours and hopes to move his time in the 440 to beneath .50 seconds. Bell, Alexander, Reed, and perhaps Mike Dalton will form the mile relay team.

Behind Bell and Alexander are several strong freshman prospects, Joe Suitor, and Lane Rapp. Both have much potential and may replace one of the members on the relay team.

Freshman Leach Top Hurdler

Bob Leach is one of the brightest of the freshman candidates. A low hurdler with considerable high school success, Leach will be a potential winner in the 220 yard low hurdles. Terry Amon will lead the Scots in the high hurdles. Junior lettermen and basketball star Denny McGowan will back up Leach and Amon.

If Tomlinson is relatively well-staffed in the running events, his field men leave room for improvement. More than once during 1964 season did the Scots lose entire meets on the basis on their performances in the field events.

Javelin A Scot Strength

Javelin is a Scot strong point with junior Greg Hallen capable of being a consistent winner. Ralph Johnson, Danny Styles, and Adam Deveney back up Hallen.

In the jumping events Tomlinson is depending primarily on Denny McGowan, Dave Alexander, Mike Dalton, and SEC wrestling champion Ralph Johnson. McGowan will perform in both the high jump and the pole vault, while Alexander high jumps and gives Maryville many first places in the broad jump.

Johnson, who vaulted 11' 3" in high school, will head the squad in that event. Mike Dalton is working in the high jump.

Shot and Discus Men Inexperienced

The weight events (the shot put and the discus) are staffed with inexperienced performers. Pat O'Brien is working in the shot put and hopes to reach the 40' circle by the end of the season.

In the discus two freshmen, Cole Piper and Ernie Greeno, will be Maryville's entries. Inexperience, however, does not imply weakness, and Tomlinson is hoping that any one of these three will blossom into a first rate performer.

Other candidates for positions are runners Bud Prather, Dale Schellenger, and George Patton and shot putters Bob Coates and Paul Millin.

Field Men Must Deliver

The success of the team depends on the performance of the men involved in the field events. A strong field of runners that not only has strong first men, but strong second and sometimes even third men, should enable Tomlinson's forces to defeat their opponents on the oval. If the Scots can break even in the field events, Maryville should have one of its finest teams in recent years.

Track Team To Have Eight Meets

The Maryville College track team will have eight meets on the 1965 schedule. The Scots will be on the road for the first three meets and then return from an encounter with the Carson-Newman squad to meet them again for the first home meet. After the Tennessee Intercollegiate Athletic Conference Tournament at Sewanee, the Scots will have three home meets. Below is the 1965 schedule.

April	10	Emory University (T)
	13	Milligan (T)
	16	Carson-Newman (T)
	21	Carson-Newman (H)
	23-24	TIACT (Sewanee)
	27	Cumberland (H)
May	1	Milligan (H)
	8	Bryan (H)

Debate team wins at SAF tournament

by Kathy Haggart

Climaxing a year of well-fought tournaments, the Maryville College Debate Team won the sweepstakes for the third year straight at the South Atlantic Forensic Tournament held at Lenoir Rhyne College in Hickory, North Carolina on March 5 and 6.

Jan Rickards, Annette Sensening, and Sherry Proffitt took awards competing against students from Georgia, West Virginia, North Carolina, and Tennessee. Jan won three first places: in address reading, extemporaneous speaking, and women's after dinner speaking, where she tied with Annette, the team's capain.

Sherry took second place both in poetry reading and radio newcasting; Jan also took a second place in standard oratory. Superior Speaker's Certificates, given to the top 10% of the debators, were awarded to Wanda Hannah and Wili Mitchell.

The U-T Tournament is taking place this weekend; after that the team will be looking forward to the Virginia Intermont Women's Tournament to be held after spring break.

An Unforgettable Character

by Mouses K. Housepian

I remember well the first day of school in the year 1955, how a loud burst of laughter greeted Professor Makisdros when he entered the classroom with his balloon-like bulged stomach. His introductory speech was, "Boys I will try to help you to the best of my ability and the only thing I ask from you is to keep your ambitions within bounds."

This laconic speech of Professor Makisdros seemed very abrupt and meaningless to us all, especially when he then went on to give us a boastful account of his adventures, blowing his own trumpet as loudly as the time allowed.

Professor Makisdros was an old teacher, who in his youth had been very handsome, very strong, very proud of his physique, and beloved of many ladies. He had thrown himself heart and soul into organizing the discipline of the school. Nobody can deny the fact that it was during his period of employment that the school reached its acme of perfection.

During picnics, Professor Makisdros was always the predominant figure, as he was the permanent master of ceremonies. He knew the way of focusing the attention of both teachers and students on himself as he started his various instructive games. He had a head for dates and an inexhaustible store of general knowledge.

The later years of his life were most bitter ones. Due to old age he was obliged to quit school, the place where he had passed all his life and which he loved most. The second blow came after two years of retirement when he lost his wife; at the time his eldest son, being careless and extravagant, had already given him much trouble. He was the black sheep of the family. His younger son who promised him nothing but good was the victim of a car accident.

Years went by and I graduated from high school. After my graduation I did not see him for a long period of time. One day while I was going to the Gulbenkian Library some noise from the other part of the street held me at the doorway of the library for a few moments.

As the noise increased I was interested to know what it was about, and, to my surprise, it was Professor Makisdros, who was surrounded by a horde of grimy children.The scene was really heartbreaking; Professor Makisdros' beard was unkempt and neglected, his clothes were dirty and torn. He had lost his mental balance. I gathered up my courage and, finding my way through the crowd, got hold of him and led him to his house where he lived alone — because his eldest son had deserted him long ago.

All that night I did not have a wink of sleep. What an unjust world! He had devoted all his life to a lofty and noble task and found suffering as the compensation for his services rendered to the future generation.

He had lived a joyous life, but alas, it ended with sorrow.

"Complacency, that is what it is! Look at Berkeley or St. John's — or take Yale. Action! But here — no real concern. Complacency! Gutless! I tell you we ought to. . . ."

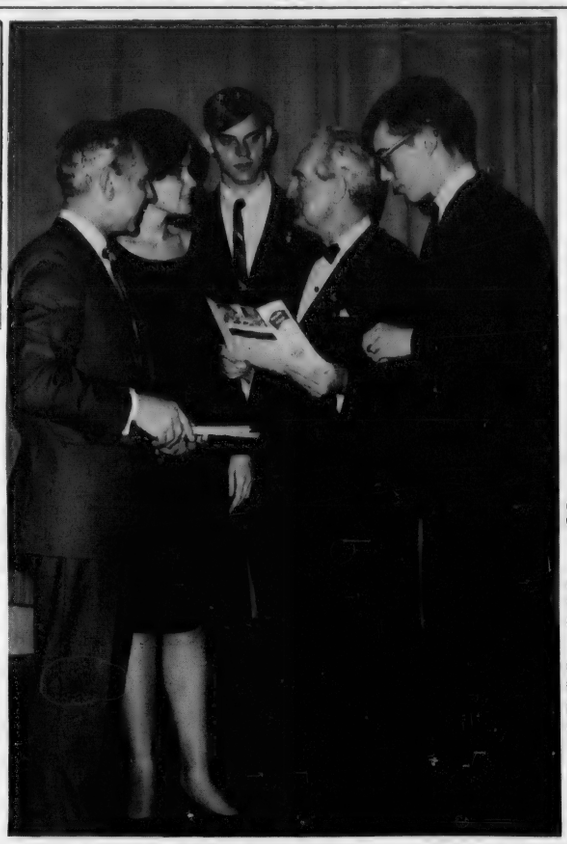
My merely polite comment — on some aspect of campus spirit, as I recall — had evidently prodded out something the Part-Time Rebel had been gestating all year. Before I could safely turn the conversational tide, he was securely entrenched on his line.

"We need to do something to shake this student body to their roots! Action. Positive emphasis. Deep concern. Move now before it's too late! If we don't work for the active. . ."

I thought perhaps it was Time's education section that had set him off, but I knew better than to interrupt when the collegiate spirit was in full flood.

". . . same story over and over again. Legitimate protest has got to be heard, and I see the need to demonstrate now our deep concern in a program. . . ."

I thought about an inquiry or two on the function of Student Council, or even a question on Senate, but something in his eye told me it was a lost cause.



". . .but I've always felt that if the student body can't force its voice into Anderson, then the only recourse is to. . . ."

I left him acknowledging the applause of critical acclaim. Alone.

Donors of paintings visit campus

There was an unannounced showing last Monday, March 22, of the Goya, Gainsborough and two Zuccarelli paintings given to the College by unnamed donors, a Maryville graduate and his son, who visited the campus at that time.

There are tentative plans to display the paintings again, for a longer period, during 1965-66.

VISIT WITH THE MASTER—These three Maryville College students and Chairman of the Department of Fine Arts met with Fred Waring when the Royal Pennsylvanians appeared in Knoxville recently. Waring will be at Maryville College to conduct a choral workshop June 13-18. Shown left to right are Dr. Harry H. Harter of the college faculty, Sarah Tompkins, James Breckenridge, Waring, and Charles Meeker.

Cast chosen for 'Fantastiks'

The tentative cast for the presentation of the Fantastiks has been announced by Thomas Jones, director of the theatre.

Leading the company are Sarajune Schue portraying the Girl, Luisa; Michael Quickel as the Boy, Matt; and Harold Laster, as El Gallo, the narrator.

Other in the musical production include John Meyers, boy mute; Cecelia Bridges, girl mute; Thomas Llewellyn, the girl's father; David Evans, the boy's father; David King, Henry, the old actor; and John Boretsky, Mortimer, the man who dies.

A blend of satire and romanticism, bright comedy and serious verse, the Fantastiks will be presented April 30, May 1 and June 8.

Eleven register for Scandinavian tour

Eleven persons have paid the required $100 deposit for the Maryville College-sponsored Scandinavian tour.

The group, which is expected to number between 15 and 20, will leave July 20, visit Denmark, Sweden, Norway, England and Scotland, and return August 20. All trips between countries will be made by air, except the one from England to Scotland.

A feature of the trip will be a one-week tour of the Norwegian fjord country by boat and bus.

The cost of the 21-day tour is $918, including air fare by KLM Royal Dutch Airlines from New York and return; breakfast, dinner and some lunches; twin-bed rooms in first-class hotels;

Vivian Bennett heads cast

The White Rose and the Red is a sweep of history arranged from Shakspere's Henry V, Henry VI, and Richard III which covers a period of England's past when the long-festering enmity between the House of York (white rose) and the House of Lancaster (red rose) erupts into the War of Roses.

Leading the cast will be Vivian Bennett who has been leading lady at the Royal Shakespeare Theatre, Stratford-on-Avon, and the Old Vic in London, and who has previously toured the United States on two occasions in one-woman shows.

The dramatic presentation, which has received unanimous praise by New York City critics, in this season's run, will be given here Saturday, October 30.

Announcement made March 18

To be featured Thursday, February 24, is the Salzburg Marionette Theatre, presenting its three-foot-tall puppets in a full-length comic opera performance of Tschaikovsky's Nutcracker Suite. There will also be a non-subscription matinee.

Completing the program will be the recital of 23-year-old Tsuyoshi Tsutsumi. Originally a student at the Suzuki Violin School, the cellist, recipient of five important international awards including a Fulbright Grant, will appear Saturday, April 2.

This schedule was announced during the intermission of the performance by the San Francisco Contemporary Dance Company on Thursday, March 18.

MC makes summer plans

As summer approaches many activities are being planned which will utilize the Maryville College campus and facilities.

Summer Term begins June 14

The Fred Waring Music Workshop, designed for high school and church music directors, will be conducted from June 13 to 18. Waring himself will lead the workshop with members of his production crew.

The six weeks summer term beginning with registration on June 14 will be held through July 24. Courses will be offered in advanced and freshman work as well as college orientation. The above is a diagram of the basic floor plan of the three new dormitories, the construction of which will begin in several months. The buildings have been designed by Barber and MacMurray of Knoxville with the idea of small-group living, a current trend in dormitory planning. Each floor with the exception of the first will be divided into quadrants containing four double rooms and one singie, a study and a storage area. The Bridge

Many centuries ago, during the reign of Kao-Tsu, a great bridge of bamboo and teak was built high above a river gorge near the mountain village of Nhu. A young general of the emperor's army, chancing to cross the bridge with his troops in passage to a foreign conflict, fell to arguing heatedly with the architect as to the strength of the span.

"Not the weight of all the rice in China could destroy my bridge," boasted the architect.

"We shall see," replied the angry general, and he proceeded to enlist the services of a young man of the town who would place rice on the bridge — each grain separately — until such time as the bridge should collapse. The total number of grains would become the total number of whip strokes the architect would receive for his arrogance. Should the bridge yet stand when there remained no room for more rice, the architect would be given a handsome lifetime pension and the claim to the general's estate.

And so it was that the general went off to battle, the architect went back to his home, and the young man began gathering rice and carrying it two miles on his back to the bridge where he carefully placed his burden one grain at a time.

Years passed. The general did not return from the wars, the architect was called to build a palace for the emperor, and the young man who had begun the task was now older and slower and bent.

It came to pass that the emperor Kao-Tsu was taken from this life into the mystic afterworld, and that the new ruler from the north on his way to the royal city happened through the village of Nhu.

Arriving at the bridge and finding it impassable, he inquired of the townspeople as to the meaning of this unusual barrier. But the time had long flown since there were any in the town who could recall the tale of the old man and his labor, so they said nothing.

Then the emperor spied the old man carrying his sack of rice and he stopped him and said, "I am the emperor, I should like to hear your story."

"Where is the general H'seung?" asked the old man.

"I know of no man by that name."

"And the architect Tipi?"

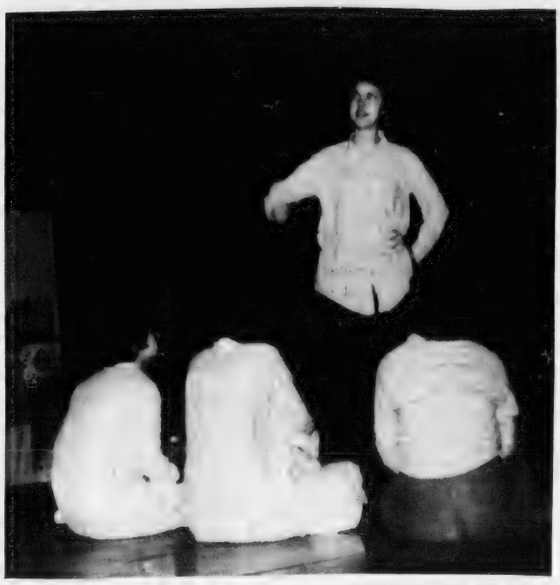
"He was drowned many years ago as I believe."

"Most all my life I have been carrying rice, and I have numbered each grain in order to know the amount that would crush this bridge. It matters not to me that the general and the architect no longer care," said the old man, and he turned to his work. The emperor pitched camp by the bridge for the night.

In the morning the old man was found dead on the road beneath his sack of rice.

"It is a shame that this man's life work has died with him," thought the ruler, "I wonder if it is possible to know how many grains of rice are on the bridge, for it seems he carried the number in his head and told no one."

So the emperor gathered all his wise counselors, and they pondered his question for many days until at last the oldest and wisest of them came to the emperor's tent and held out his hand. On his palm rested one brown kernel.



"This is all that is necessary to break the back of a man or a bridge," he said.

"How could that be," replied the ruler, "when there are so many grains on the bridge and still it stands?"

"Because," said the wise man, "there is only one grain that a man or a bridge cannot bear — and that is the last one."

Then he tossed the grain on the pile of rice, and the great bridge collapsed quietly into the gorge.

The two pictures above are scenes from "Broadway," the skit which won first place in the competition among the four societies on Saturday evening, March 20. The first shows Fran Lantz, who played an aspiring actress, and Connie Williams, who played her mother. The second shows Margaret Rembower who sang "Chim Chim Cheree" from "Mary Poppins" in one of four scenes from four plays included in the skit. Marty Miller wrote and directed the skit for Chi Beta.

Spring Comes To The Valley

by Movses K. Hovsepian

Spring is the most significant of the four seasons; poets sing it, biologists try to analyze it, and old people watch its renewal with deepening wonder. Spring is so old that there is nothing to say about it, but every year it is as original as a just-born baby and welcomed cordially.

The return of spring warms the stones and fills the heart of man with gratitude toward the Creator of life and beauty.

It always comes in the same old way — with a gentle warmth in the pale sunshine, a vague green mist enveloping the top of trees. Around the usual dates in April we will be noticing the robin, bluebird, black and white warbler, starling and many other birds returning to us. All at once, we see the moist warm earth burst into bloom. High in the branches the newly arrived birds join in a symphony of thanksgiving to the Creator in whose mind all the beauty existed before the world was.

The buds swell, the tiny branches start to change colour, and one morning the buds break into leaves, and then quickly, without a sound, millions of trees dress themselves in fresh garments. Each leaf is a masterpiece of colour and design as well. It is also distinctive from other leaves.

Spring is also the time when men find out how they have planted and what they must reap. Where the seed is good, the fields are a shallow lake of young green. Where the seed is bad there will be a barren, burned land. You reap whatever you sow.

Little children play in summertime meadows. They are happy, they sing, dance, jump; the world is theirs. Men and women again by glories of spring go for a walk and relax after a day's exhaustive strain.

It seems, for the time being, that sunshine and sea, flowers and forests, tell us all that we need to know about the mystery beyond existence.

We Shall Overcome

by Paul Millin

WE SHALL OVERCOME — three words, yet they have given to many a hope for new freedom, to many others a feeling of disgust, and to many of our fellow college students a "cause" or reason for being larger than themselves and more important than the present. While we would be the last to deny the importance of a cause to an individual or to deny the worthiness of a cause which preaches equality among men, we do, at the risk of being labeled racist, have to register our feeling of disgust for these words.

Disgust not out of prejudice, although it would be foolish to deny a certain amount of prejudice after growing up in a society that teaches it, but disgust because we feel the end does not justify the means.

A general knowingly sends his troops into a bloodbath while he sits in a comfortable hotel room and watches the cries of horror and shock that come from all corners. Then to add to his personal reputation he defies federal and state law, disregards a personal appeal from the President of the United States and "takes personal charge" of his troops in another march.

We are fortunate in this country to have a wonderful system of federal courts. It is through these courts that the changing interpretations of our Constitution which have allowed this country to continue its dynamic growth have been made.

The courts are the least glamorous but perhaps the most effective branch of our government. There is little personal glory for the judge who makes the momentous decision. There is delay in the courts as judicial proceedings are by their very nature time consuming. If there were not peaceful, proper means available for change in our society then we would be faced with the anathema of recurrent revolution.

Laws must be obeyed until abolished or changed if we are to have an ordered society. We have little personal use for a law which discriminates against Black or White but we could certainly find a better way of changing it than taking men, women and children on a march defying state law and as an end result getting people killed and beaten.

There is a time, as Thomas Jefferson said, when the "tree of liberty must be fertilized with human blood." But needless death and bloodshed should not be confused with an honest fight for freedom.

One of the benefits of a college education is to show the boy its little avail.

PEACE CORPS: NIGERIA

Editor's Note: The article below is by Charlotta Cook, a graduate of Maryville College in 1964, and the Editor-in-Chief of THE ECHO her senior year, 1963-64. Miss Cook is now teaching English at a girls' school in Sapele, Nigeria, West Africa for the Peace Corps. She has been there since January. This article is one of several THE ECHO hopes to print by MC graduates now serving in the Peace Corps.

by Charlotta Cook

The personality of the Peace Corps Nigeria is quite different from the image that Bob "Peace Corps" Hope proclaims to our nation via television advertisement. Here there is no proportional division among traditional Peace Corps activities, namely community development (health. sanitation, or construction projects), agriculture, and education.

Instead, only about 60 of 640 are involved in agriculture projects. Most of the rest of us are teachers in universities, teacher training colleges, or secondary schools.

The Nigerian education system is modeled after the British system with its rigid discipline, the 8 a.m. to 2 p.m. school day, and sex-segregated boarding schools.

Students attend primary school for six years and then take an examination which, if passed, enables them to enter secondary, commercial, or technical school for further training.

After five or six years in a secondary school, a student takes another rigid examination. The results dictate who will enter the university or a teacher training college. The Nigerian government supports the universities and teacher training and technical schools. Secondary and primary schools are government-sponsored, privately owned, or mission-supported.

My assignment is a typical one. I teach English language and literature in a proprietary, girls' secondary school. It has three forms (roughly, seventh, eighth, and ninth grades). I am also the librarian and have been given the dubious distinction of being named "games mistress."

This means I enhance cross-cultural understanding by teaching American games to Nigerian teenagers who would much prefer instruction in the words to Elvis Presley rock-and-roll songs.

Life as a PC volunteer in Nigeria did not meet our preconceived notions of inhabiting mud huts with thatched roofs, cooking rice (and more rice) over an open fire, and reading by candlelight. Few of us live in a manner remotely resembling that (although electricity IS a definite luxury). This is because many Nigerians have what we might consider an exaggerated sense of status.

A person with a university degree is expected to maintain a certain standard of living. Thus, when a volunteer arrives and is unconcerned about living in a big house and is quite content to pedal a bicycle, he is viewed with mistrust by his colleagues.

They suspect that the volunteer is a second-rater who has been rejected by American society and is now being palmed off on them. This attitude is overcome only when the volunteer proves himself in the classroom and community.

A favorite Peace Corps game is composing facetious answers to the inevitable, "Why did you join the Peace Corps?" We have never had serious answers becauses most of us recognize that the reasons will come only in retrospect. Perhaps the key lies in the word friendship.

Contemporary Nigerians may not approve what the United States government does or what happens in Mississippi and Alabama, but personal warmth and discussions do much to reduce the friction of misunderstanding. Mix with this first hand experience in absorbing the intricacies of a different culture, and the result is something which makes a positive contribution to world brotherhood. At least we think so.

Pitching Staff to Determine Scots' Success

Baird Readies Forces For Opening Game with U-T Squad

With a nucleus of eight lettermen, Maryville College baseball coach Boydson Baird expects to field an improved team this year.

Baird stated that he feels his team can make a definite improvement over last year's record five and 18. "The hitting should be the same or even better than last season and our fielding should be better too, but all depends on our pitching," he said.

Monroe Leads Pitchers

Heading the mound corps will be senior Benny Monroe. With a good fast ball and a fine curve, Monroe will probably receive the starting nod in the Scots' first game against U-T. Behind Monroe is sophomore Jack Llewellyn, a pitcher who relies on his excellent control and assortment of breaking stuff rather than speed to overcome the batter.

Baird will receive further mound support from three freshman prospects. Randy Smith has a fine fastball; Dan Rothey is a knuckleballer; and Bob Nicklaus uses a good variety of pitches. John Agnew, a tall lefthander, may also see some action on the mound.

Catchers Led By Hughes

Perhaps the best fortified position on the Scots' roster is catcher, where Sonny Hughes performs. The team's leading hitter last year and a good defensive player, Hughes gives Baird's staff of pitchers more than adequate receiving. Hughes will be backed up by Frank Gready and Terry Petze.

Experienced Infield

The infield should be the most experienced portion of the team. Senior Kip Martin will hold down third base, Tom Bowers will be at short, and another senior, Buck Petty will start at second.

Martin is a hustling fielder with good hands. He will probably appear in one of the top slots of the batting order.

Bowers may be the best hitter on the squad. He will be the Scots' long ball threat and should team with Sonny Hughes to give Maryville a strong one-two punch in the third and fourth batting positions.

Petty, the second baseman, improved rapidly last year after being switched from third base.

First Base Undecided

First base is still a question mark in Baird's plans. At present two good freshman prospects are battling for the berth. Don Payne holds a slight edge over John Agnew. Both are good fielders and have shown signs of adeptness with the bat.

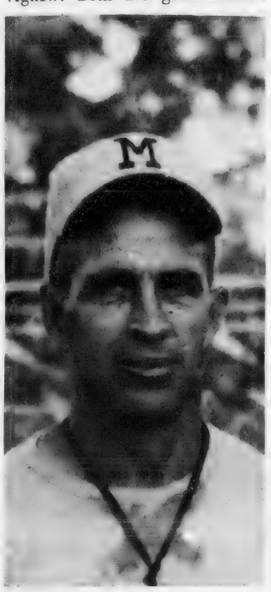
Ralph McCampbell and Gerald Hodges will also be ready for action in the infield.

Veterans Fortify Outfield

The outfield is also well set. In left field will be a four year letterman, Joe Sheideler. Scheideler, a good fielder and fair hitter, may also see action at first base and as a relief pitcher.

The centerfield position will be held down by Sonny Webb, an excellent defensive performer, who can hit with power.

Right field is unsettled, but Baird will probably fill the slot with a member of the pitching staff. Benny Monroe will usually get the nod when he is not performing on the mound. Randy Smith will replace Monroe in right when Monroe pitches. Allen Morris and Jim Fort are also on hand for outfield duty.



Pitcher Benny Monroe gets accustomed to batting stance.

Pitchers Key to Success

The outlook for the team is good. Baird has a consistent defensive unit and should be able to find three or four hitters capable of .300 averages. Most important, however, is the pitching staff.

With a blend of experience in Monroe and Llewellyn and promising youth in Smith, Rothey, and Nicklaus, the Scots may have their best crew of pitchers in recent years.

Darkly Through A Broken Spyglass

Most of the news in past months from the large university campuses of the country has been concerned with agitation for some of the vaguest of student rights. Agitation has been spearheaded by informed student groups with various emotional problems.

The movement has gained greatest ground in such leftist pockets as California, but inroads are in evidence elsewhere. Even in the usually conservative South dissenting student voices are heard. The Free Campus Party at the University of Tennessee has fearlessly spoken out against women's regulations and ROTC.

The programs of these concerned young Americans have been thwarted by their poor reception by college administrators. President Clark Kerr spoke to the press in terms derogatory about the Free Speech Movement on the University of Southern California campus.

Many of the faculty sympathized with the students — "They're only products of their environment"—and classes were disrupted for several days. The group sought free political expression and organization on the campus, it seems. The students loved to demonstrate.

The school was inclined to have them arrested. The result was an emoting by "liberals" and "reactionaires" on such time honored principles as free speech, state law, students rights, and the right to demonstrate.

Students the country over didn't seem to react nearly so energetically as did the administrators. We are apathetic, I understand. And most students perhaps did not care. It was not inciting for a California student to parade with the most Anglo-Saxon of phrases held aloft. Rather it was amusing, and on reflection very, very sad. For it portrayed too starkly the purposelessness of much of today's youth.

Perhaps, it has been suggested, these students owed their origin to communist agitation. In this day of charge and countercharge, such a suggestion is provable or disprovable only by the highest of authorities, such as the Congressional Committee on Un-American Activities. Surely they must know. But we do not, and will only suggest that the students are probably several steps ahead of the Comintern.

What shade is Maryville on the ideological spectrum? Black suggests itself to some dark-minded students. I'm sure blue would be the pick of many administrators. Red? "Are there any Communists on the faculty up there?" queried a rightist relative of mine. "No," I replied, "there are only a few Democrats."

Certainly the Maryville campus has not borne any radical student movements. Though I do recall some suggestion that Student Council advocated anarchy . . . Guess there will be some hurried rereading of the new consitution now. But on the whole, Maryville students aren't apt to demonstrate.

Even fewer are apt to write letters to their Congressmen. But this doesn't necessarily indicate apathy. Latent dissatisfaction has risen in the past, with the automobile — excuse me — situation, with the Chapel program, with the cut system. But the dissatisfaction is either repressed by sensible students or suppressed by sensible administrators. Yet even these safeguards have failed to prevent the nasty disaster which arrives yearly on Mother's Day.

Certain stock morals could be obviously drawn from the above discussion. Every protestant knows that "It costs money to demonstrate." The college disciplinarian is familiar with, "A bird in the hand is worth two in the bush." Elroy Smersh, a physics major from the class of '34, came up with, "A rolling stone gathers momentum." But all these little homilies are only half apt. One must stand off and view the whole situation from a distance, about 800 miles and two or three years.

And I imagine Maryville will be seen much as it is today: an atmosphere allowing almost unlimited freedom of inquiry populated by students whose natures seldom if ever threaten the limits of their freedom. It is refreshing in a world threatened, nurtured, and largely controlled by youth that more of our number have not fallen prey to the "social diseases."

Initial flight by charter successful

Charter plane flights from Knoxville to Philadelphia and back were initiated this spring vacation. In commenting on the "charter charter," Frank Layman, treasurer of the College, whose office handled the arrangements, said that all credit should be given to the students for their cooperation despite changes in plans and the subsequent space shortage on the return flight.

He also said that the airline had remarked that Maryville College students were the "most business-like and organized" that they had dealt with.

Regarding the future of such flights, Mr. Layman said that it would probably be easier due to the group work this flight accomplished. Contract agreements can probably be made with one rather than two airlines in the future.

The treasurer emphasized that future successes were dependent upon there being a student willing to work as much next year as David Conklin, who acted as a liaison between the students and the airlines, did this year.

Memorial services held Wednesday for David Evans

A memorial service was held Wednesday morning for David Evans who died unexpectedly Sunday, April 11. Previously Dr. Joseph J. Copeland, speaker at Vespers last Sunday, devoted the service to the deceased.

Although a psychology major, Dave actively participated in dramatic and musical functions.

In the past four years he played six major and two minor roles in Playhouse productions. Most recently he had played the lead role in the theatre's presentation of Archibald MacLeish's "J.B.", and he was in the cast of "The Fantastiks," now being rehearsed.

A soloist in "Messiah" for three years, Dave, a bass, gave his senior recital March 11. He was a member since his freshman year of the College Choir which recently returned from their annual spring tour.

Dave was to have sung a solo at a special concert at Knoxville College scheduled for last Sunday. The event was cancelled in view of the circumstances which arose.

Funeral services were Thursday, April 15, at Trinity Baptist Church in Newport, Kentucky. In lieu of flowers the family requested donations be made to a retarded children's fund or to Maryville College.

Annual faculty art exhibit opens

The works of William Swenson, chairman of the art department, are being featured this month in the Fine Arts Center art gallery. The faculty show, an annual event, opened Friday evening, April 9, following the recital of Lou Mize, voice instructor.

The showing consists of abstract oil paintings done by Mr. Swenson during the past four years. Use of color predominates in all of the compositions.

Students from other colleges visit campus

Students from nine area colleges and universities were guests at Maryville College last weekend.

Last Saturday the Tennessee Academy of Sciences Collegiate Division met to hear Dr. Richard J. Raridon of Oak Ridge speak. Several students in the group of 35 read their scientific papers also.

Ten students from Knoxville College toured the campus, attended campus functions, and hiked through the woods during the weekend. Five students from Maryville College visited Knoxville College in part of the exchange program.

Last lecture to be April 23

Otto Pflanze, the last lecturer of the Series sponsored by Maryville College, will speak on Friday at 8:15 in the music hall of the Fine Arts Center.

Dr. Pflanze was born in Maryville and was educated in Maryville public schools and at Maryville College, where he graduated in 1940. He holds MA and PhD degrees from Yale University.

Presently a history professor at the University of Minnesota, where he has been since 1961, Dr. Pflanze has also taught at New York University, the University of Massachusetts, and the University of Illinois. He has held the American Council of Learned Societies Fellowship and a Fulbright grant for research in Germany.

Author of a volume on Bismarck and a contributor to a number of periodicals material relating to Germany, Dr. Pflanze is also one of the authors of a recent textbook, A History of the Western World.

The topic of the speaker's address will be "European Unity as a Historical Problem."

Margaret Hanson to give senior recital

Margaret Hanson, pianist, will present her senior recital on Thursday, April 22 at 8:15 p.m. in the Fine Arts Center music hall.

The program will include works by Beethoven, Schumann, and Handel.

A reception will follow in the lounge.

Education . . . has produced a vast population able to read but unable to distinguish what is worth reading.

Yardumian to compose oratorio

Richard Yardumian, Philadelphia composer, has been commissioned by Maryville College to write an oratorio on the story of Joseph.

The work, which will have its world premiere performance at the College, is part of the planned Sesquicentennial celebration in 1969-1970.

Had no early formal training

Born into a musical family, Yardumian, although he had no early formal training in music, learned to be a musician through study and observation of his older brother, a concert pianist.

A graduate of Philadelphia public schools, he began his studies at the age of 22. He was encouraged toward self-study by his later instructors, Jose Iturbi and Leopold Stokowski. Because of the extensive research he did, specifically in the field of music of the past, Yardumian claims his "alma mater" to be The Free Public Library of Philadelphia.

Works debuted by Eugene Ormandy

The composer wrote his first orchestral work, Armenian Suite, now famed as the signature theme of the Voice of America broadcasts behind the Iron Curtain, at the age of 19.

His debut orchestral work, premiered by Eugene Ormandy and the Philadelphia Orchestra, was Desolate City, in 1945. In 1954 the Armenian Suite, premiered by the same Orchestra, was performed 18 times during its first season in the repertoire, and presented by the Orchestra during its European tour.

In addition the Armenian Suite was selected this past summer to be the feature work for the 1965 "Armenian Day at the World's Fair" next May.

To be composer in residence

Yardumian plans to spend parts of each summer between now and 1969 as a composer in residence at Maryville College.

The Beneficia Foundation of Bryn Athyn, Pennsylvania, has granted up to $10,000 toward the cost preparing and performing the oratorio here.

Lip service

We've scarcely ever complained about Maryville College in this column. And it is not just because our chances are fast disappearing that we do so now. With some sort of freedom in sight, it even may seem to some that we shouldn't speak now.

Recently a few things we've been exposed to or have observed, although not our first confrontation with such things, have appeared ridiculous and Mickey Mouse. A few minor rules, which among the two-year modernization of MC were not thrown out, hurt. We do not mean hurt us (they offend us), but hurt in themselves, by their very existence.

Before you think we're trying to dispense with hours for being in at night or chapel or cuts or added-graduation-requirements due-to-intemperate cutting or the prohibition of drinking or the separation of men's and women's quarters, hold on.

There are petty little rules, like the hours when men may wait in the parlor for a girl, the basis for which, after living in a dorm for three and a half years, we can't see. Another example. The other evening some New Dorm girls were supposedly given points for not attending a house meeting, at which the following things were discussed (we were there): gift for a baby; party for the maid; open house; the ND roof is open; boys can't wear bermudas in the parlor because girls can't; and watch out for the mystery woman. All of which seemed extremely inane and unimportant at that late hour—and still do.

No one person is to blame for the existence of pointless rules. But it seems a small enough thing for an integrity-enough school to correct.

Dr. Hunter and Chaucer

by Carol Montgomery

On Tuesday, April 6, Dr. Edwin R. Hunter of the Maryville College English faculty read a paper entitled "Epilog to Troilus and Criseyde" before the monthly meeting of the University of Tennessee Philological Club. In his paper, Dr. Hunter presents his thesis that the Epilog is not out of character with the rest of the poem or with the times in which it was written.

Dr. Hunter first gave a brief resume of the Epilog. From lines 1772 to 1785, Chaucer addresses his lady readers. He asks their pardon for writing of the untrue Criseyde and says that he will, in other books, write about good women.

From lines 1786 to 1799, he prays for his "little book," that no one will copy it incorrectly and that there will always be someone who can read it.

From lines 1800 to 1834, Chaucer returns to Troilus and to his assignment of a place in the Heavens. Line 1835 to the end of the poem is the pious ending.

It is the pious ending about which there is much controversy. Many critics feel that it is inappropriate to the theme of the poem. Dr. Hunter objected to this idea and stated that the pious ending was a part of the style of that age.

He pointed out that even the most ribald of Chaucer's Canterbury Tales contain the pious ending. Dr. Hunter felt that this shows the pious ending to be directly related to the times in which Chaucer lived and wrote.

Dr. Hunter also spoke convincingly against the argument raised by many critics that Chaucer had made Troilus into a Christian by assigning him to the eighth of Dante's heavenly spheres. He felt that by this Chaucer meant the sphere of heaven closest to earth.

This is not incompatible with the way in which Dante peopled his spheres. Troilus could be a pagan and still be admitted to this sphere. Even so, as Dr. Hunter reminded us, Chaucer does not have Troilus in the eighth sphere, but says that Mercury will take him to his permanent home in the heavens.

From these points Dr. Hunter reasoned that Chaucer did not make Troilus a Christian and that the Epilog is not set apart from the rest of the poem or incompatible to it.

WSGA Banquet To Be April 20

by Jan Melville

"Toward Unity and Action" is the theme of the WSGA spring banquet, which will be held Tuesday, April 20, at 6 p.m. in Pearsons Hall. The purpose of the banquet is to emphasize that WSGA is not only the coordinating council, but that it involves every dormitory student and especially the senior counselors, sophomore aides, and house councils.

After a special dinner, Jan Rickards will preside over a short program which will reveal the opportunities and challenges confronting WSGA in the future. An added attraction will be Lois Grinstead, singing a delightful, spring tune.

All men students will be served dinner in the rear dining room at 6 p.m. also. Their cooperation is requested in their leaving through the side door in that dining room as soon as they are finished eating.

CAMPUS MIKE

by Bill Talmage

From 9:05 to 10:00 every Sunday evening many of the radios on campus are tuned to the New Campus Mike, one of the four hours broadcast each week by this student organization. Campus Mike consists of those students who are interested in radio and television work and allows them a chance to learn about, and participate in, radio production while going to college.

This year we have more members than we have had in recent years. Because of the size of the organization and the willingness of our members to work on shows, radio station WGAP has given us four hours of free time each week. Besides the Sunday evening hour, we broadcast Concert Hall every Monday, Tuesday, and Wednesday afternoon from 12:30 to 1:30. This program contains announcements of public interest concerning Maryville College.

Until recently our Sunday evening program was for our town listeners. Then this spring we changed the format to one of interest to the Maryville College student. With the increase of listeners WGAP gave us a full hour.

The most popular of the new Sunday night shows is "Request and Dedication" night. Other shows heard recently include "An Evening With Al Hirt," "The Best of Dixeland" and "Overtures from Great Broadway Musicals."

Since next Sunday is Easter, the theme of the program is set in with that of the season. Steven Bishop will host a show of gospel music. We hope to have a live gospel quartet.

On April 25, two of the most popular music groups on campus will be presented. For the first half hour the Alpha Sigma Blue Shades will present some of the best in popular music. And for the dixeland fans, Maryville College's own "Poet and the Peasants" will present thirty minutes of live dixeland music. Two great groups in one week—a show you don't want to miss.

Then on May 2, "Dedication and Request Night" returns with Pat Shenko and Wee Willy.

The members of Campus Mike take turns in broadcasting the programs. Whoever is in charge picks the music, sets up the format and announces the program. This gives him experience in both program planning and program broadcasting.

At Christmas time we worked with the Information Department and the Music Department to produce a TV program which was broadcast over WBIR-TV during Christmas vacation.

For the past few years Campus Mike has been in a decline. Only a few people were interested in working with the organization and even less wanted to listen to its programs. This year, however, with the new enthusiasm of our members, we are trying to rebuild. There is still plenty of room for improvement and we look forward to bringing you better and more interesting programs in the future. Tune us in some time and see what I mean.

David Clinkman takes over 'Fantastiks' role

The role of the girl's father in Fantastiks, vacated by the death of David Evans, has been given to David Clinkman.

The musical is scheduled to be presented April 30, May 1, and June 8.

PANAMA CITY REVISITED

by Briggs, Chittick, Haggart, Haggart, & Keen

With the sanction of the school and the good wishes of Mrs. Robinson, we were off again this year to Panama City for a wholesome, restful spring vacation, minus Charlie Cook's pup tent and Pearsons Hall frying pan.

Sympathetic to last year's situation, Mr. Andy McKenzie of the Panama City News Herald and the Chamber of Commerce had arranged accommodations for us at the Escape Motel, "the most beautiful motel on the beach." When Sandy Haggart, home in New York, heard that she would not have to keep watch for racoons and other little predatory things, she spent "three days and three nights" on a Greyhound bus so that she could chaperone our foursome. She also brought the only cloudy day of the week.

Dinners had been arranged for us in the evening at the Seven Seas and the Four Winds Restaurants. Our first traumatic experience occurred in the Seven Seas. We were being shown to our table when what to our wondering eyes should appear but a Maryvillian, none other than Mr. Rich Gossweiler and family. Picking ourselves up off the floor, we moved on to the next room.

Other evenings were spent having weiner roasts on the beach, listening to Chittick on the guitar, dancing, seeing movies, and enjoying the amusement parks, which brings us to our second traumatic experience.

Sandy Briggs received a telephone call informing her that Karen Keen had fallen out of the roller coaster. Fully realizing that this was entirely possible, she was hurriedly packing pj's and toothbrush to take to the hospital when Keen and company walked in—April Fool!

A perfect ending to a perfect week came Friday when we went 40 miles into the gulf on a deep sea fishing trip, courtesy of Mr. E. W. Hobbs. After a successful day of fishing someone noticed that Keen was missing. Our search was ended by a frantic commotion from the ladies room. With the combined efforts of two stalwart sailors, the door yielded and Keen came flying out.

Fishing was our only money-making enterprise of the week—$3.70 for 31 lbs. of red and white snapper.

Our final and most traumatic experience was leaving. That was the week that was.

Maryville Track Men Toppled by Emory

Unfortunately for the Maryville College track team, a meet is comprised of two parts — field events and track events. Against Emory University in a meet held last Saturday the Highlanders outran their opponents, scoring 49 points while Emory gained 33, but were humiliated in the field events, gathering only 16, while the Atlanta school picked up 47. When the totals were combined, Maryville had suffered an 80-65 defeat.

GREG HALLEN was the only Maryville trackman to do well in the field events. Shown here making the final and winning throw, Hallen took the javelin competition with a heave of 161 feet.

Relay Teams Do Well

Heading Maryville's running feats were the two relay teams and the corps of distance runners. The Scots got off to a good start when the 440 yd. relay team of Bob Leach, Mike Dalton, Jack Smoot, and anchor man Dick Craig swept to a timing of 44.9, and a first place finish.

A second relay victory for Maryville was gained in the mile relay. Dave Alexander, Joe Suitor, Rich Reed, and Jerry Bell turned in a fine timing of 3:33.6 to easily defeat Emory's quartet of runners.

Livingston Wins Twice

Perhaps the brightest performer for the Maryville team was turned in by senior distance runner John Livingston, who picked up wins in the mile and two mile runs. In the mile Livingston was pushed to a time of 4:39.9 before edging out the second-place Emory runner. Hugh McCampbell took third place honors in the mile with a 4:52.

In the two mile, Livingston was easily the class of the field. leaving all opposition behind while recording a 10:39.9 time. Billy Evaul took second place and Keith Jones took third to give Maryville a clean sweep.

Scots Sweep 880

With Rich Reed leading the way, the Scots also made a clean sweep of the half mile. Reed ran to a 2:05.5 timing, while teammates Hugh McCampbell and Phil Jerome turned in times of 2:07.7 and 2:08.6 respectively to cop the other places.

Maryville's sprinters were paced by Dick Craig. The freshman from New Jersey ran a 23.1 to win the 220 yard dash and a 10.2 for a third place finish in the 100 yard dash. Jack Smoot took third in the 220.

In the 440 yard run, the Scots picked up second and third place finishes from Dave Alexander's 51.7 and Jerry Bell's 52.5. Terry Amon took third place in the 120 yard high hurdles, and Bob Leach was edged out at the finish line as he took second place in the 330 yard intermediates with a time of 41.5.

Javelin Won by Hallen

In the field events, as mentioned before, Maryville did not fare as well. Greg Hallen gained Maryville's only first place finish, when he hurled the javelin 161' on his final throw.

Two freshmen, Cole Piper and Ernie Greeno, added four points to the Highlanders' total by taking second and third places in the discus. Joe Kerr earned third place in the shot.

Emory Dominates Jumping

Emory's dominance of the field events was most obvious in the jumping. Denny McGowan's 5'10" high jump was good enough for second place, and Dave Alexander traveled 38'4" for a second place finish in the triple jump. Alexander and McGowan were, however, the only Maryville men to score in the jumping events, and Emory grabbed all other positions, including sweeps in the broad jump and pole vault.

Although the Scots went down to defeat in their first meet, the prospects for the rest of the season are good. It is doubtful that the Scots will be able to dominate the distance events throughout the rest of the year as throughly as they did against Emory, but, by the same token, Maryville's opponents should not be able to defeat Maryville in the field as easily as Emory did.

Scot Baseballers Start Slowly; UT, LMU Inflict Two Setbacks As Hitters Fail Smith

After much delay caused by inclement weather and spring vacation, the Maryville College baseball team took the field for its first two regular season contests.

U-T Outclasses Scots

The Maryville squad was purely outclassed by the U-T baseballers. After two scoreless innings, the Vols erupted for six hits and eight runs in the third inning. Bearing the brunt of the attack was freshman pitcher Randy Smith. Hampered by poor fielding and supported with only two hits, singles by Sonny Hughes and Sonny Webb, Smith was tagged with the loss.

Scots Fare Better

In their second game, the Scots did considerably better. Once again it was Smith who toiled on the mound for Maryville. This time, however, the freshman hurler had much more success.

After allowing the L.M.U. team two runs in the bottom of the third, Maryville came back to score three in the top of the fourth.

Rally Started by Bowers

Shortstop Tommy Bowers opened the outburst with a double. An error by the L.M.U. shortstop on Sonny Webb's ground ball paved the way for the three Maryville runs, as Joe Scheideler, Frank Gready and Randy Smith lashed singles.

After the Scots were retired in the fourth, Maryville's Smith and L.M.U.'s Bishop settled down into a tight pitching duel that prevented any more runs until the top of the ninth, when Maryville increased their lead to 4-2. Singles by Smith, Kip Martin, and Sonny Hughes gave Maryville what seemed to be an insurance run.

LMU Scores Twice

As it turned out, the run saved the Highlanders from defeat in the inning as the L.M.U. squad bounced back in the bottom of the ninth to score two runs on a pair of singles and a pair of errors. The two tallies pushed the teams into extra innings.

Finally after 14 innings, L.M.U. scored the winning run. Bishop, who pitched the entire game for the Scots' opponents, started the fatal rally with a double and scored moments later on a single by Smith, the first baseman. The run gave the L.M.U. team a hardfought 5-4 victory over the weary Highlanders.

Smith Stands Out

Catcher Sonny Hughes and right fielder Frank Gready collected two hits apiece for the Scots, but the best performance was turned in by Smith, who not only pitched 14 strong innings, but spurred his own cause with two hits.

Commencement services for 138 Seniors to be June 9, 10:30 a.m.

President Emeritus Dr. Ralph Waldo Lloyd will make the Commencement address this year in ceremonies June 9 for the graduating class of 138 seniors.

Baccalaureate is June 6

Dr. Lloyd has maintained an active interest in the College and in the program of the United Presbyterian Church, U.S.A., and has been a visitor to the campus several times since his retirement.

Commencement Week starts with Alumni Day Saturday, followed by Baccalaureate Sunday with services in the Chapel at 10:30 a.m. President Joseph J. Copeland will preach the Baccalaureate sermon.

The President's Reception will be held from 3 to 5 p.m. at Morningside June 8, and the Commencement Play, The Fantasticks, will be given at 8 p.m. June 8. Commencement is June 9, with ceremonies in the Chapel at 10:30 a.m.

138 to receive degrees

The graduating class of 138 this year is made up of 111 students who are expected to complete the requirements for a degree in June. In addition, 14 others completed requirements last January and 13 intend to do so at summer school.

Eighty-three seniors are candidates for the Bachelor of Arts degree, 25 for the Bachelor of Science degree, and 31 for the Bachelor of Science in Education degree.

Of Daffodils and Democracy

This column must have been intended to express student opinion from the student government viewpoint. As such, it has not achieved its purpose. The half-apt suggestions of Mike, the paradoxes of Jon the Obscure, and my own homilies have been for the most part personal observations. Yet they have often been interesting and amusing. They have occasionally been perceptive, if not well written—most of the columns could have used a little tightening up. The opinions expressed have been those of a fabled clique, listened to because of the positions held by its members.

This year there has been criticism of student council from members of the faculty and administration and from certain students. To the former I offer my sympathy—their only control over student leadership is in the approval or disapproval of student council actions. But I sympathize less with the latter. While realizing the fallacy of the democratic system, I feel that Maryville students do not take advantage of the opportunity given them to express minority opinions. Certainly student council representatives should keep in touch with their constituents, seeking to be truly representative. When they fail in this respect, student council meetings are open to anyone who wants to voice an opinion.

As is traditional in governmental circles, council policy follows the majority opinion of the council members. Any student who feels that this opinion is not concurrent with that of a majority of the members of the student body should say so. If he keeps his mouth shut, he deserves what he gets. And students this year have for the most part kept their mouths shut, at least in public.

This is my swansong to the Echo, so I'm taking a somewhat premature backward look at this year. Two incidents come to mind which seem to be characteristic of the year, and perhaps characteristic of Maryville College in general. The first is an observation by a senior woman earlier in the spring: "Of course. This would be the year that someone stepped on the Indomitable Daffodil."

The second occurred recently at a Student-Faculty Senate meeting. Two items of legislation were almost held up by the lack of a student quorum. The ac-

On Friday, April 23, at 7:00 p.m. Alpha Gamma Sigma, the Maryville College Honor Scholarship Society, met in the Lounge of the Fine Arts Center for the dual purposes of inducting newly elected members and of electing officers for the coming academic year.

The new members are seniors: Ruth Carter, Norma Fisher, Margaret Hanson, Kathie Kirk, Will Mitchell, Mike Moyers, and Judy Wasson. The two junior members are Louise Crawford and Keith Renne.

Elects new officers

Alpha Gamma Sigma may elect as members up to ten per cent of the senior class. Membership is based on a minimum grade point average of 3.33 and on qualifications in the fields of scholarship and character. A maximum of two junior members with exceptional qualifications may be elected in one year.

New officers for Alpha Gamma Sigma for the coming academic year are president, Louise Crawford; vice president, Sarah B. McNiell. Duncan C. Bennett will continue his term as secretary of the organization.

Pollard to speak

On Tuesday, May 11, the annual Alpha Gamma Sigma Chapel recognition ceremony will be held. The speaker will be Dr. William G. Pollard, Executive Director of the Oak Ridge Institute of Nuclear Studies and a priest in the Episcopal Church.

Dr. Pollard, a member of Phi Beta Kappa, received his B.A. from the University of Tennessee and his Ph.D. from Rice University. He is a fellow of the American Physical Society and the American Association for the Advancement of Science, has co-authored The Hebrew Iliad, and is author of Chance and Providence and Physicist and Christian.

Campbell, Thompson to speak at Vespers

Dr. E. Fay Campbell, Chaplain of Maryville College, will be the speaker at Vespers tomorrow evening, May 2 at 7:30 in the Chapel. Dr. Campbell has been at Maryville College since the spring of 1961.

On May 9 Dr. Ernest Trice Thompson, professor at St. Andrews Presbyterian College, will speak at Vespers. Dr. Thompson is a former moderator of the Presbyterian Church, U. S. and Professor Emeritus at Union Theological Seminary in Richmond, Virginia.

Supper honors C. Huff, N. Fisher

Carolyn Huff, National Woodrow Wilson Fellowship winner, and Norma N. Fisher, who received Honorable Mention in the national competition, were honored Thursday evening, April 29 at a buffet supper at a restaurant in Maryville.

Those who attended were heads of departments at Maryville College and sophomores and juniors interested in college teaching.

The cast of the final Playhouse production at Maryville College this year, "The Fantasticks," is shown in the final scene of the play. Standing, left to right, are Harold Laster, El Gallo; Thomas Llewellyn, the girl's father; Andy Ruhlin, the man who dies; David King, the old actor; and David Clinkman, the boy's father. Seated, left to right, are John Meyers, boy mute; Sarajune Schue, Luisa; Michael Quickel, Matt; and Cecelia Bridges, girl mute. The play was performed last evening, and will be performed tonight, May 1, and as the Commencement play on June 8. See story on page 6.

Editorially Speaking

We read recently about some sort of big ruckus at a Maryville-type Presbyterian school—Tusculum College, Greeneville, Tennessee. The News-Sentinel account, as usual, bordered on the hysterical (funny-hysterical, not emotionally-hysterical). It seems that over 20% of the student body became aroused by a speaker from their Rebels United for Freedom organization. The interesting thing here, however, is not the speech or the ensuing riot, but rather the reaction of President Rankin: "It was not too awfully serious. It was just one of those things that go around campuses today."

After glancing through Mr. Moyers' last "Fort Mudge," we have speculated as to an application of this situation to our campus. The conclusion reached is that there is little, if any. We have few Rebels, let alone of the United variety. Our administration would hardly refer to such an outburst as "just one of those things." Other than the almost-annual hymnbook crises and the sentimental Mother's Day affairs, we really are quite calm. Maybe it's because we are so busy either doing or avoiding the work which is assigned to us.

Editorials are what Laurence Sterne would call a "Hobby-Horse." More often than not (in papers all over the country) they are verbose irrelevancies. But, they exist; and any editor has some kind of privilege to go off half-cocked about anything under the sun.

> ". . . and so long as a man rides his Hobby-Horse peaceably and quietly along the King's highway, and neither compels you or me to get up behind him,—pray, Sir, what have either you or I to do with it?"

Dr. Pflanze and his Reinterpreted Gemany

by John Noel III

Dr. Otto Pflanze's lecture, presented at M.C., Friday, April 23, was entitled "A Reinterpretation of Modern German History." The question Dr. Pflanze sought to answer was concerning the Nazi experience in Hitler's Germany with its ravages of the Jews and widespread destruction in Europe: How could this have happened? How much was this experience a product of recent German history? Was it something that could have happened anywhere in Europe?

Two schools of thought named

Dr. Pflanze explained that there are two main schools of thought in answering these questions—the critical school (of which he is a member), who trace German conduuct in the 20th century to events begun in the 19th century and partly to the influence of the Reformation; and the conservative school, whose members are mostly German scholars who feel that nothing in German history is solely productive of this event. They trace the rise of Hitler and participation of the masses in government to a breakdown of Bismarckian Germany after 1918.

Cultural cleavage explained

The main contention of the lecture was that there was a cultural cleavage between Germany and western Europe that had its beginnings in the Reformation. Some of the factors which contributed to this cultural cleavage may be expressed as variations in German development of main themes present in western European cviilization.

For example, the development in Germany of a Protestant church (Lutheran), under the control of the German princes, eventually aiding in the spawning of princely absolutism, the late amplification of the German middle class as a potent factor in the power struggle, the German concept of nationalism based upon a common cultural background (language and customs) while in western European political citizenship the major criterion for effective participation is in the state.

Perceptive style evident

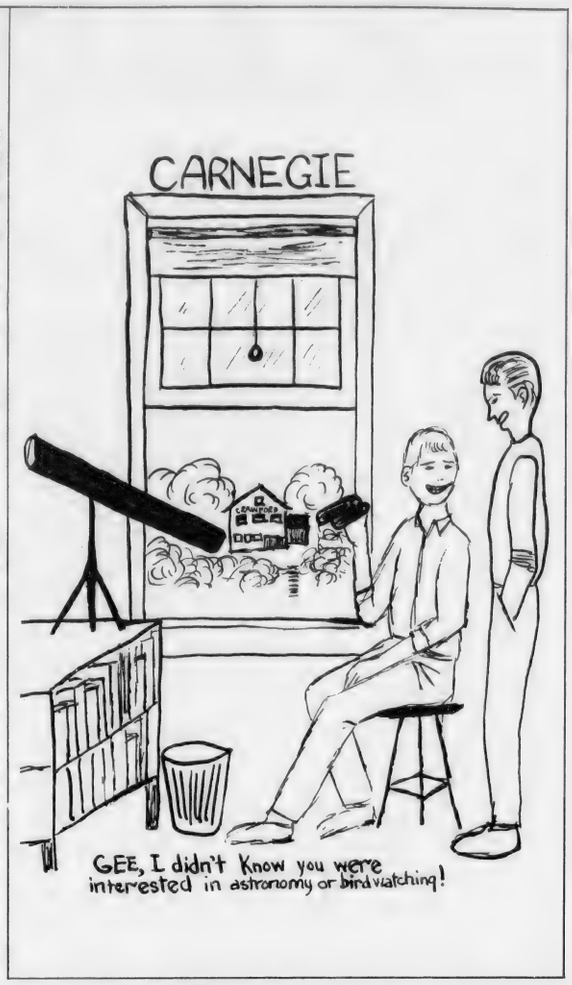
Dr. Pflanze's lecture gave us an example of the constant and vigorous interaction between scholars that lends itself to new historical interpretations of the significant events of the past. His style showed depth and perception and his arguments were quite complete in giving his views. However, comparisons were not sufficiently explained by Dr. Pflanze, and some doubt remained after his conclusion.

A few weeks ago, the fifth grade class where Marcia Hickey student-teaches was given this test question: "What are flesh-eating animals called?" One little boy innocently answered, "Hungry." The answer was "Carnivorous."

The Impartial Observer

by Ken Young

Recent years have seen the attentions of the world turned to the heavens. Man's exploration of space has turned thoughts from the common, rather boring wars of Vietnam and India to the glorious conquest of the outer limits. The question seems naturally to arise: Why? Of course, like Mallory's Everest, it is there; but then, so is poverty for a quarter of the world's population.



Contemplation of the probable contents of space should reduce all desire to explore. Consider the oratory of a self-dramatizing politician, alone in his suite, practicing the next day's filibuster. With no one in the room to hear, where does the sound go? Any physics student knows that warm air rises, and it seems natural to assume that the words from his warm breath rise until they escape the gravitational pull of the earth and float aimlessly in space.

Again consider an unreturned love, wheretowith went Romeo's love for Rosaline, who, incidentally, lost her chance for immortality by being unreceptive. There is no place on earth for the frustration and yearning of unrequited love, so it must drift upward to join the rambling soliloquies.

There also must soar the lengthy petitions of Monks closeted for hours in prayerful meditation. Sadness of any kind is usually hidden until moments of solitude when it is expulsed in a burst of sorrow, and with no receiver, it too, is carried aloft.

Finally, consider the prospector who has lived unwashed so long he can no longer smell himself. All of his body odor and bad breath are loosed into the air which carries them beyond the atmosphere into space.

Why, then, would anyone want to step out into a space filled with political oratory, yearning, frustration, unrequited love, monastic prayers, sorrow, bad breath, and body odors? Certainly there is enough of it on earth. I rather propose that we turn our attention to an exploration of the underground where these furies cannot possibly penetrate. Think of the expediency to war of an underground freeway to China!

REVIEW

IF I AM OUT OF MY MIND, IT'S ALL RIGHT WITH ME

by Ralph Tucker

The words composing the title of this review are taken from the first sentence of Saul Bellow's best-selling novel Herzog. Accustomed to the usual trend of such popular works, the reader moves on to the next sentence fully expecting a clinical account of the Sexual Experiences responsible for the narrator's present doubts about his sanity. Instead there follows a plot summary of the entire book: Herzog from New York to Martha's Vineyard and immediate return; two days later a trip to Chicago to see his daughter; hence to a small town in Massachussetts. The rest of the novel is equally disappointing as typical best-seller material. Instead we seem to have encountered genuine public support for a highly personal, complex creation.

Purpose questioned

A cynic might well believe Bellow constructed his novel in the rambling, barely connected episodes it is composed of for the specific purpose of selling the separate pieces to magazine publishers, which he did, and then reaping a double profit by selling a pasted-together version to a hardback publisher, which he did. Whatever his purpose, Herzog comes to the reader as a series of trivial, ordinary occurrences in the life of one Moses Elkanah Herzog, all of them strung on the single consistent element of the story, Herzog himself.

Chief character described

Described, the man Herzog would be for some a source of steady interest, even if difficult and demanding. For others he might seem a foggily represented example of what comes of "too much thinking." He is an unhappy man, twice married and now twice divorced, floundering in the emotional backwash following his second wife's calculated betrayal of him with his trusted friend. He is a brooding man, capable of powerful, original thinking and yet seemingly incapacitated by his inability to accept less than the whole truth, less than the genuinely choice. He is certainly a lonely man, yet this fact about him is not at all central to the novel; he has too much genuine dignity to shove himself into other people's lives simply to ease himself for a time.

Theme like MACBETH

The book's theme and emotions texture are very nicely stated in Macbeth (IV, ii, 17-22): ". . . Cruel are the times, when we are traitors and do not know ourselves; when we hold rumour from what we fear, yet know not what we fear, but float upon a wild and violent sea, each way and none." To continue briefly with the pedantry, the specific problem faced by Moses Herzog seems to have been stated by the nineteenth century Russian, Alexander Herzen, who said of himself: "Life has taught me to think, but thinking has not taught me to live."

Contemporary America probed

In his Herzog, Bellow seems to be using his own powerful, original mind to probe the "wild and violent sea" of contemporary America to see if there exists anything to which genuinely human life can attach itself and so keep from the brainless absurdities society seems presently to demand. By the character Herzog, Bellow seems to indicate that the intellectual can but interpret what has passed, not what is occuring right now. The author does not deny the power and potential of the human mind; he simply denies that its use alone will ever give mankind a better life, a life which is satisfying, a life which has meaning.

Confusion concluded

Because of the confusion of the novel—and the confusion of the subject with which it is concerned—the reviewer did not find any grand and dramatic conclusions at which to arrive. Bellow realizes modern man's inability to make a grand synthesis a'la Hegel which could sweep away the terror of the times. Instead, the book is littered with commentary which takes into account the thinking of the past and recreates it in its reference to the present, a fine example of genuine scholarship.

HERZOG recommended

In the words ". . . consciousness when it doesn't clearly understand what to live for, what to die for, can only abuse and ridicule itself," Bellow makes, through Herzog, his analysis of the contemporary situation's great problem. Unable to make the sweeping generalizations of the past, he has packed his novel with bits of thought connected mainly by his personal concern for whether or not life is worth living in the present age—as a sort of fictional Pascal. He makes no excuse for his manner of speaking or what he says, and the reading of his work is a mind-stretching experience to be recommended to anyone willing to follow the tortuous bends of a flexible, educated intellect.

Where has all the Grass gone?

by Hugh McCampbell

By this time most everyone has noticed the bare spot, the fenced plot, and collection bowls situated under The Beech Tree behind Anderson Hall, I hope. This is my special studies research project; to find out why grass doesn't grow there.

For those to whom this has not been explained this is a resume of what we think kills the grass, what is set up out there and how it works, and our methods of experimentation.

Hypothesis

Our hypothesis is that something produced by the tree is toxic to the grass underneath it. Something may be produced in the leaves or roots; it may be the soil, or the lack of light or moisture; or it may be that the beech nuts dropping on the ground produce some toxic substance. We have considered these possibilities because the periphery of the bare area is just about the same as the periphery of the crown of the tree.

Equipment

The fenced plot is laid off across the border between the crown of the beech tree and an elm tree there, and extends toward the trunks of each. Inside the fenced plot are two posts with collection cans on them to act as rain gauges which record the amount of rainfall. Also there is a can out from under the trees to record the rainfall there.

From a post in the center of the plot, four wires extend into the ground on a line between the beech and elm. There is also one with the rain gauge in the open. These wires extend to what are called moisture blocks, which are small plaster of Paris cubes with a resistor on the inside that registers the effect of moisture on the plaster of Paris when a meter is plugged into the jacks on the central board. This is recorded as percentage of available moisture in the soil.

Along with the central moisture block board on the central post, is a maximum-minimum thermometer, which records the highest and lowest temperature from time to time as it is read and reset.

Procedure

The collection bowls on the cinder blocks underneath the beech are to collect water that drips through the tree when it rains, which is used in germinating white clover seeds. A control set of seeds watered with water collected out in the open was set up. Also, subsequent batches of seeds watered with beech water, collected at various times as the leaves develop, are set up and incubated as the control batch was. About every 12 hours, seed counts of each are taken to check for variation in germination rate. By our hypothesis, the germination rate should decrease as the leaves develop. We'll see what happens.

The soil is also being leached, which is dissolving the chemicals in it, with distilled water. This solution will be tested for toxic substances also.

In addition to the above procedures, a species of grass that grows under beech trees in the Smokies will be transplanted down here under this beech tree to see if this tree has any effect on its growth.

Conclusion

All of these data and observations will be compiled when it is felt that enough experimentation has been carried out to scientifically formulate a conclusion as to why grass doesn't grow underneath That Beech Tree.

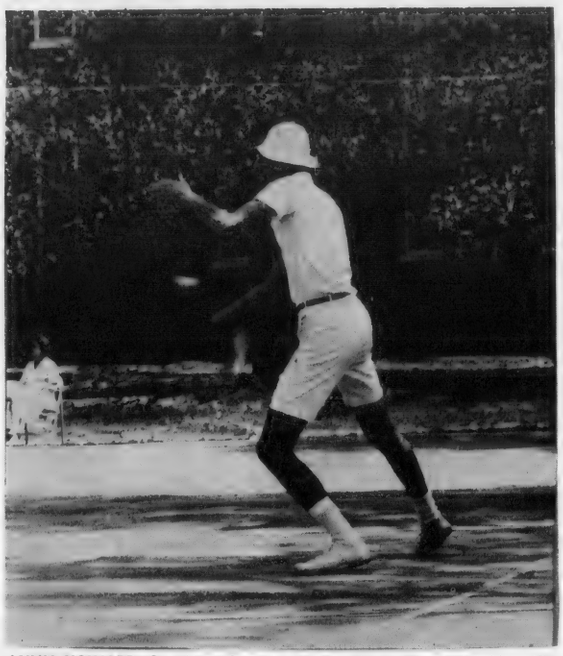
Netters Win Four Straight; Howard Stars

After losing four of their first five matches, the Maryville College tennis team put together four consecutive victories last week in an effort to bring their season's record above the .500 mark. Two losses, however, after the week of successes offset the mid-season spurt and doomed the Scots to a slightly sub-par season.



Maryville Defeats Mars Hill

Maryville began its victory streak by turning back Mars Hill by a tally of five matches to four. Pacing the Scots' narrow triumph was number one singles man Lynn Howard. The lanky junior easily won his match with Mars Hill's Bill Cole.

In addition to Howard's victory in singles competition, Pete Parks and Alan Childs also succeeded in defeating their opponents.

Doubles Matches Clinch Victory

With the score of the match knotted at 3 apiece after the singles, Maryville's doubles teams swept two of the three points to give the Scots their five to four victory. Lynn Howard and Rich Marshall, playing in the first doubles slot, and team captain Bob Paul and Pete Park, the second team, registered decisions over their opponents from Mars Hill.

LYNN HOWARD, Scots' number one singles player, paced the Maryville surge last week, winning five of six singles matches. Teaming with Rich Marshall in doubles, Howard was again successful in five of six matches.

The Scots' second victory in their streak of four came at the expense of Lincoln Memorial University. Again it was Howard who paced the Maryville squad, setting back the number one man from L.M.U. in straight sets, 7-5 and 6-2. Rich Marshall, Pete Park, and Bill Gass also scored victories in the singles competition.

Holding a solid four to two edge, the Scots had only to win one of the three doubles matches to secure the victory. By defeating their opponents in straight sets of 6-4 and 6-4, Howard and Rich Marshall assured Maryville's netters of the match. Pete Park and Bob Paul also added a doubles victory to bring the final score to 6 and 3.

Asheville-Biltmore Is Next Victim

It was against the Asheville-Biltmore squad that Maryville's netters reached their season's peak, turning back the North Carolina school 9 to 0.

Only Lynn Howard, who had to go twelve games before winning the first set, was pressed by his opponent. Bill Gass, Maryville's fifth seeded netter, showed the best mastery of his opponent, winning by identical scores of 6-0 and 6-0.

The rout continued through the doubles competition, as Howard and Marshall, Park and Paul, and Gass and Childs all gained victories.

Maryville extended their victory streak to four straight when they played a return match with L.M.U. As in the first match, Howard, Marshall, Park, and Gass all defeated their opponents in singles competition; and the doubles teams of Howard and Marshall and Park and Paul had continued success against the L.M.U. team. Bob Paul, who had lost in the first meeting of the two teams, rallied to gain a revenge victory over L.M.U.'s James Durham.

Milligan Ends Steak

After four consecutive successes and after having run their season's record to a respectable 5 wins and 4 losses, the Maryville netters ran into trouble. The first team to destroy the Scots' pattern of success was Milligan College. Only Bob Paul was able to triumph over his opponent, defeating Jerry Judd 6-4 and 6-2.

Scots Lose to Wasps

Emory and Henry dealt the Scots a second loss, pushing Maryville's season record to 5 and 7. The Wasps had emerged victorious in five of the eight matches before rain halted the proceedings. Lynn Howard and Bill Gass took victories in the singles matches over John Allen and Craig Harris. In doubles play, Howard teemed with Rich Marshall in defeating their Emory and Henry opponents.

Kardatzke Hopes for TAIC Success

With the season nearly at its end, the Highlanders can, at best, finish with a record of 6 victories and 7 defeats. The TIAC Tournament, however, still lies ahead of Coach Lauren Kardatzke's charges. If the Scots can pull some upsets in the vigorous competition, it will cast a pleasant glow over a season that was labelled as a "rebuilding" year.

Victory Continues to Evade Maryville Baseballers
Mars Hill Only Victim as Scots Lose Six Games

The Maryville College baseball team continued to have little success, losing six of seven games played during the past two weeks. The losses pushed the Scots' season's record to one and eight.

Maryville 5, Anderson 7

A four-run outburst by the Scots in the sixth inning gave Maryville a 5-4 lead over Anderson College. Two runs, however, in the bottom of the inning, pulled the Indiana school back into the lead and clinched the victory.

The Highlanders were led in hitting by catcher Sonny Hughes and shortstop Tom Bowers, both of whom collected two hits in four attempts. Benny Monroe registered seven strikeouts while going the route on the mound.

Maryville 1, Anderson 15

Meeting the Anderson College squad for a second time, the Highlanders had considerably less success, falling by a score of 15 to one. Anderson jumped on Maryville starter Jack Llewellyn for seven runs in the first three innings. Only in the fourth and fifth were the Scots able to prevent their opponents from scoring. Tom Bowers and Sonny Webb collected the Highlanders' only hits, as the Anderson hurlers limited Maryville to two lone singles.

Maryville 3, Mars Hill 2

The Scots' first victory of the season came at the expense of Mars Hill in a rain-abbreviated game played on the Maryville diamond.

Mars Hill started off in fine style, scoring two runs in the first inning against Maryville starter Randy Smith. After the initial outburst, however, freshman Smith held the Mars Hill squad scoreless throughout the rest of the game.

Maryville's runs were scored in the third inning when singles by Tom Payne and Sonny Hughes, and a double by Sonny Webb, brought home three runs.

Although the scoring was terminated with Maryville's surge in the third, the game was far from over. The most serious threat to Maryville's lead came in the top of the ninth when an error and two walks loaded the bases for the Mars Hill team after Smith had struck out the first two batters. With two outs, the bases loaded, and Mars Hill's best hitter at the plate, the Scots seemed on the verge of another defeat. The moment of truth never arrived, however, as the rains came and the inning was washed out, the score reverting to the eighth inning with the Maryville squad holding 3-2 lead.

Maryville 2, Carson Newman 15

One of the worst defeats of the season was inflicted on Coach Baird's charges by the Carson-Newman Eagles, who blasted out 19 hits and 15 runs. In the meantime, two Eagle hurlers were holding the Highlanders to four hits, three of which were collected by catcher Sonny Hughes.

Maryville 0, Milligan 3

Traveling to Johnson City to play Milligan College, the Highlanders found themselves in a much closer game, but when the action was finished, the results were the same and Maryville had suffered its sixth set back against its lone victory.

With the exception of a three-run outburst in the fifth inning, Scot hurler Benny Monroe held Milligan to three hits and no runs. The fifth inning spurt, however, was decisive, as Maryville was unable to score, managing only three hits against the Milligan hurler.

Maryville 0, Mars Hill 10

In a return game with Mars Hill, the only team they have defeated, Maryville was the victim of a revenge victory. For the second consecutive game, the Scots were held scoreless. While the Highlanders were collecting four hits, Mars Hill batters poked out nine hits and 10 runs.

Maryville 3, Emory & Henry 10

Emory & Henry College handed the Highlanders their most recent defeat, 10 to three. Pitcher Benny Monroe absorbed the defeat. Joe Scheideler led Maryville batters with three hits in three trips to the plate.

Tracksters Win Twice; Eagles Fall 76-60

Rebounding after a loss to Emory University in the season's opening meet, the Maryville College track team came back with a surge of power to win its next two clashes. Milligan College was the first to feel the strength of Coach Howard Tomlinson's forces, falling by a score of 72½ to 63½. The Scots' next victim was arch-rival Carson Newman. The Eagles lost 76 to 60.

At the start of the season, it was the general feeling of the members of the squad that if the performers in the field events could merely remain even with their opponents, Maryville's strong corps of runners could clinch the victory. Against Milligan and Carson Newman, this theory was tested twice, each time with different results.

Field Men Outscore Milligan

The deciding factor in the meet with Milligan College was the superior performance of the field men. With junior Denny McGowan leading the way, Maryville's field men out scored the Milligan team 31½ to 22½, the margin of victory. McGowan headed the strong showing by taking first places in the high jump with a leap of 5' 9½" and in the pole vault, jumping 10'

Denny McGowan

2½". Dave Alexander 19'6" effort in the broad jump and Greg Hallen's 159' 10" toss of the javelin earned two more first place finishes for the Scots, giving them four firsts in the six field events.

In addition to the first places, Maryville performers also took their share of seconds and thirds. Two freshman, Cole Piper and Danny Styles, grabbed second place finishes in the discus and javelin respectively. Mike Dalton, a junior, took second in the broad jump and tied for third in the high jump.

Scot Runners Match Milligan

Handed a nine point lead by the field men, Maryville's nighly touted runners were unable to add to the margin. They did not, however, lose any ground, as they divided 82 points evenly with Milligan squad.

Typical of the balance between the two teams were the relays. Maryville's quartet of Bob Leach, Jack Smoot, Mike Dalton, and Dick Craig sprinted their way to first place in the 440 relay, but Dalton, Joe Suitor, Rich Reed, and Jerry Bell lost to Milligan in the mile relay. The winning time in the 440 relay was 44.6; Milligan's winning time in the mile relay was 3:35.1.

Scots Score Three Wins

Of the eight individual events on the track, Maryville took only three first places. Dick Craig, followed closely by Dave Alexander, recorded a time of 23.2 in the 220 yard dash, as the Scots took first and second in the event.

Another first place was turned in by freshman Bob Leach, who won the 220 yard low hurdles with a time of 28.2. In the other hurdles event, the 120 yard highs, the Scots lost a first place when Terry Amon tripped and fell, as two Milligan men swept past him. Denny McGowan finished third in the highs for the Scots.

Maryville Sweeps 880

Maryville's final victory in the running events came in the 880 yard run where Rich Reed, Hugh McCampbell, and Phil Jerome finished first, second, and third respectively to post the only sweep of the meet. Reed's winning time was 2:05.1.

GREG HALLEN has been one of the top performers on Coach Howard Tomlinson's track team. Working exclusively with the javelin, Hallen has three victories to his credit and has not been defeated this year.

Milligan offset Maryville's half mile success in the other distance events — the mile and two mile runs. Woodby won the mile with a time of 4:36. Maryville's John Livingston was second with a 4:39 and Milligan's Cornelius took third. The trio finished in the same order in the two mile run. The winning time was a fine 10:04.6.

Other Maryville performers to take points in the track events were Dick Craig, who took second in the 100 yard dash, and Dave Alexander and Jerry Bell, who ran their way to second and third place finishes in the 440 yard run.

Scots Defeat Eagles

Against Carson Newman it was the performance of the runners that secured the victory for the Maryville squad. Carson Newman's field men piled up a substantial 35 to 19 score against the Scots. Once the action switched to the track, however, Maryville quickly caught up with the Eagles and pulled away steadily to give the Scots a 76 to 60 victory.

Craig Stars for Scots

Sprinter Dick Craig played an important part in the Scots' success on the track. Craig led a Maryville sweep in the 100 yard dash, recording a 10.2 in leading Jack Smoot and Mike Dalton across the finish line. Craig took a second first place in the 220 yard dash with a time of 23.4. Jack Smoot was second. In addition, Craig lent his talents to the relay teams, anchoring Maryville's victorous 440 yard relay quartet and carrying the baton on the first leg of the mile relay team, which took 3:35.5 in winning the event.

The Scots traded first place finished with the Eagles in the hurdles events. Terry Amon finished second in the 120 yard highs. Freshman Bob Leach won the 220 yard low hurdles with a time of 27.0. Leach also ran on the 440 yard relay team.

Bell Wins 440

Jerry Bell, Maryville's hard working quarter miler, won his speciality with a time of 52.2. Lane Rapp edged out teammate Joe Suitor for third in the 440.

Maryville continued its dominance of the 880 yard run as Rich Reed won his third straight race with a time of 2:05. Hugh McCampbell finished second behind Reed, also for the third consecutive time.

Only in the distance events did the Eagles better the Scots. The Scots' Livingston took second in the mile and third in the two mile. Billy Evaul took second in the two mile.

Hallen Undefeated in Javelin

Despite Carson Newman's decisive 35 to 19 supremacy in the field events, the Highlanders matched them in first places, each team taking three events. Greg Hallen won the javelin to remain undefeated in that event with a heave of 161' 5". Dave Alexander's leap of 20 feet, one inch won the board jump, while Denny McGowan tied for first in the pole vault at 5'6". McGowan also took a third in the high jump. Ray Eaton, competing in his first meet of the year took second in the javelin and Pat O'Brien placed third in the shot put.

'Fantasticks'-you simply say no

by Karen Keen

The Fantasticks, written by Tom Jones and Harvey Schmidt and directed at Maryville College by Thomas Jones, was presented last night and will be presented tonight and June 8.

Directed toward the audience, The Fantasticks is a musical done in cabaret style. Almost the entire first act was taken from a play by the French writer Rostand, The Romancers. The plot involves a boy, a girl, and their fathers, who have discovered that to manipulate children, you simply say no.

One of the highlights of the show is the Rape Ballet — rape is a much more businesslike word than abduction. Only an insensitive clod could come away from the theatre without laughing dozens of times and crying at least once.

Leading members of the cast are Sarajune Schue as the Girl, Luisa; Michael Quickel as the Boy, Matt; and Harold Laster as the narrator, El Gallo. The supporting roles are played by Cecelia Bridges, the mute; Thomas Llewellyn, the girl's father; David Clinkman, the boy's father; David King, Henry, the old actor; and Andy Ruhlin, Mortimer, the actor who dies.

Peytons move to Southern California

The Reverend and Mrs. Hughston R. Peyton left Wednesday for Los Angeles, California, where Mr. Peyton will serve as Field Director for the Board of Christian Education for Southern California, beginning May 1.

The Peytons and their daughter, Alice, have lived in Maryville for six years while Mr. Peyton has held a similar position with the Synod of Mid-South, of which he is currently moderator. Mrs. Peyton has been secretary to the chaplain of Maryville College for four years.

Alice Peyton will continue in school at the University of Tennessee.

The Other Side of the Coin

The recent announcement of plans to reserve certain floors of Carnegie Hall for September's freshmen has been greeted with something less than open-armed warmth. The general reaction is most often heard in terms of personal inconvenience: no such drastic break with past procedure can expect too much else. Yet, contrary to oftheard humor, the plan was not intended primarily for disruption of dorm life. Nor was it a sadistic master-stroke on the part of of an administration — senior coalition in Student Faculty Senate.

In September of 1964, 263 new freshmen entered Maryville College. Seventy-five percent of this number had been in the first or second quartile of their high school class. Yet, at the beginning of second semester, 123 out of 284 freshmen were on academic probation: roughly forty-five percent.

This is no special reflection on this year's freshmen: past classes have managed to cover themselves equally well with this dusty glory. It is quite evident that despite a marked increase in the general ability of incoming freshmen over the past several years, almost half manage to achieve academic probation by the end of their first semester of college.

Student Faculty Senate has been very concerned with this problem. An extensive remapping of orientation procedure has been recommended, and many aspects of the problem were probed. The suggestion for dormitory reorganization was one outcome of this period of study. Taken all alone, it is difficult to see how such an arrangement could help the situation. But this isn't the only step.

A unified, semester-long period of orientation will be instituted next year. New approaches in presentation will be utilized. And this is where the real significance of this arrangement lies: in the next and following years. With new dormitories assured, new procedures to make the best utilization of such facilities are necessary. And this is the final context of the change: a period of experimentation for future planning.

Between experiencing and having experienced—the moment when the experience yields its last secrets. A moment we only discover is already past when cracks and stains appear, the gilding flakes off, and we wonder what it was that once so attracted us.

Alumni give Seniors dinner

On Monday evening at 6:30 the Class of 1965 was honored by the Maryville College Alumni Association at a buffet supper at Green Meadows Country Club.

After dinner, Dr. Lynn F. Curtis, president of the Association, introduced the alumni present. The Gentrymen, a quartet of folk singers, provided entertainment, and the class prophecy was read. Raymond I. Brahams, an alumnus and director of development, made a short talk, and the program was concluded with the singing of the Alma Mater.

Carole Brownlee is 1965-66 'Echo' editor

Carole Brownlee, a junior English major from Argyle, New York, was elected editor-in-chief of The Highland Echo for 1965-66 on Tuesday evening, May 11.

Miss Brownlee has served both as feature editor and as news editor of the paper. She was not opposed in the election.

Twenty junior girls to carry daisy chain

The traditional daisy chain honoring the seniors at commencement will be made and carried by the following 20 juniors: Jan Best, Betty Brown, Louise Crawford, Phyllis Evaul, Sue Foreman, Helen Griffin, Sue Haldeman, Dot Heismeyer, Joy Hutcheson, Marianne Jefferson, Diane Kline, Becky Koza, Betty Lender, Sara Mason, Lee Orcutt, Jean Reynolds, Jan Rose, Helen Ryan, Judy Siver, and Betty Lou Sochocky.

The chains are entertwined with daisies and ivy and are approximately 100 feet long. The girls are picked by the vice president of their class on the basis of service to the college.

Expenses for next fall rise

The expenses for the fall semester, 1965 have been raised above the amount for the two semesters, 1964-65.

The tuition will increase from $350 to $400. Other expenses are $200 for board; $112.50 for room; $21 for the student activity fee and mailbox; $5 for a health fee; and $15 for group hospitalization insurance. The insurance is payable first semester only and will cover students from fall, 1965 to fall, 1966. This policy is limited, but it covers students during the summer anywhere in the U. S.

The total expenses for the first semester are $753.50 and $738.50 for the second semester. This amounts to $1,492 for a full academic year. This does not include books, labs, travel, or music instruction.

We cannot afford to forget any experience, not even the most painful.

Student body officers

Hugh McCampbell, left, and Hank Seitz, right, were elected student body president and vice president, respectively, on Tuesday, April 27. Both men will be seniors.

Both to leave U.S. in August

Two Maryville College Sophomores, Ruth Bates from Follansbee, West Virginia, and Lois Huffines from Folsom, Pennsylvania, will spend their junior years of college abroad.

Chosen by UPUSA

Miss Bates is a French major, and she plans to return to Maryville College for her senior year and later to teach French or to work with foreign people in government or church work.

Program of Millersville College

Miss Huffines will study in Germany. She will leave aboard the S. S. Aurelia on August 19 for Phillips-Universitat, Marburg, Germany. She will have two months of intensive orientation before the winter semester begins.

Phillips-Universitat was founded in 1527 by Phillip the Magnanimous, Count of Hesse, as the first secular college in Europe. There are 10,000 students there, where JYA students are offered specially oriented courses, leaving approximately one-third of winter courses and all summer courses to regular curriculum. A series of guided tours, field trips to neighboring cities, and allowances for personal needs are included in the program.

A German major, Miss Huffines will be studying German under the cooperative students-abroad program of Millersville State College, Pennsylvania. After completing graduation requirements here at Maryville, she plans to attend graduate school and eventually to teach in college.

Campbell, West will be next Vesper speakers

Tomorrow evening, May 16, at 7:30, The Reverend G. David Campbell, pastor of the First Presbyterian Church, Rockwood, Tennessee, will speak at Vespers. Mr. Campbell is a graduate of Maryville College and is the son-in-law of Mrs. John Cummings, who teaches Bible here.

Dr. Charles C. West, world-known authority on communism and Christianity, will be the Vesper speaker on Sunday evening, May 23 at 7:30. Dr. West is the author of several books, and is also an authority on student work.

Lip service

Last Monday night the alumni gave the seniors a buffet supper at the country club. It was really nice — we don't think there was a moment of anything less than pleasantness the whole evening. We went in cars; we ate a lot of delicious food; we listened to the Gentrymen, four young men of assorted sizes, looks, and intellects (but with good voices), heard the class prophecy read (thanks to this committee for the good job), and heard a short, to-the-point talk by Mr. Brahams.

Soon we will be alumni. Aaaaaaaah (expression of joy).

The evening before, Sunday, was the scene of what could've been the biggest (if least destructive) of Mother's Day Riots. It stirred someone up enough to call the police, although it took three calls to rouse President Copeland, and they say Dean McClelland was having a good time — there, on the scene. It was covered by three newspapers (generally speaking), the most critical account being in the local paper.

We think it would be interesting to know just who called the police. Surely it was no one of the college family—a little bird, an irate neighbor, the KKK? Noise is noise, but water itself, outside, is harmless and fun.

We have a new editor of the Echo for next year as you may have read or heard: Carole Brownlee. She's capable and will do an efficient job. And best to her.

THE FANTASTICKS: THE AUDIENCE LOVED IT

by Dave Powell

The Fantasticks is a fun play. On the whole, the crew and cast in the Maryville production seemed to enjoy their performance— which is the secret especially in this play, for good rapport with the audience and with the author's purpose.

On Friday, April 30, there was just a touch of that old bugbear— opening night haste.

The Narrator (Hal Laster) began a little stiffly, but softened up to credibility before the first act was half over. The Boy (Mike Quickel) assumed an unending series of legs apart, hands behind the back, cue-conscious poses, but he spoke and sang convincingly and wasn't too far out of line when you consider that the character he portrayed was indeed just a boy.

Sarajune Schue as The Girl sang well and danced gracefully. She is capable of a good deal more intricate footwork than those few sashays around the floor, but the set wasn't designed for elaborate choreography.

Oh yes, and the mutes were just a little too much at times. As the main attractions they were delightfully coordinated. When they had to sit for a spell, those head-bobbing, hand-flailing, 23 Skiddoo spasms bordered on the cloying.

The Fathers (Tom Llewellyn and Dave Clinkman) were wonderful, light-hearted masterpieces of tomfoolery.

The Old Actor, Henry (Dave King) was an amalgamation of Ben Franklin in BVD's and Ed Wynne with delusions of grandeur. Henry was lovable.

And Mortimer. Oh my dear sweet Mortimer (Andy Ruhlin). If I could die like you died, I should hope to kick off everyday at five and twice on weekends.

Mary Rucker and her five tongue-in-cheekies infiltrated the whole production with just the right touch of engaging "once more for kicks" music.

The set, lighting, makeup and costumes were all in keeping with the spirit of the play. Special production surprises (like watering the piano, a slanted stage, and the releasing of banners to announce scene changes etc., etc.,) were approved by and|or added by the directors (Mr. Jones and Marty Miller) to give this Maryville College presentation a personal touch.

The Fantasticks was a fun play — the audience loved it.

Band Tour Caper ... AND HEARD

by Lois Grinstead and Louise Crawford

On May 6 and 7 the Highlander Marching Band took to wheels in a White Star Deluxe and assorted cars. The tour included four concerts at Rockwood High School, McMinnville High School, White County High School in Sparta, and Harriman High.

It was more, however, than just performances. It was months of hard work and pressure . . . rushing to vote before leaving . . . Jon Gresham-MC's answer to Al Hirt . . . hot wool uniforms and echoing auditoriums . . . heated discussions about Campus Mike . . . Who slept in Jefferson Davis' bed?! . . . MC Ivy League-madras everywhere . . . motion sickness-who's got a paper bag? . . . "Don't worry, they'll never go off and leave you"—"Look, there goes the bus!—I never heard of this before!" . . . Crusaders, jingling johnnies, Dave Styles . . . "Is he really wearing a KILT!" . . . Dr. John Roberts . . . "What are those tassels for?" . . . I'm too full to play . . . pre-planned ovation . . . ever try to write a special studies on a bus? . . . a good recruit—next year's first trumpet? . . . Southern hospitality . . . back to roommates and chapel with the hopes of this good beginning launching a prospective annual tour.

I am definitely sick of school . . . Simple, uncomplicated frivolity of rock 'n' roll . . . The world's largest sixth grader . . . The senior class, which is not noted for its lack of leadership . . . At the time we were surviving . . . That's a threat . . . Jigjob builders . . . Anderson may inspire you, but to what? . . . But at least it's not monotonous . . . The student center is a wonderful example of the depression years; or army surplus . . . And then there's Bartlett . . . We've already desecrated the first floor with all that modern architecture; but it'll never reach third . . . You know, Howard Roark blew up a building. MY COUSIN'S

Our Student Teachers

by Kathy Burgess

A college graduate, who moved directly from a college classroom into fulltime teaching, described her first year of teaching by paraphrasing Samuel Butler's wry remark about "life." "It was," she said, "like playing a violin solo in public and learning the instument as one goes on!" In order to prevent this type of entry into the teaching profession, to make the first year of teaching less of a succession for mere survival, the opportunity for student teaching is included in our Education Department.

Completing their student teaching this year in the area of Physical Education have been Nancy White under the supervision of Mrs. Maxie Blevens at Everett, Arlene Schaffer at Everett, Jeff Slagle under Mr. Bill Woodby at Everett, Joe Scheideler under Mr. Ray Lillard at Everett;

Benny Monroe under Mr. Ted Wilson at Maryville High, Kip Martin under Mr. Ray Lillard at Everett, H. H. Linginfelter under Mr. Joel Griffin at Maryville Jr. High, Jim Henderson under Mr. Jim Gregory at Porter High, Mike Gregory under Mr. Don Heatherly at Eagleton Jr. High; Gene Dixon under Mr. Don Heatherly at Eagleton, Tommy Bowers under Mr. Jim Gregory at Porter, Jerry Bell under Mr. Ed Smith at Maryville Jr. High, Ken Berry under Mr. Bill Woodby at Everett, Donnie Phelps at Friendsville, and Roland McClanahan under Mr. Don Heatherly at Eagleton.

Each student teacher is required to keep a record of his experiences with the students and various methods and ideas employed in the form of a Teaching Log. From Jeff Slagle's entry of March 17, we read, ". . . taught phys. ed. These boys seem to enjoy tumbling and the large part of them are coming along. I can't get some of them to roll over their heads. They will roll over their shoulder but cannot make themselves do it right — they seem to be a little afraid. However, when I demonstrate, they catch on pretty easily."

From the Department of History the practice teachers have included Judy Wasson at Everett under Mr. S. Renfro, Carol Sue McNabb under Mrs. Mary B. Barth at Maryville High, Carolyn Huff under Mr. Maurice Long at Everett, Carolyn Foust under Mr. Maurice Long at Everett, Judy Butler under Mrs. Hazel Aiken at Maryville Jr. High, Norma Fisher under Mrs. Frances Tayler at Maryville Jr. High, Harry Repsher under Mr. Rufus Pannell at Maryville Jr. High, and Dwight Campbell under Mrs. Frances Volk at Maryville High.

From one of Judy Butler's Log pages we find, "In our seventh grade history class, we decided to have a contest, to check our knowledge of the chapters we had been studying. Since the material was concerned with the War between the States, the two teams were named the Yankees and the Rebels. The game continued for most of the hour with the score changing back and forth. As fate would have it, we changed the course of history — the Rebels won!"

John Nichols, a math major, is completing his student teaching under Mr. Max Coulter at Walland. Mary Jeanne Kent is presently at Everett with Miss Brenda Dalton, teaching French. And, as a Spanish Major, Elizabeth deVente is under Mrs. Kathleen Edwards at Everett.

Kathie Kirk, an art major, finished under Mrs. Wright in the Alcoa School System. From her experiences comes, "At Christmas time we had a unit on stitchery. Several of the boys took to sewing like Betsy Ross to the flag and came up with many imaginative stitches (much to the coach's distress), and much to my distress he gave them detentions for sewing in study hall."

From the Home Economics Department, Arlene Pateman completed her practice teaching at Maryville High, while Jane Best is completing her practice under the direction of Mrs. Martha Lovingood at Maryville Jr. High.

In the Department of Music, Dave Clinkman completed his student teaching under Mrs. Ray and Mrs. Hatcher at Fort Craig and Alcoa. Jon Gresham is finishing his study in the teaching of band at Maryville Junior and Senior high with Mr. Bilbrey. Marty Hall completed her requirements under Mrs. Ray and Mrs. Clark at Fort Craig and Sam Houston. Joan Simmons is beginning her teaching at Hale Elementary and High School under Mrs. Anderson. And. Karen Summerlin, who is completing hers under Mrs. Ray and Mrs. Clark at Fort Craig and Sam Houston has to offer from her Log the recent experience of helping to direct the Maryville High School Choir in preparation for their Annual Spring Concert, May 14. A few of the musical numbers being presented include, "No Man Is an Island," "South Pacific" and Bach's "Blessing, Glory, and Wisdom."

From the Elementary Education Department, the student teachers at Fort Craig include Anne Smith under Mrs. Virginia Jett in the second grade, Nancy Buckwalter under Miss Jonnie Post in the third grade, Marcia Hickey under Mrs. Elizabeth Banks in the fifth grade, Ruth Carter under Miss Janice Eagleton in the second grade, Ruth Gibson under Mrs. Myrtle Kidd in the first grade, Ruth McDade under Mrs. Norma Cunningham in the first grade, and Fran Black under Mrs. Jean Roberts in the first grade. From an entry in Ruth Carter's Log can be read, "While having a spelling lesson with my second graders, I decided to have the children practice writing the words with a finger in the air. They enjoyed this tremendously, because it was something different, but a few got carried away and had to stand up to dot an 'i'!"

Those completing their practice teaching at Sam Houston include Joan Gillespie under Mrs. Leone Hughes in the sixth grade, Linda Schug under Mrs. Lenore Ramsey in the second grade, Jan Courley under Miss Kathleen Post in the third grade, Tena Criner under Mrs. Margaret Sherer in the fourth grade, Ginger Salmon under Mrs. Ellen Brahams in the first grade, Pat Dobbin under Mrs. Margaret Sherer in the fourth grade, Julia Hoch under Mrs. Josephine Burns in the third grade, and Kathy Burgess under Mrs. Rhoda Williams in the fifth grade.

Within Jane Criner's Log we find, "This morning our class was having a series of three minute reading tests. The supervising teacher stressed emphatically the idea of not getting out of their seat during the nine minutes. About the middle of one of the testing periods one lovable little redhead boy began to twist and squirm around in his seat and finally stood up. When reproached quite severely by his teacher and questioned as to why he was standing up, he cheerfully replied, 'That's the Star Spangled Banner they're singing!' (The Third Grade down the hall was having music!)"

Student teaching occupies a key position in the program of teacher education both at the elementary and secondary levels. This experience might be described as stumulating, challenging, and among the most valuable for new teachers. But, then, it should be all these and more for those who will be working with the most important American product — its enthusiastic young people!

ABOUT THE AYALONS

by Harold Cones

Mordechai, Gad, Eitan, and Baruch — the Four Ayalons — brought new life to our campus in their hour-long performance in the Music Hall. In a program entitled "Echos of Israel Today," they presented entertainment of a different flavor than we're used to at Maryville — song, dance, and satire all combined in a "teaching method" of Israeli customs.

An Israeli view of America — our cowboys, skyscrapers, rock and roll, and "Dr. Zimmerman the Sheriff" brought down the house, according to 275 people who attended the performance.

Afterward the Ayalons led an informal "reception" discussion, answering any questions that were given by students and faculty who remained.

The personalities of the group captured the audience, and continued to wherever they walked and talked on campus.

Midnight's Dark Corner

by Anne Le Furgey

The corner was dark; and the burlap smell of the cellar enveloped its darkness, making the air heavy and hot. Candles dented a shroud of smoke and breath, illuminating faces intent upon pleasure and sorrow, song and verse. Elbow to elbow, knee to knee, back to back, and front to front, humanity sat, stood, crouched, kneeled.

From midnight's solitary corner, they were only a mass of colors— black, white, yellow, brown—with one lone Negro outlined by a candle's glow and pinpointed by the quarter inch coal of a cigarette. Both black and white chanted a rumbling singsong started among the Caucasians. "We shall overcome. We shall overcome."

Midnight's corner dissolved into tears, for no reason and for all reasons, for hundreds of people and for the singular lack of one person, for darkness and for light, for Negro and for white, for self and for pity.

Wine. Homesickness. God save me from midnight's dark corner.

Cumberland, Milligan Defeat Scots 77-59 Track Team Sweeps Past Bryan 114-22

Headed toward their first winning season in recent years, the Maryville College track team saw their promising two and one record fall to two and three, as first Cumberland College and then Milligan College registered identical 77-59 victories over the Scots. The Highlanders repulsed the prospect of dropping to even lower depths, coming back in the final meet to overwhelm Bryan College 114-22 and square their season's record at three wins and three losses.

The meet with Cumberland was the turning point of the season. After losing their first meet to Emory, the Scots had rounded into shape and defeated both Milligan and Carson-Newman. Cumberland stood at the middle of the schedule. A victory would boost the Scots toward success; a defeat, however, would return them to the ranks of mediocrity.

Cumberland, furthermore, provided Coach Howard Tomlinson's forces with their sternest competition. Loaded with first-rate distance runners and highly capable field men, the Kentucky school has been consistently successful in track.

LEADING THE SCOTS AGAINST BRYAN were Dave Alexander (l.) and John Livingston (r.). Alexander led the rout by scoring 20 points, while Livingston ended a 4 year career by recording easy wins in the mile and 2 mile runs.

Cumberland Defeats Scots

Held on a rainy day on the Maryville track, the meet turned into a Cumberland victory. Piling up a sound 35-19 margin in the field events, the Kentucky school added to their total by also outrunning the Scots 42 to 40.

Junior javelin thrower Greg Hallen uncorked a toss of 153' to win his speciality. In the broad jump, Mike Dalton defeated teammate Dave Alexander with a jump of 19'1". Cumberland, however, won the other field events, garnering first and thirds in the discus and high jump, and sweeping all three positions in the pole vault and shot put. Second place finishes in the discus by Cole Piper and in the jump by Denny McGowan completed Maryville's scoring in the field competition.

Cumberland Strong in Distances

Although Cumberland substantially outscored Maryville in the field, they showed their greatest strength in the distance events. Paced by their outstanding runner, Jack Faulkner, the Kentucky school swept the half mile and took first and second in the mile and two mile runs. Only John Livingston, who finished third in both the mile and two mile, was able to score points for the Scots.

Maryville made the meet close by their strong performance in the shorter running events. Dick Craig was a double winner, copping first place in the 100 yard dash with a time of :10.6 and and the 220 yard dash with a time of :23.5. Mike Dalton finished second in the 100.

Senior Jerry Bell added another Maryville victory by winning the 440 with a :52.2 timing. Dave Alexander took third in the race. Bob Leach, the Scots' fine low hurdler, won the 220 yard lows, as he posted a time of 27.1; Terry Amon finished second in 120 yard high hurdles.

Scots Sweep Relays

The Highlanders fared best against Cumberland in the relays. Bob Leach, Jack Smoot, Mike Dalton, and Craig recorded a time of :45.2 seconds to win the 440 yard relay. Maryville scored another victory in the mile relay, as anchor man Jerry Bell held off a strong bid by Cumberland's Jack Faulkner to give teammates Dick Craig, Dave Alexander, and Rich Reed a time of 3:34.0.

Milligan Avenges Loss

The Scots suffered their second straight loss when Milligan College avenged an earlier Maryville victory, defeating the Scots 77 to 59.

As in the meet with Cumberland, Maryville was paced by its fine relay teams. The foursome of Leach, Smoot, Dalton, and Craig won the 440 yard relay with a :44.4 timing. In the mile relay it was Dave Alexander, Joe Suitor, Rich Reed, and Jerry Bell, who defeated their opponents from Milligan.

Maryville was able to add only four other firsts to their relay triumphs. Bob Leach continued to exhibit top form, copping the 330 yard intermediate hurdles with a time of :41.4. Half-miler Rich Reed scored another Maryville victory as he led teammate Hugh McCampbell across the line with a 2:04.2 timing in the 880.

Hallen, McGowan Earn Firsts

In the field events Greg Hallen uncorked his longest throw of the season, 170' 10", to remain undefeated in the javelin, and Denny McGowan led a Maryville sweep in the pole vault, jumping 11 feet. Ernie Greeno and Ralph Johnson finished behind McGowan.

Alexander Scores Eleven

Although failing to take any first places, Dave Alexander led the Scots in scoring. The muilt-talented sophomore placed second in the 220, the broad jump, and the high jump and third in the shot put. His leg on the victorious mile relay team gave him a total of 11 points.

Scots Bomb Bryan

If the Scots felt pent up after their two losses, they unleashed their fury against hapless Bryan College. In addition to winning both relays, Scot trackmen swept the shot put, high jump, pole vault, mile, two mile, 880, and 440 in amassing a record total of 114 points.

The flurry of Maryville points began in the field events, as Denny McGowan, Dave Alexander, and Mike Dalton took all three places in the high jump. McGowan led another sweep in the pole vault, as Ralph Johnson and Ernie Greeno took second and third places respectively. Shot putters Pat O'Bryan, Dave Alexander, and Bob Coates continued the rout. Cole Piper threw the discus 116' 5½" for first place, while Dave Alexander finished third. Alexander and Mike Dalton both leaped over 20' in placing first and third in the broad jump; and Greg Hallen completed the season without suffering a defeat, as he won the javelin with a throw of 156' 3"

Livingston Is Double Winner

The awesome Maryville display continued through the track events. Senior John Livingston, Billy Evaul and Keith Jones swept the two mile run, and Livingston, Evaul, and Hugh McCampbell swept the mile. In the half mile, it was McCampbell who led the way with a fine timing of 2:02.5 to barely edge out Rich Reed. Joe Suitor finished third.

Jerry Bell, a senior 440 man. recorded a time of :52.0 to lead Alexander and Lane Rapp across the finish line for the Scots' final sweep.

Although Bryan scored 12 of their 22 points in the short running events, Maryville names were still prominent. Bob Leach and Dave Alexander tied for first in the 220 yard low hurdles with a :26.1 time. In the 120 yard highs, Terry Amon and Denny McGowan gave the Scots another 1-2 finish.

The lone Bryan victories came in the dashes, where Robert Heath defeated Maryville's Dick Craig and Jack Smoot in the 100 and in the 220.

Alexander Stars

Although it is difficult to select an outstanding performer in such a completely Maryville-dominated meet, the Scots were paced by Dave Alexander. The former Knoxville high school star compiled 20 points during the meet. In addition to first place finishes in the broad jump and 220 yard low hurdles, Alexander took second in the shot put, the broad jump, and the 440, and earned a third place in the disc s.

Late Surge Boosts Scots; Win Four of Six

Inspired perhaps by the rapidly approaching end of the season, or, perhaps, by their 1-8 record, the Maryville College baseball team rallied to win four of their last six games and boost their season's mark to five wins and 10 losses.

In the streak, which was marred only by losses to top teams like the University of Tennessee and Carson-Newman, freshman hurler Rob Nicholas paced the Scots, winning two of the four triumphs.

Maryville 3, North Georgia 2

North Georgia was the first team to bow before the Scots' new-found ability. The game began as a tight pitcher's battle. Jack Llewellyn toiled on the mound for the Scots for the first seven innings, allowing only three hits and one unearned run.

The tricky left-hander was pulled in the bottom of the seventh inning, when the Scots, trailing by a single tally, launched their first offensive threat. A double by Sonny Webb and John Agnew's single failed to produce a run, however, and Coach Boydson Baird brought in freshman pitcher Rob Nicholas to start the eighth inning.

Nicholas held the Georgia batters scoreless and seemed well on the way to his first victory when his teammates scored twice in the bottom of the frame. Singles by Joe Scheideler and Sonny Hughes and a walk to Randy Smith loaded the bases with two outs. An error by the Georgia shortstop brought in the two runs.

Northern Georgia, trailing by a score of 2-1, rallied in the top of the ninth to notch the game at two runs each. The Highlanders were not to be denied, however. Don Payne led off the bottom of the ninth by drawing a base on balls, Kip Martin sacrificed him to second, and Benny Monroe's clutch singles brought him scurrying across the plate with the winning run.

Maryville's second victim was Milligan College. Another freshman hurler, Randy Smith, went the route in picking up the victory for the Scots.

After coming up with an unearned run in the second, the Highlanders scored two more in the third on Kip Martin's single, an error by the Milligan second baseman, and two infield outs. The decisive runs came in the fifth, however. First basemen John Agnew and Sonny Hughes both rapped singles and the Milligan shortstop contributed an error, as the Scots pushed across their fourth and fifth runs.

Maryville 6, U-T 17

The Volunteers from Tennessee ended the Scots' victory streak at two. Blasting out 16 hits and 17 runs against two Maryville hurlers, the Vols easily proved their supremacy. Joe Scheideler, Benny Monroe, and Sonny Hughes were responsible for Maryville's three hits.

Maryville 3, Carson-Newman 5

One of the most satisfying games of the year for the Highlanders was their narrow loss to power-laden, arch-rival Carson-Newman. In going the route for the Scots, lefthander Jack Llewellyn did an excellent job, faltering only in the sixth and eighth innings, when Eagle hits and Maryville errors produced five runs.

The Scots scored the first run of the ball game when a walk to Sonny Hughes, a sacrifice by Tommy Bowers, and a single by John Agnew gave them a 1-0 lead. The lead was erased in the sixth when the Eagles pushed across three runs.

The Scots were not yet defeated, however. Singles by Tom Bowers, John Agnew, Don Payne, and Jack Llewellyn scored two runs in the top of the eighth and knotted the score at three to three. The Eagles, too, however, were determined not to be defeated. Erupting for two tallies in their half of the eighth and setting the Scots down in order in the top of the ninth, they secured the victory.

Maryville got back into the victory column against Emory and Henry College. Rewarding freshman Rob Nicholas his first starting assignment of the year, Coach Boydson Baird was himself, rewarded by a fine performance from the young pitcher. Nicholas allowed five runs in ten innings to gain the victory.

On the basis of a five run outburst in the third inning, Maryville ended the regulation nine inning game with the score tied at five runs. The heroics were provided by Tommy Bowers. Leading off for the Scots in the top on the tenth the powerful infielder hit the third pitch over the fence for the winning run.

Maryville 7, LMU 2

Jack Llewellyn turned in his third straight fine performance on the mound for the Highlanders, as they defeated Lincoln Memorial University seven to two. In many respects the game was the Scots' best of the year.

At the plate, Coach Baird's squad rapped out 12 hits. The most impressive showing, however, was made by the defensive play of the infield, which rattled off six double plays to continually thwart LMU offensives.

Maryville's hitters were led by left fielder Joe Scheideler. The senior outfielder rapped out three hits, a single, double, and home run, in four trips to the plate. Sonny Webb also hit safely three times in four attempts, while Kip Martin and Tommy Bowers had two for four.

Tomlinson Begins Spring Football; 40 Men Report for Early Sessions

Forty prospective members of the 1965 Maryville College football team reported for spring practice sessions last week. Heading the group are 22 lettermen from the 1964 squad. Of the remaining 18 men, 11 are nonlettermen and seven are trying out for the team.

Head football coach Howard Tomlinson listed three objectives for the spring sessions:

1. To renew ideas and theories used in the 1964 season;
2. To give the coaching staff an opportunity to try certain players at new positions;
3. To give the men an idea of what type of work-outs they should plan for the summer.

Tomlinson stressed the fact that the spring practices will involve no scrimmaging and no contact work. Mike Dalton and Jim Pryor, co-captains for the 1965 season, will help to direct the work-outs.

A Familiar Plea

by Sue Haldeman

Ferozepore . . . Frances Newton Hospital . . . Sound familiar? Very familiar . . . What's the deeper meaning? Ferozepore is in India and the Frances Newton Hospital is in Ferozepore. Good grief, we hear that every day. And the 1964-65 Fred Hope Fund goes there. Any more questions? . . . What will the money do? It will build a laboratory technicians' school . . . Oh, yes, one that's badly, badly needed. Well, bye . . . Wait? Why? . . . Really? The building has already been started — on the promise of our money? You mean our money isn't there yet? All the pledges haven't been paid yet? . . . Only $885 of the $1,486.60? Really? That doctor — a woman isn't she . . . Dr. Ferris sure must trust us . . . Maryville College has given $13,000 to the Frances Newton Hospital since 1952! Never have thought much about hospitals in India. Guess there really aren't too many — for all those people, anyway. Fred Hope Fund sent all that money . . . We can't let them down now, can we? I'm going to go pay my . . . Wait a minute, I didn't make a pledge this year. Can I give anyway? Of course, what a silly question, huh? The more money, the better the school. And they really need that school . . .

who can devote only one semester or two quarters to the subject. The book is also ideal for courses in economics offered in adult evening schools and in employee training programs sponsored by business and industry. The entire field of economics is covered, using-to-date material related to the important issues of our time.

The author has prepared a Teacher's Manual in which he gives suggestions and ideas for teaching the subject, and a separate Study Guide for class or individual student use.

In his present position, Dr. Lynn teaches economics and marketing to officers in the Air Force Institute of Technology's Minuteman Program in Business, which is conducted by the University of Missouri at Whiteman Air Force Base.

Band to present Spring Concert

The sixty-five member Maryville College Highlander Band will present its spring concert on Saturday evening, May 15, at 8:15 in the Chapel.

The Band, under the direction of John A. Roberts, will use a program similar to the one presented on its recent Middle and East Tennessee tour. Included will be "Fanfare and Allegro," "Battell," and "Dramatic Essay" by Williams, the last of which will feature Jonathan Gresham as trumpet soloist. Also presented will be Mozart's "Serenade Number 10," directed by Allan Hoke; Dukas' "Fanfare to La Peri"; Lathan's "Il Pasticcio"; Morrissey's "Martinique"; and Sousa's "Nobles of the Mystic Shrine."

Scheideler Tops Scot Hitters

One of the factors in the Maryville College baseball team's less-than-mediocre season has been the distinct lack of hitting. Statistics released this week by the sports publicity office reveal that the team has no one hitting above .300, and only four men on the seventeen-man squad are hitting over .200.

Leading the hitters is lead-off man Joe Scheideler. The senior left-fielder has rapped out 13 hits in 44 trips to the plate for a respectable .295 average. Behind Scheideler are Benny Monroe .267, Jack Llewellyn at .250, and Sonny Hughes at .236. A complete list of averages is found below.

	AB	H	Avg.
Joe Scheideler	44	13	.295
Benny Monroe	30	8	.267
Jack Llewellyn	12	3	.250
Sonny Hughes	55	13	.236

138 seniors to graduate

Fort Mudge and Beyond

by Mike Moyers

Out, Out Sweet Prince (or something like that)

For a good part of the last four years, I have been advising college administrators on various school policies. My role has been much more that of special pleader than counselor. And for all my efforts, I seem to have collected a bag of old advice. Perhaps I was a bit forward; I suppose I should have waited until my counsel was requested. Yet I have the very distinct feeling that it would have been like waiting for the Executive Council to show mercy, i.e. a very long time.

This is not to suggest that student government has its proper plete waste of time for the past four years. It has been a waste only when it has encountered the administrative attitude that stuben government has its proper "place," and that it goes out of that "place" when it offers opinions on administrative policies. It seems to me to be slightly absurd that educators not seek and incorporate the ideas and suggestions of the educated. The greatest danger an administrator faces is a loss of contact with the student. And this breach between students and administrators is a real possibility at Maryville, where dormitory counselors can be selected without the advice and consent of the dormitory student government, where student government is expected to enforce rules in which it lacks conviction, where the deliberations of the administration are shrouded by mystery and transmitted by rumor, where certain areas of our campus life are not open to the student's scrutiny and, hopefully, understanding.

Students do not desire control of college administration. We are much too busy pursuing education — or whatever else we come to college for — to replace the deans and staff. We do have some very definite ideas about how to make educational processes more meaningful and our college community more liveable. We do not seek ease and simplicity. Student Council's efforts to revise our freshman orientation should point out our obvious concern and — forgive me — mature judgment. We seek education which allows for individuality; we seek administration which demands maturity rather than conformity. If these are ideals beyond the reach of liberal arts education, then student government will continue to carry around its bag of old advice.

Every man desires to live long, but no man would be old.

—Jonathan Swift

Lloyds honored by chair, naming of new dormitory

Dr. Ralph W. Lloyd, president of Maryville College for 31 years up to 1961, will be honored in the naming and dedication of the Ralph W. Lloyd Chair of Philosophy and Religion, an endowed teaching position. Dr. Lloyd is to be the speaker at the 146th Commencement at the College, at which the chair will be dedicated.

Mrs. Lloyd will also be honored. The new women's dormitory will be named and dedicated as the Margaret Bell Lloyd Residence for Women.

The endowed position was established by the Board of Directors, and it is expected that the fund will reach $500,000. Interest will sponsor a special lecture series of leaders in philosophy and religion, asked to speak of the aspects of the ecumenical movement.

The dedication of the new dormitory will take place on Sunday, June 6, at 7:15 at the building, which was completed in 1959.

Dr. Lloyd has done extensive work with both the United Presbyterian Church, of which he moderator, and a member of the General Council, and the National Council of Churches. He has been president of the World Presbyterian Alliance. These are only a few of the important positions he has held in the church.

He is a graduate of McCormick Theological Seminary and holds a number of honorary doctorates. Dr. and Mrs. Lloyd met at Westminster College, where both were members of the faculty. She is the former Margaret A. Bell of DuBois, Pennsylvania, the daughter of a Presbyterian minister.

Lectureship named in honor of Dr. Campbell

Dr. E. Fay Campbell, chaplain of Maryville College, has been honored in the naming of the E. Fay Campbell Lectureship on Christian Faith and Higher Education, which will be inaugurated on June 3 at Union Theological Seminary, New York. Dr. Campbell was General Secretary at Dwight Hall, the Yale University Christian association for 21 years before coming to Maryville.

The lectures are a series of addresses made annually which will seek to interpret the implications Christian faith and higher education have for each other. They will be delivered by a scholar, teacher, or administrator at the annual meeting of the Commission on Higher Education of the National Council of Churches.

The first lecture will be given by Dr. Reuben A. Holden, Secretary of Yale University.

A total of $50,000 has been raised to endow the lectureship.

Lip service

It doesn't seem possible that we could have spent four years here. We've been thinking that. But there's a fallacy in it because we've spent only nine months out of each year here, so we've been around a little bit.

This being our last chance, we feel we ought to say something constructive (if not inspirational), even though it may be forgotten or ignored in studying for exams, packing, saying goodbyes or see-you-next-falls, grading papers, and sorting grade slips.

We like Maryville College. It took only a few months here for us to be drawn in by whatever that air is about the place which, after numerous declarations to leave after one or two years, keeps a lot of us here for four. (It's probably that very thing which we complain about — unworldliness, or other-worldliness.)

And we are glad to see Maryville College progressing. The plans being made for the new science building, student center, and new dorms are gratifying. Teachers' salaries are increasing; the library, "the heart of the academic life," is expanding; Anderson Hall is being beautified and made more efficent; we raised a million dollars; and more things often cited.

It seems we're coming out of a period of sleep or dormancy. We constantly see men—consultants—on campus to advise, architects to plan, and directors to make studies. These are good things.

However, it concerns us, though it may not some of our readers, that a very important thing may be lost in the hustle to expand. Or maybe it doesn't even seem important to you.

We are afraid that that certain something which makes us love Maryville College, which made those many alumni and faculty and staff and friends give to Maryville College so generously, may fold under in the attempt to keep the College from folding under because of provincialism or inadequate financial resources, or whatever might do that.

We doubt that the two are incompatible. Surely we can keep up with the age and be a college family at the same time. (Incidentally, that much-scorned term is very useful sometimes.)

What we feel when we hear about cafeteria-style eating, 70 people in a class; and 2000 students is sick. Just because we are a church-related college, led by virgorous, intelligent men and women, we are not immune to depersonalization.

We are simply afraid that in the process of progress, the human touch will be lost. And the worst thing about this is that it probably could never he regained. We hope it won't happen.

THIS WAS THE YEAR THAT WAS

by Dave King

This was the year that was. When we're all part of that big Alumni Association in the sky, what will we talk about when we have our class reunions? What are the events and people who will most clearly stand out in our minds as we reminisce about 1964-65? What are the things that you remember best about this past school year?

This was the year that W. Clement Stone came to Maryville. Author of a number of books, very wealthy businessman, lay leader in the Church, professional cheerleader, Mr. Stone came to Maryville with more books than the Gideon Society has Bibles.

In its search for unique speakers, Maryville College found a winner, as Founder's Day was turned into a pep rally for W. Clement Stone. Phrases such as "P. M. A." and "TERRIFIC!" were added to the M. C. vocabulary and students grabbed up over 1500 free books. (Bet he thinks twice before offering free books to college kids again.)

It was hard to tell what school of theology Mr. Stone belonged to but somehow P.M.A. doesn't fit in with more old-fashioned ideas of humility and a Christ-centered life.

This was also the year that Dr. Eugene Carson Blake, head of the Presbyterian Church and "a known Communist," came to Maryville. As everyone knows, Dr. Blake is a "race agitator," "supports the Supreme Court's ban on Bible reading and prayer," and has called for "the diplomatic recognition of Red China" among other sins. Furthermore, he must be against motherhood and is a known kicker of dogs.

Naturally, since the integrity of the college was at stake for inviting him here, the Noble Knights of the Bedsheet — the good old KKK, where everyone is equal except those who get to wear red robes because they're more equal — visited the campus to warn us about this unsavory person. College officials were said to be afraid that students might get out of hand and start something with the Klansmen, but students were laughing too hard at the ridiculous spectacle.

February Meetings this year were a bit out of the ordinary as the Maryville Scots brought a real Scotsman to the campus. Dr. George Docherty, who has the unfortunate distinction of being the man who succeeded Peter Marshall in Washington, brought his brogue and wit to the yearly religious emphasis week.

An informal, captivating speaker, Dr. Docherty ruined the week for a number of students who had planned to take their chapel cuts that week, for they found that he was not only an entertaining person, but that he had something important and relevant to say.

Unfortunately, he felt compelled to take a few pot shots at the Salt Cellar, M.C.'s coffeehouse-type meeting place, and you just don't do that around here. We were also quite impressed when, a week or so following his visit here, Dr. Docherty was quoted in the wire services and in Time magazine and pictured in Life as he participated in the protests in Selma, Alabama.

'64-'65 was also the year that a new honorary society was formed at Maryville. Open to all who helped desecrate the library last year, Kappa Mu Alpha symbolized the absurdity of the three demerits meted out to all who checked out five Bible books in one day. (We'll never know if the rumor is true that the KMA Homecoming Float actually did win a prize but that the Administration vetoed it.)

And a discussion of the past school year wouldn't be complete without mentioning the student body officers. This year's president was Mike Moyers, whose unprecedented victory as a write-in candidate came hard on the heels of his conviction as an automobile owner. Mike will probably be best remembered in years to come for his stirring chapel talks that thrilled and moved both people who could hear him.

This year's vice-president was Jon Hinderer, noted for his natty attire and an unlimited charge account at Proffitt's Department Store. Martha Cook served as secretary and was particularly noted for the grace and ease with which she handled herself—except on the Chapel steps.

There are so many more things that happened this year that it would take another year to recall them all. This was the year the U.C.C.F. made its debut, something called the Salt Cellar appeared as an experiment in communication, our athletic teams consistently beat much larger opponents, President Copeland visited the campus occasionally, surfing and skateboards hit the campus, and James Bond was elected Man of the Year.

We had fun, worked hard, worried, laughed, completed Independent Study, and were saddened to lose several friends of the college. This is a time of excitement and relief for most seniors but, although most of us won't admit it, we will kind of miss this place next year.

We'll Remember You

by Sandy Chittick

The products of Maryville College's 1961-65 Four Year Plan will be placed upon the market on June 9.

Many seniors will finally get the chance to jump into the driver's seat — and steer the minds of their own pupils on the road to knowledge. Making a quick transition from chief disrupter to disciplinarian are Fran Black and Karen Summerlin who will teach in New Jersey, Judy Butler, in Georgia, and Janet Courly, in New York. Dwight Campbell, Marcia Hickey, and Anne Smith will be on the road classes await. Also teaching are to Martinsville, Virginia where Pat Dobbin in Florida, Ruth Gibson in Cincinnati, Julia Hoch and John Rogers in the Maryville area, and Gail Wilkes. Kip Martin and H. H. Lingenfelter will be coaching and teaching.

"Those wedding bells are breaking up that old gang of mine." Some hopeful little boys are going to be disappointed to find out teacher is married. Such heartbreakers include Nancy Buckwalter who will be in New Jersey after a honeymoon in a boy's camp, Kathy Burgess in Georgia, Ruth Carter in New York, Frosty Kent in Kentucky, Tena Criner, Carol Sue McNabb, and Nancy White. Starry-eyed Slagle will also be teaching.

Trading in dorm keys for house keys are whistling Harold Cones and Linda Schug who will spend the summer in a farmhouse before he starts at Virginia Institute of Marine Science, while Linda teaches. Dave King and Patsy Murphy will be in Pittsburgh, he in seminary, she in the classroom. Dave Conklin will work for the government in public health in Washington, D. C. where Carole Webster has a teaching job.

Oak Ridge will be headquarters for Frank Jablonski and Teddy Gillespie as Frank attends U-T law school and Teddy grades papers. Mike Gregory will teach as Mary Lee Dolvin works under an assistantship. Jan Rickards will be married and doing social work. Norm Cleesattel will attend the U. of Buffalo law school after a summer wedding to Sally Blair. Jon Gresham will start married life as he does work at U-T. The Wasson-Mitchell marriage may be delayed; he will be at U-T with a Nat'l Science Foundation grant, she in U. of Chicago with a grant.

A move to U-T by many Maryville seniors has been encouraged by assistantships. held by Norma Fisher, Sara Fulton, J. W. Nicols, Buck Petty, John Riddle, and Jerry Stewart.

Other U-T grad students, who will also be coaching Arthur for the big Washington race next year, include Bob Paul, Joe Scheideler, Annette Sensenig and Dan Rineer.

Good ol'Ernie Hiler and aspiring archaeologist Hudler will also be making their way through U-T.

Connie Behrens and Lorraine Briggs will be at Tulane grad school. Library school at U. of Illinois is for Alice Brownlee. Woodrow Wilson winner Huff will be at Chapel Hill. After a summer at the Sorbonne, Ann Jordan will study linguistics at Indiana U.

If he survives the summer as a cop in Ocean City, Bruce Hughes and Chaki will join the freedom marchers at Old Miss where Chaki has an assistantship. The other chemical wonder, Phil Rittersbacker, with an assistantship, will be at Appalachian State Teachers College.

After four years Mike Moyers has decided to turn pro in argument as he goes to Vanderbilt law school. Sweet Georgia-Martha Cook will also be at Vanderbilt grad school. Ralph Tucker claims he is going to settle down in grad school.

Jon Hinderer hopes to get his mind off Maryville enough to study medicine at the U. of Pennsylvania.

Pee Wee is moving into conservation study at the U. of Wisconsin.

Maryville has a promising batch of theologians this year. Cool Kerns insists that after a summer of factory working, semi-pro baseball, a farm job, preaching, dating M. Hanson, and teaching Sunday School, he is going to end up at Louisville Seminary. Completing the M. C. crew at Louisville are Gorman Parrish and Ken McHarg and Polly Ballentine, who will be working there. Packing their Bibles for McCormick are Jan Melville, Judy Martin and John Minear. Cheryl Robbins and Penny Edlemeyer (Denny Edelman) will be at Princeton; Don Elly at San Francisco, and Rich Boyd at Union Seminary. Stationed 3½ hours from the New Dorm will be Dave Scotchmer while he works at G. M and attends Columbia Seminary in Atlanta.

La belle Margaret Hanson has a medical research job at Northwestern U. Hal Laster hated to leave M. C. so much he requisitioned Dave Styles' job.

OCS calls Ross Kerr and Lloyd Bogart; the Navy is the place for Paul Hicks.

Public-minded seniors include Ann Doscher who will be a recreation director in Los Angeles, John Livingston and Charlene Cooper doing Y work, Harry Repsher working in a communicable disease center and Jack Spencer working in public health.

Vicki Green is dedicated to library work. Lin Vansant and Barb Pettigrew dream about jobs in Washington, D. C. and Cele Bridges wants to do technical writing for a big corporation. Imogene Atkins has a great job in Atlanta.

Fred Kolb hopes to work for a Canadian hockey club; Benny Monroe is going into pro-Canadian football. Bonnie Fraser is being shipped off to Liberia to teach language. Carolyn Foust will make use of her Southern hospitality as an American Airlines stewardess. Wyatt Parker is going to teach in Brazil.

Ken Young has his sights set on Switzerland; Phil Jerome's mom is trying to get him packed off to Europe. Dave Clinkman may just become a happy wanderer.

Mary Gay Boettcher will be a circut Bible teacher.

Jerry Bell is going in for the big time as a golf caddy; Jane Best hopes to become U. S. ping pong champ. John Gardepe has a job selling saddle shoes. Carol Montgomery and Virginia Salmond will be scouting the Nassau beaches. Waldo Miller is entering movie directing and Connie Williams will act. The Big Red will take over management of the Hugh Hefner clubs.

Old B. T. Bigart, after trying for four years, has been accepted

MC directors approve study

The Maryville College Board of Directors, in the meeting held May 6-7, authorized a review and study of every significant phase of the College's purpose and objectives, curriculum, methods of operation, and budgets, naming a committee of seven members to make the study.

Other business included the adoption of the budget for 1965-66 of $1,500,000 for maintenance and operation. The Board heard plans for new buildings on the Maryville campus, including a science building and three dormitories. The plans for the dormitories are complete, only the method of financing to be decided. The science building, for which funds are committed from the recent development campaign, is nearly ready to be put into the hands of an architect. The Board adopted memorial minutes in honor of the late Dr. Lea Callaway, Maryville physician, who was a graduate of Maryville College and a Director.

Routine business was the awarding of degrees in course to 138 members of the graduating class and of 50-year certificates to members of the Class of 1915, who will be honored at a dinner on June 5.

NO SUMMIT IN SIGHT (YET)

by Rich Boyd

We have been asked to write an article in which we discuss the plans and goals set for this year's UCCF. In addition we are to mention plans and ideas for next year.

The success or impotence of this year's UCCF will not be fully realized for a year or so, but we can examine briefly what our aims have been, their measure of success, and areas of weakness. With these in mind, then we can move on to plans for next year.

Begrudgingly, some students are beginning to realize that the total purpose of a voluntary student Christian organization is closely wrapped up in the task of the college, that is, the academic pursuit. If this is not so, then the organization is not a student Christian organization. This has been our aim this past year — to come together as a fellowship of Christians who are aware of and involved in the academic task in relation to the world-wide community. Thus, a two-fold aim: academics and world-wide community.

This is quite a different approach from the "Christian-clubs" (in purpose) the old Y's were in their last years here.

Our approach at these two aims came through three main areas of emphasis: academics, service, and social — served by five commissions, Programs, Community Service, Social, Campus Life, and Salt Cellar. There has been a measure of good success — Barnwarming, Christmas Readings, many programs, etc., — but we should rather talk about the results of our total aim.

In our emphasis on academics, while we found many students who were interested in the programs (including those on Sunday nights, discussion groups in the week, extracurricular classes, and those in the Salt Cellar), it has been most certainly demonstrated that student interest has been largely that of spectator ship. This is a term denoting a looking in on a subject rather than actually being a student of that subject even in the smallest way. Because this showed up in all of our various programs, etc., including most responses to the Feedback, we feel that we are justified in coming to the conclusion that the majority of the students here are only passively interested in their education. Our students are here for many reasons, but the academic pursuit as the main motivation is limited to only a minority. This is why so much wasted time and effort goes into frivolous arguments over student rights and freedom — both here and on the national scene. The best alternative would be students who seek a college career and social privileges which go hand in hand with the task of education.

Our emphasis in service has shown us that many students really are interested in service to the campus and to the community AT FIRST — but the interest wanes after the first months. Because this pattern has continually shown up over the years no matter what new ideas have been injected into the plans, we conclude that a great many students are interested in service only because it brings them to a razor's edge in life momentarily, but as the job becomes routine and they don't use whatever creative ability they might have, interest slows and they quit work. Why? We feel it is because they are working at serving with no real underlying basis as a motivation — they are simply seeking ego-pleasing activity. The alternative of this would be students who wish to spread the responsibility of the academic task to both the rest of the campus and to the community. They do this because they are called to be students — this is their Christian vocation at the time.

In the social emphasis much was done this year. People are active socially whether or not they are real students, and we feel the social commission has done well in keeping this in mind as it recognizes and supports the fact that we are all here and that there must be no barriers between those who are students and those who are not.

So much for this year — what can be learned from it? We feel that if the UCCF is to truly be a fellowship of the campus it must recognize the points mentioned above. It must live with the fact that the majority are not primarily motivated by educational interests and that many actively serve the campus, etc., without any real basis for their motivation and consequently lose interest.

Several other things need to be recognized by students who are involved in the academic community — and these needs must be known in order for next year's UCCF to operate effectively:

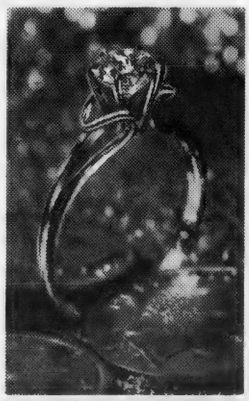
—students must realize that the administration and the faculty are seriously interested in bettering this place academically;

—students must realize that the administration and faculty will listen to students who are involved in the academic task and that there is not cogent need for rebellion (try student-faculty senate for a start);

—students and administrators and faculty must realize that there is no difference in their academic tasks — they are all involved in educating, and lines of rank which stifle communication are artificial and should be done away with (there is no difference between a student and an administrator except in responibility — not in task);

—the basis for motivation in this community should be a response of faith to God as a student, administrator, or a faculty member if this is to be a Christian community. Without this there can be no united campus Christian fellowship.

Keeping all that has been said in mind, next year's UCCF has done away with the commission set-up as such — because of their confining nature. In their stead, four main emphases have been designated as the means by which the UCCF will seek to involve the campus into a fellowship of those committed in faith to academics and to the world-wide community. These are Academics, Worship, Service, and Social. It is hoped that through these emphases, the campus might come closer to being a genuine educational institution with genuine students — all as a response in faithfulness to Jesus Christ.



The work of this year, its insights, and the changes for next year seems to point to a furtherance of our goals. Next year's key term needs to be experimentation.

Baseball Team Wins Once; Five Seniors End Careers

Striving to bring their season's record to a respectable nine wins and ten losses, the Maryville College baseball team faltered last week and dropped three of its final four games. The setbacks lowered the Scots' season's record to six and thirteen.

Tht major flaw in the Highlanders' plans was Bryan pitcher Ralph Heath. Twice the left-handed hurler defeated the Maryville hitters, winning 12-3 at his home school and 4-0 when he headed the Bryan contingent to the Maryville campus. The other loss was inflicted by Cumberland, which outlasted the Scots 9-8, after falling prey to the Highlanders in the first half of a double header.

Bryan Scores Twelve

The first game at Bryan served as batting practice for the Bryan hitters, as they collected 16 hits and 12 runs off three Maryville hurlers. The onslaught started in the first innning when Scot starter Randy Smith was victimized by three runs and three hits. Bryan, after being shut out in the second and third, got three more in the fourth, and then continued to pull away from Maryville, scoring twice in each of the fifth, sixth, and seventh innings.

Meanwhile, Bryan hurler Ralph Heath was holding the Scots to three runs. The initial Maryville tally came in the first inning, when Benny Monroe scored on Tom Bowers single. The Scots scored two more is the eighth. Benny Monroe singled and Sonny Hughes blasted a home run.

Maryville was led in hitting by Monroe, who collected two hits in three trips to the plate, and Sonny Hughes, who also hit safely twice.

Cumberland Falls to Llewellyn

The Scots' next competition was against Cumberland College, meeting the Kentucky school in a double header. The first game saw the Scots notch their sixth victory, as Jack Llewellyn went the distance, limiting the opposition to a total of three runs. Only in the sixth, when Cumberland scored twice did the Maryville hurler experience any trouble.

The two Cumberland runs in the sixth gave them a three to two lead. Maryville batters were quick to respond to the challenge, however, and scored four times in their half of the sixth to salvage the victory for Llewellyn. Tom Bowers touched off the rally by doubling to open the frame. Sonny Webb drew a base on balls, and Jack Llewellyn stroked a single to being in both runners. Senior infielder Kip Martin tripled to continue the barrage. The final Maryville counter came when Martin was forced in from third when the Cumberland hurler issued three consecutive walks.

Cumberland Gains Revenge

In the second half of the double header Cumberland gained revenge by edging the Highlanders nine to eight. Joe Scheideler opened the game in top style by hitting a long home run. Maryville continued to demonstrate lusty hitting by picking up two more runs in the second, when Don Payne, Kip Martin, and Scheideler all stroked singles.

Cumberland hitters were at the same time, however, also collecting runs. After scoring two in the first, they earned four more in the third on two walks and three hits, one of them a two-on homer. Maryville continued to battle back, and three runs in the fourth tied the score at six each. Strangely enough, these three runs were the result of a combination of errors, bases-on-balls, and wild pitches by Cumberland, as only pitcher Bob Nicholas collected a hit for the Highlanders.

Decision Comes Late

The game was decided in the final two innings. Cumberland scored once in the eighth and twice in the ninth to open up a three-run margin. The Scots managed to get two of them back in the ninth, when shortstop Don Payne singled in Sonny Webb and Buck Petty. The rally fell short, however, the the Maryville squad were forced to settle with a split of the twinbill.

Heath Shuts Out Scots

The final game of the season was played against Bryan College. As in the first game with Bryan, the Maryville hitters experienced difficulty in hitting the offerings of Ralph Heath. Although they collected seven hits, the Scots were unable to score off the hard throwing Bryan hurler.

Losing pitcher was senior Benny Monroe. Although he matched Heath's total of hits allowed, Monroe was victimized by a three-run outburst in the third inning, which clinched the victory. Don Payne led the Maryville hitters with two hits in three trips to the plate.

Five Seniors Lost

Graduation losses will be heavy on Coach Boydson Baird's forces. Kip Martin, Benny Monroe, Tom Bowers, Joe Scheideler, and Buck Petty were all performing in their last year for the Maryville squad. There are several reasons, however, why Coach Baird can look forward to upcoming campaigns. In Don Payne and John Agnew, Baird has two fine freshman prospects. Catcher Sonny Hughes and center fielder Sonny Webb will both return for action. Most important is the surplus of talented young pitchers. With Randy Smith, Jack Llewellyn, and Bob Nicholas due back, Baird can expect to have a strong trio of starters. With knuckleballer Dan Rothy and John Agnew in the bull pen, the Scots will be able to call on strong relief men if the starters get in trouble.

There is nothing in this world constant, but inconstancy.

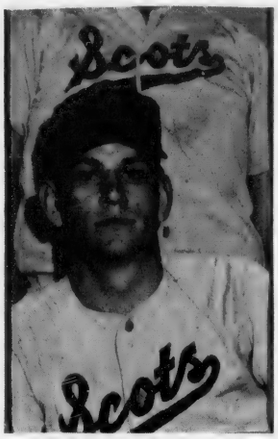
Twenty M.C. Athletes Slated for Graduation

Graduation is a time for looking back as well as for looking forward. Despite repeated messages that eyes should be kept on the future, the approach of commencement exercises would be incomplete if seniors were not allowed to review their four years of college life and forbidden sentiment and nostalgia.

It is not strange that many memories of Maryville College will be related to the area of sports. Remembrances of highly successful football teams and pleasurable afternoons watching the tennis team stroke its way to frequent victories will not be infrequent for Maryville graduates. Among the names listed for graduation this spring, twenty of the men have distinguished themselves on the athletic fields. It is hoped that this article will in part afford a final tribute to their abilities.



Track Loses Bell, Livingston

Only two seniors will be lost to the track team this year, Jerry Bell and John Livingston. After transferring to Maryville as a junior, Bell proved to be an outstanding quartermiler. A vigorous personal training program, which starts in September, enabled him to team with Dave Alexander in giving the Scots a strong 1-2 punch in the 440. In addition, Bell performed admirably as anchor man on Maryville's mile relay team.

Jerry Bell

Livingston, whose abilities in the distance events won him the nickname of "The Machine" from his teammates, has toiled for the Scots for four years. Running both the mile and two mile runs, he developed into a consistent winner for the track team.

Benny Monroe

Six Baseballers Graduate

Baseball is an area hard hit by the graduation of the class of 1965. Although he used up his last year of eligibility in the '64 season and was unavailable for action this year, the name of Red Prudhon is often remembered in relation to his baseball ability. A fine fielder and an adept hitter, Prudhon anchored the team from his shortstop position.

Bill Napier

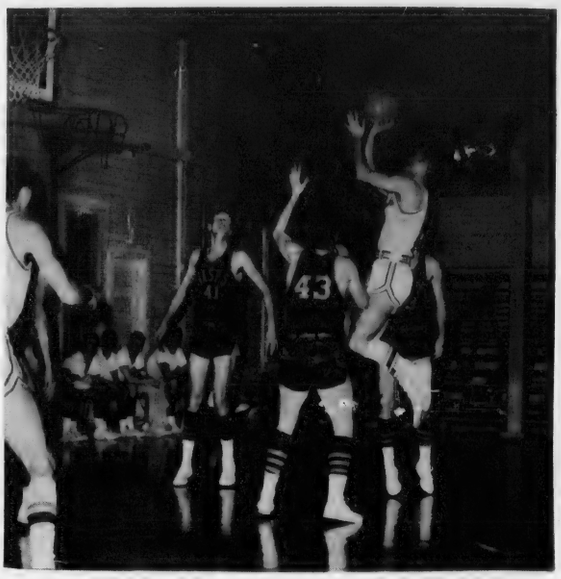
Scheideler Tops Hitters as Senior

Joe Scheideler is a four-year letterman in baseball. Switching between the outfield and the pitcher's mound for his first three seasons, Scheideler led the team in batting average, home runs, and rbi's in his senior year, when given a chance to limit his activities to left field and batting.

Tom Bowers and Buck Petty also served on the baseball squad. Bowers gave Coach Baird a dangerous long ball hitter and steady infielder, while Petty added a strong competitive spirit from his second base position. Benny Monroe and Kip Martin also performed admirably for the Scots in baseball. They distinguished themselves more thoroughly in other areas, however, and will be treated later.

Paul Captains '65 Squad

The final spring sport, tennis, had only one senior participant — Bob Paul. Paul is another four year letterman. Playing in the number four singles spot for most of his career, he captained the squad as a senior.



Martin, Moyers Leave Hardwood

Four seniors distinguished themselves on the basketball court. Kip Martin, a guard, also performed well as a football and a baseball player, but his talents on the hardwoods were most impressive. He captained the team in his junior year, and proved himself to be a good ball handler and fine leader, as well as a capable scorer.

Mike Moyers lettered for four years on the basketball team. A strong rebounder, he developed into a good scorer throughout his career. Mike Gregory and Bill Schellenger also performed for Coach Baird's cagers, although their eligibility expired before the 1964-65 season.

Davis Loses Two Grapplers

Gene Dixon and Will Mitchell are the senior representatives from the wrestling squad. Dixon, after competing at 130 pounds, moved up to the 147 pound bracket during his senior year. At this position he worked well and was elected captain for the 1964-65 season. Will Mitchell's activities in extra-athletic functions, such as debate did not prevent him from becoming a first rate 137 pound wrestler. His exciting and explosive style earned him many pins.

A three letterman, Kip Martin here scores a basket for the Scot Netters.

Monroe Wins National Honors

Maryville's greatest successes were recorded by the football team. Their hard-nosed, spirited brand of play won not only local but also national recognition for the College. Perhaps the best known name connected with Maryville College football is Benny Monroe.

After several mediocre seasons, Monroe lived up to his fullest capabilities in his senior year. Setting many Maryville College passing and offense records, the senior quarterback was selected to the Little All-American team. In addition to his individual laurels, Monroe led his team to records of 8-1 and 7-1 in his junior and senior years.

Lingnfelter Sets Record

If Monroe should have ever faltered, Coach Tomlinson had another first-rate quarterback in H. H. Linginfelter to send into action. A fine passer and field general, Linginfelter set a Maryville College record when he completed 9 to 11 passes while an injury kept Monroe on the sidelines.

Berry is Little A-A

Among the other backs performing on the grid iron, several gained recognition. Ken Berry was a Little All-American fullback in the 1963 season. More recently, Roland McClanahan and Jeff Slagle added power and speed to the Highlander backfield. McClanahan, a fast, powerful, and compact runner, was leading the team in rushing until a leg injury sidelined him halfway through the season. Jeff Slagle ran out of the fullback slot for the Scots and won All-Area laurels for his performance.

Two Co-Captains Serve in Line

Among the linemen, two co-captains will be graduating this spring. Bill Napier distinguished himself for his rugged defensive play at tackle. Weighing 225 pounds, Napier was a valuable asset in stopping enemy running games.

Wilbur Ramsey served as co-captain during the 1963 season, when the team registered an 8-1 record. Fast and aggressive, Ramsey was a strong blocker and a sure tackler. He served as end coach during the 1964 campaign.

Joe Scheid'ler Tops Hitters, Dominates Batting Statistics

Joe Scheideler, senior left fielder for the Maryville College baseball team, dominated hitting honors for the squad this year. Responding to the challenge of his final year of eligibility for the Scots, Scheideler led the team in batting average, runs batted in, and home runs. Furthermore, he tied for second in doubles.

Scheideler's .281 average easily clinched hitting honors. Benny Monroe's .256 was second, and Sonny Hughes hit .229 for third. In the home run department, Scheideler collected three. Sonny Hughes and Tom Bowers were the only other Scots to hit for four bases, each collecting one.

The eleven rbi's collected by Scheideler also paced the team. Sonny Hughes and Bowers knocked in five apiece to place second in the category. Below are the batting averages of the individual members of the squad.

	AB	H	Avg.
Joe Scheideler	57	16	.281
Benny Monroe	43	11	.256

UCCF: Muddy Feet on Clean Carpet

by Bill Erwin

September 14th — Orientation Week — new freshmen enter Maryville College. They, as thousands who have gone before them, will find that the "fresh" end of their new-found status soon disappears and heavy academic responsibilities rapidly mold them into veteran students. A college career has become a reality.

UCCF vitally concerned

Where so much responsibility is placed upon the individual's capacity to produce academically, it is quite easy to forget that a world of people still continues to sleep, eat, mourn, and laugh. The United Campus Christian Fellowship is vitally concerned that the students of Maryville College do not forget that their role as students calls them to be involved and interested in the world in which they live and in the people inhabiting their world.

Salt Cellar begun

How does UCCF attempt to meet this concern? Follow a maze down some steps into a cellar and there spread before you are tables, lights, paintings, a stage with speaker leading an informal discussion; you have discovered the Salt Cellar. Here is where one can come to hear the Christian faith challenge and be challenged by every conceiveable idea.

"Feedback" promotes dialogue

The "Feedback" is a newspaper. More than just a newspaper, however, the "Feedback" is conversation in written form providing still further opportunities for members of Maryville College to be confronted with relevant ideas.

Other opportunitits available

Salt Cellar and "Feedback" are definite areas that are now functioning under UCCF, but education, service, worship, and social life of the campus are four general areas through which UCCF works. Speakers (from a John Bircher to a "Communist"), seminars, study groups encourage students to continue their education beyond the textbook, laboratory, and classroom. If a student wishes to share some of his time with others, he can find ample opportunity through programs with the children's home, old folk's home, the mentally retarded, children who need tutoring, and in a score of other service programs. Perhaps most important of all is the need for students and faculty to pause during their busy lives to express their thanks to God for the opportunity to use their minds and simply for life itself.

UCCF? A Fellowship? Yes, a fellowship because it is composed of those who care in some way for other people; a fellowship because those involved are taking a chance on loving the people of this world.

Artist Series Announced

Maryville College is visited each year by prominent artists. The 1965-66 Artist's Series will be exceptional in the talent displayed. The season opens October 15 with Walter Carringer, lyric tenor returning to his native Blount County to perform at Maryville. On October 30, a drama, The White Rose and the Red, including a sweep of history from Shakespeare's Henry V, Henry VI, and Richard III will be presented. February 24, the Saltzburg Marionette Theatre with three-feet high puppets will give a comic opera performance of Tschaikovsky's Nutcracker Suite. April 2 Cellist Tsuyoshi Tsutsumi, former student at Suzuki Violin School will perform.

Officers Ask for Opinions

by Hugh McCampbell and Hank Seitz

As the '65-'66 year at Maryville College approaches, all of you are probably receiving welcomes from, and being introduced to every organization on campus. Behind all these clubs, activities, and organizations is the Student government, which co-ordinates and leads the majority of them.

The Student Council of '65-'66 would like to add its welcome to this list of well-wishers, with an invitation to participate in the activities and opportunities at hand. There is a tremendous amount of untapped potential already in the student body, and coupled with that of the incoming freshman class, the possibilities for next year look quite good.

As you probably realize, the coordination of the Student Body is achieved through cooperation of the Student body officers and representatives, and the students themselves.

At times, freshmen seem somewhat reluctant to voice opinions and ideas. Therefore, we the student body officers would appreciate your thoughts, so feel free to talk and ask questions wherever you are or wherever we are.

The dark box areas on the map of the Maryville campus show the tentative locations of new buildings planned for the College. The four in the vicinity of New Dorm will be women's dormitories and the three behind Thaw Hall will be for men. The new student center will stand on the site of Baldwin Hall. The soon to be constructed addition to the science hall will be located directly behind the present building.

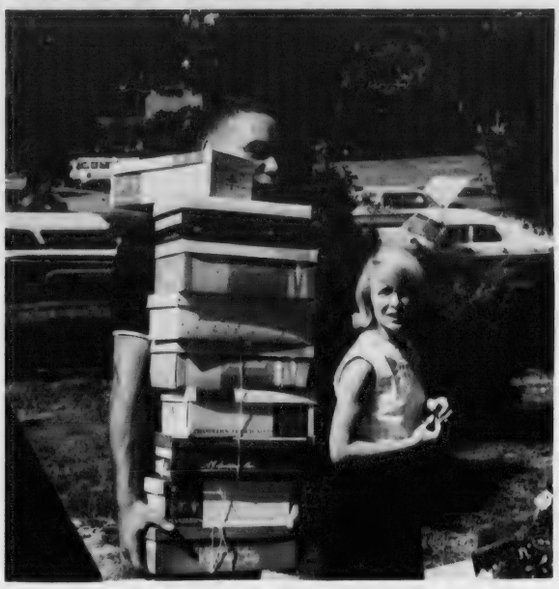
Three New Dorms Planned for Fall

With plans for eventually building seven new dormitories, Maryville College has announced the constructon of the first three. These dorms, two for women and one for men, will — hopefully — reach completion by the fall of 1966. Both of the women's units will be near New Dorm, while the men's unit will be on the ridge between the McClelland home and the football field. All dorms will be the same size (92' x 109', and housing 125 men or 112-115 women) and the same design, except that the women's will have larger parlor areas.

Unlike present dormitories, the new buildings will follow the contemporary "small group living" design. This means that each of the three living floors will be divided into four quadrants of five rooms each. Every quadrant of these three dorms will house eight freshmen in double rooms and one upperclassman counselor in a single room. Although quadrants will have individual study areas, pairs of quadrants will share lounges and toilet facilities.

In addition, the students will have access to a basement containing a kitchen, storage rooms, and a large recreation area. Offices and apartments for the housemothers will be on the ground floors. New features of the dorms include complete air-conditioning, wall-to-wall carpeting, and an intercom system between each room and the office.

President's Greeting



This special edition of THE HIGHLAND ECHO is being sent to you in order to extend a preliminary word of welcome to Maryville College. At the same time, we hope to give you a glimpse of some of the activities that have recently taken place on campus and to assist in acquainting you more fully with the College generally.

All members of our faculty and staff are looking forward to your arrival and the privilege of having you in our student body. They join me in the hope that your college experience may be stimulating and challenging both intellectually and spiritually, and altogether enjoyable socially. It will be my continuing purpose to be available for personal conferences with students insofar as my official responsibilities permit.

Please accept for now my sincere good wishes for the vacation season and my assurance of the warm welcome that awaits you on your arrival at Maryville College.

Joseph J. Copeland
President

Dorm Goverment

HERS

The Women's Student Government Association, WSGA, is an organization in which all resident women hold membership. Its purpose is to provide self-government for the women in the dormitories with the view of maintaining standards of Christian living at Maryville College. Each woman can be an actvie participant in WSGA by becoming aware of dormitory needs and demands as well as by suggesting improvements.

Every dorm has a House Council responsible for maintaining good management of the dorm in cooperation with the housemothers. The Coordinating Council, made up of ten elected members representing all the dorms, acts as the go-between of women students and the administration and reviews any disciplinary problems that are not handled by the house councils. It also sponsors the sophomore aide and senior counselor program.

WSGA is also becoming a member of the Intercollegiate Association for Women Students, a national organization that promotes an exchange of ideas between schools and, it is hoped, will prove to be an informative and helpful stimulus in women's student government at Maryville.

The common stock of intellectual enjoyment should not be difficult of access because of the economic position of him who would approach it. JANE ADDAMS

The Men's Sutdent Cooperative is the governing body of male students living in the college dormitories. It is a representative organization seeking to uphold the policies of the college and to make dormitory life beneficial to all.

During the second half of the spring semester, MSC and the Dean's office have cooperated in working out a new dormitory system for next year. Ten upperclassmen have been selected to be resident assistants, helping the supervisor of the dorm and counseling freshmen.

Freshmen having any questions concerning adjustment to college life should feel free to consult the assistants at any time.

CHILHOWEE CLUB MEMBERS TO WELCOME PARENTS

Members of Chilhowee Club and Junior Chilhowee Club will take an active part in welcoming new students and parents to the community this year. There will be a bus tour of the area Monday afternoon, September 13th, prior to the reception given for parehts.

Literature about the community will be available at the local motels, and members will be at the college to give information or assistance. The Chilhowee Clubs are two local organizations composed of women in the community of Blount County and are members of the General Federation of Women's Clubs.

Fred Hope Fund sends India Aid

Here at Maryville College, the words, "Fred Hope Fund," are part of everyone's vocabulary. Fred Hope was a Maryville student early in this century. After graduation he went to Africa, and there established a school to teach the natives useful industrial arts. Students remaining at Maryville also aided in the work by sending money to support the school. The Fund continued through the years, and after Fred Hope's death the money was sent to be used for worthwhile projects in different parts of the world. Each year Maryville's students and faculty have an opportunity to pledge any amount of money to the Fund.

The Frances Newton Hospital of Ferozeopur, India, has been one of the favorite objects of the Fred Hope Fund. The receipts of this year's Fund will go to Ferozeopur, for the development of a laboratory assistants' course at the hospital. And once again Maryville College will have taken advantage of its opportunity to express a concern for another part of the world.

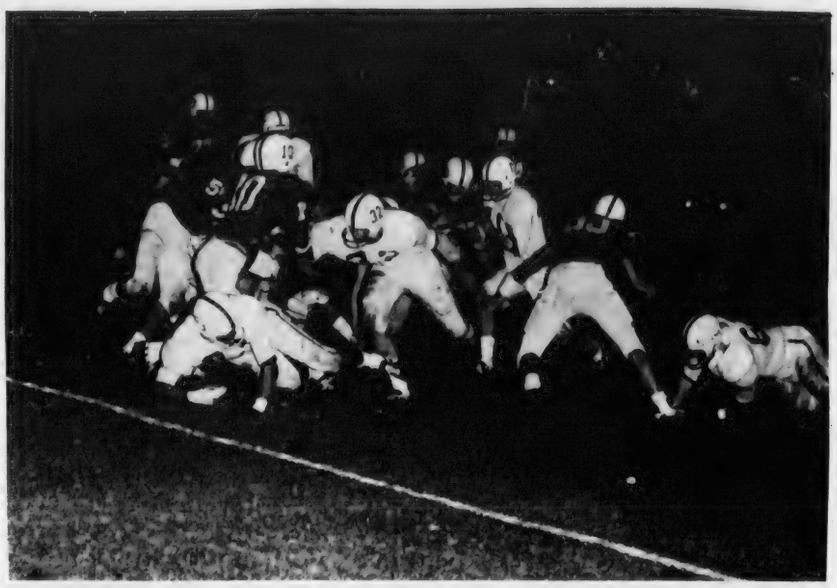
Outlook Optimistic for Scots' Success

Defense Is Key to Grid Strength

After compiling an impressive 7-1 record last season under head coach Howard Tomlinson, the Maryville Scots are looking forward to another successful gridiron campaign. Naturally the loss of Little All-American quarterback Benny Monroe will hamper the Scot's offense, but according to most observers, the defense will be as strong as ever. This is Maryville's brand of football. As Coach Tomlinson asserts, "We are basically a defensive football team."



Veterans to return

The middle defensive line will again boast such stalwarts as 230 pound co-captain Jim Pryor, 210 pound Steve Worrell, 210 pound Charles Berry, and Big Gary Dutton at 260 pounds. Linebacker is perhaps the toughest position on the team. Veterans Don Story and Ray Eaton are backed by Ken Christy, Earnie Greeno, and Shan Harris, who have seen considerable action. Finding a replacement for safetyman Mike White, lost to academic difficulties, is the most serious problem facing the Scot's defensive coaches.

Ramsey — Dalton to combine

Offensively, the Scots will be without co-captains Bill Napier and Clint Abbot in the line, fullback Jeff Slagle, tailback Roland McClanahan, and quarterbacks Monroe and H. H. Linginfelter. A shortage on experience will hamper the backs in their quest for touchdowns. A new pro-set formation to supplement the already effective slot-T will lend sparkle to the offensive attack as Herman Ramsey, a regular defensive back, assumes the quarterbacking duties. His favorite aerial target is likely to be co-captain Mike Dalton at end. Dalton, last year's leading receiver, will be counted on heavily this year. The coaches expect to have a very effective short passing game this season.

Maryville will use the old adage that the best offense is a good defense in hopefully bettering last season's record to go undefeated in Coach Tomlinson's second season as head coach of the Scotties.

Maryville halfback Roland McClanahan (40) grinds out yardage as fullback Jeff Slagle (32) and Mike Dalton (83) clear the path. McClanahan, the Scots' leading receiver in 1963, suffered a broken leg midway through last year's campaign and missed the latter part of the season.

Racqueteers Invite Freshman Aid

The best advice for freshmen tennis players hoping to make the Maryville tennis team is to play a lot of tennis. For rumors have it that next year challenge matches will be in the fall. This means you'll have all summer to sharpen your game and get in shape. For those who might not be familiar as to how a player tries out for a tennis team, it is really quite simple. Beat everyone else out for the team! A series of matches are played among the hopefuls, these are called challenge matches. According to your record you are ranked 1-2-3-4 and so forth. Once the "ladder" has been set up a player may challenge the next player up and hence improve his position on the team. This keeps everyone hustling and helps make for good team spirit.

Losing season first in years

This year the Maryville netters suffered their first losing season in four or five years with a record of five-and-six. This must be considered in lieu of the season's last two matches being cancelled much to the chagrin of the members of the team.

Freshmen talent sought

This year the team loses one man, Bob Paul, who played number four and was the team captain. This leaves one open spot to be filled by a newcomer. With four returning lettermen and one year letterman the team's prospects for next season look quite good. But coach Lauren Kardatzke looks for some good freshman talent. This year a freshman, Pete Park, played number three on the squad. The returning players will be Lynn "Hawker" Howard, Rich "Pumkin" Marshall, Pete "Grub" Park, Bill "Granny" Gass, and Alan "Princess" Childs.

Anyone who hopes to play on the Maryville tennis team should play a lot of tennis this summer, get in good shape, talk to Coach Kardatzke when you report to school in September, and "keep your eye on the ball!"

Freshmen to Boost Roundball Squad

After a very slow start, Scot basketballers began to pick up the pieces and tried to get into high gear. Around mid-season the Highlanders took third place in the "Suncoast Classic Tournament" in St. Petersburg, Florida, and were then on their way to winning six of their last ten games.

Possession game played

Playing against opposition which almost always had a height advantage, the Maryville Scots sought to play a slowed-dwon, possession-type game, which proved to be very effective. Although often beaten, the Scots were never out-hustled, which is highly indiciative of Highlander athletic tradition.

McGowan to be captain

Maryville was led by captain Mike Moyers, who was the leading rebounder. Leading scorer Denny McGowan, who was also the best defensive player on the squad, has been elected captain

Grapplers Set for Coming Year

by R. A. Johnson and S. Wintermute

After a very interesting and rewarding 1964-65 season, the Maryville wrestling squad is looking with eagerness to next year. The Scots promise to place in competion that will certainly rate as one of the best teams in the history of the school.

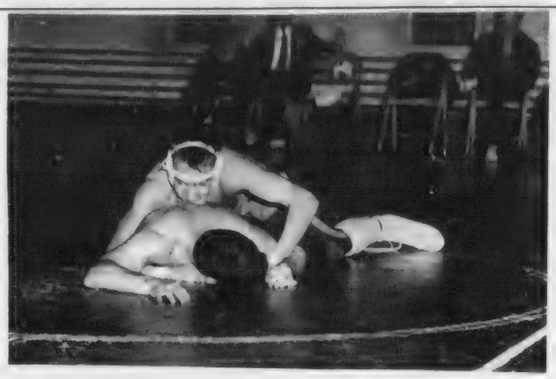
MC meets well-known teams

Wrestling has had a long and illustrious history at Maryville College. Over the past years, its teams have consistently won their share of honors against larger and nationally known schools all over the South. Last season was no exception. During the year, the Scots squared off with such schools as Auburn University, Georgia Tech., The University of Georgia, The University of Chattanooga, Eastern Kentucky State, as well as Appalachian State, one of the nation's top N.A.I.A. teams. In every meet the men performed well and won enough to make the season successful.

Scots show well at SEC

The talented Scots showed their best wrestling of the year at the South Eastern Conference tournament, which was held on the Maryville campus. In the battle for the league championship, the matmen came up with Don Shields taking a fourth place at 157, John Henderson a third at 115, Ron Pritts a third at 137, and Ralph Johnson a first place at 130.

Freshmen included



The outlook for next year is very bright and the expectations high. This year's squad had freshmen at 115, 123, 130, 137 and 167. Second semester turned up good 130 and 147 pounders to add punch to the team. Freshmen were also sprinkled liberally among the reserves and proved themselves outstanding by the number of exhibition matches the Scots won.

Heavy-weights lacking

The heavier weights are a problem, although many things can happen during the summer to change the picture in any class, and head coach J. A. Davis is counting on next year's freshmen to help solve the situation. As every wrestler knows, no position can be called secure on any team, and, as evidenced by this year's showing, new men have a very good chance to make a place on the squad. At the beginning of the season all weights are open and the best man gets the job.

To all those who are interested in wrestling on a college level against some of the finest teams in the country, Coach Davis extends an enthusiastic invitation. He can promise you good wrestling with top men on a fine team.

Back the Scots

Lockerroom Lingo

by Ralph McCampbell

Freshmen, do not despair. If you are athletically inclined, Maryville College has plenty of room for you. Last year freshmen athletes contributed highly to the football, basketball, wrestling, track, and tennis teams. In football, Earnie Greeno and Shan Harris were vital cogs in the defensive machine. Danny Rogers and Billy Sunday carried the mail from the backfield for many a yard for the Scots. Danny also won the Amos Alonzo Stagg award for his performance against rival Carson-Newman. Guards John Forgety and Carl Gehman were used extensively on both offense and defense.

Basketball found freshmen Gerald Hodges and Don Payne in the thick of things. The wrestling team depended on John Henderson, Ralph Johnson, and Carl Gehman for points. Ralph won the SEC 130-lb. class crown and John placed third in the 115 pounders.

The track team sparkled with freshmen. Probably the brightest were Dick Craig and Bob Leach. Dick turned in some remarkable times in the 100 and 220 yard dashes and rarely took second. Bob could be counted on to come through in the low and intermediate hurdles. Tennis saw Pete Park the number four man on the squad. Freshmen hurdlers Bob Nicholas and Randy Smith combined to give the baseball nine a pair of tough right handers. The regular shortstop was Don Payne, and Big John Agnew held down first base to complete the freshman starters.

Even if you don't have varsity sports in mind, play intramurals. There are men's teams in football, basketball, wrestling, and softball. The women can participate in basketball, softball, fencing and tennis. The games for the coveted "Stinkin' Shoe" trophy between the societies Alpha Sigma and Kappa Phi draw no less attention than the World Series. With these opportunities, no one, especially freshmen, with an athletic appetite should go hungry.

FIGHT SONG

On, Highlanders, down the field
Rolling up a high score!
Tear into the end zone,
Smash on through that line,
Highlanders!

Send a rousing cheer on high,
And our boys will shine,
Come on and fight, fight, fight!
Come on and fight, fight, fight!
For dear old Maryville!

Education . . . has produced a vast population able to read but unable to distinguish what is worth reading. G. M. TREVELYAN

Upswing Seen for Batsmen

After losing seven of their first eight games, Scot baseballers came alive and managed to finish the season with a 7-13 record. Plagued by weak hitting and mental errors, the Scots looked somewhat less than fantastic during the first half of the season. At that time, the leading hitter on the squad of seventeen sported a .267 average. Pitching was excellent, but Maryville just couldn't manage to score. But at mid-season the team jelled and began to win, besting North Georgia, Milligan, L. M. U., Emory and Henry, and Cumberland. Perhaps the most rewarding game of the year was the narrow loss to powerful arch-rival Carson Newman. Although losing 5-3, the Highlanders played excellent baseball, and this reporter feels that this game proved to be the turning point of the season.

Freshmen contribute

Perhaps the most pleasant surprise was the unexpected help given by freshmen. Randy Smith pitched well throughout the season but could only salvage two victories. His ability is best exemplified by his fourteen inning stint against L.M.U. which Maryville lost 5-4. Both John Agnew at first base and Don Payne at shortstop hit well during the latter half of the season and turned in some fine defensive plays. Rob Nicholas was outstanding on the mound and compiled a 3-0 won-lost record. Although they didn't letter, freshmen Ralph McCampbell, Dan Rothe, Gerald Hodges, and Jim Fort played a good deal and were responsible for a large amount of the Scots' success.

Nucleus returning

According to Coach Boydson Baird, "Improvement is the key word for next year." Returning lettermen include catchers Sonny Hughes and Frank Gready, center-fielder Sonny Webb, pitchers Jack Lewellen and Randy Smith, and infielders John Agnew and Don Payne. "We have the nucleus returning," said Baird, "and if we can get any help from incoming freshmen, we should have a much better team next year."

Ode To An Institution

by Dave Powell

In America the humble college dormitory stands as a living monument to the ravages of baser intellectualism. Time and countless epigrams are etched in its ageless scum-green wall. Scars of hard-fought battles streak its homely facade. Deep in its heart outmoded washing machines rumble on into the night. Aimless feet track the mud of earthy adventures through its ever-open doors. Ceaseless oaths echo down refuse-strewn halls, and the pitiful few who seek knowledge must escape to a barren study room — a room tantalizingly close to sticky Coke machines and guitar strumming goof-offs. Show me the soul who can resist that temptation.

The college dormitory is a loosely tied bundle of cyclic cliches—water balloons, Chinese fire drills, firecrackers, weekly search for the sacrificial victim to appease the gods of the fishpond, apple and orange flings, toilet paper decorations, furniture removals, door removals, banshee scream imitations, hall light globe fallings and crashings, house mother hatings, bridge tournaments, ping-pong tournaments, dog chasing tournaments, crowding the mailbox stuffer, proctor evasions and bike borrowings.

From the rooftop sunbather to the solitary stoop sitter, the lifeblood of the dorm is people — residing people, visiting people, tired people, loud people, machine filling people, newspaper delivering people, couple people, single people, sneakered people, shirtless people, greasy people, watchman people — all shapes, sizes, races and denominators and no two alike though some alone.

Cold in winter, hot in summer, noisy always, never complaining, unbigoted, staunch and proud it stands. Home to the homeless, hideout of wandering minstrels, defender against the elements, keeper of secrets and friendships, heritage for generations of roaches, please no smoking in your room, and guardian of fermenting knowledge — quietly serves the dorm.

And quietly the inmates accept growth, change, fate, failure, loneliness, mononucleosis and cold showers. Gradually an older and wiser, if not more confused, individual comes to realize that his dorm has been but one more home on the journey, and in nesting there he has learned to love it, and leave it after four years with a stronger constitution and no regrets.

Immortal dorms we love you.

Debating offers stimulation

Maryville College offers in one unified program excitement, challenge, and fun. No, this is not W. S. G. A. . . . We are speaking of the Maryville College debate team which travels around the country debating such interesting topics as Resolved: That the non-Communist countries of the world should form an economic community. The debaters return from tournaments babbling about win-loss records, new friends, capricious escapades, and new cases.

"Statistics show that" students learn how to study more effectively because they learn to condense important material and to draw parallels between facts.

We are looking forward to an exciting season next year and we hope that freshmen and upperclassmen will register for debate this fall. No previous experience is necessary — experience will follow once you join.

Debating is an academic sport, an exercise in mental gymnastics. If you are interested, or feel that you might like to be persuaded, get in contact with any of the debaters or Dr. Walker, our coach, this fall for more information.

The Blue Shades is the name of Alpha Sigma's rock-and-roll band. This band provides the sounds for many of the informal dances at Maryville during the year. The members do this entertaining "just for the fun of it."

This coming year, all of the instrumentalists in the Shades will be returning and will have some new electrical equipment. They are hoping to find a freshman who has an electric bass to finish out the group. With the addition of the new equipment and an electric bass, the Blue Shades say they will be able to play just about anything from England to California.

February Meetings continue long College tradition

Each year the college sponsors a series of meetings which are set aside as a time designated for reflections upon what the church is saying to us, as a college community today. This series is known as the February Meetings and it usually takes place during the last week of February.

Leaders for this series are selected from outstanding laymen and ministers of the Christian Church. These leaders serve as sources of inspiration both as speakers and as counselors as they make themselves personally available to us.

When February meetings roll around next year, remember to keep yourself alert — experience shows that anything can happen!

PLAYHOUSE PRESENTS

The Playhouse of Maryville College, under the direction of Thomas E. Jones, is an active organization. Of primary concern is its basis of educational theatre, by which participants learn through experience. Any student is eligible to audition for roles or to work in the many aspects of crew. Forming the core of the Playhouse is Theta Alpha Phi, the honorary theatre society.

A variety of plays are selected each year. The 1964-65 season included "J. B.," "Harvey," "A Night of One-Acts," "The Cretan Woman," and "The Fantasticks." This year an experimental summer theatre is scheduled, involving the plays "A Thousand Clowns," "The Devil's Disciple," "Dark of the Moon," and "Visit to a Small Planet." Slated for 1965-66 are "110 in the Shade," "A Man of All Seasons," a triple bill (not yet chosen), "Ladies in Retirement," and "Androcles and the Lion."

Chosen by UPUSA

After an August to October orientation program at the University of Geneva, Switzerland, Miss Bates will study at Neuchatel University, Neuchatel. Neuchatel, a university with only 400 students, offers foreign students the Seminary of Modern French, in which Miss Bates will participate while she is taking courses in the language, literature, and history of France.

Miss Bates was chosen to participate in JYA by the Commission on Ecumenical Missions and Relations of the United Presbyterian Church. She must pay her own way and will live either in a private home or in a dormitory.

Miss Bates is a French major, and she plans to return to Maryville College for her senior year and later to teach French or to work with foreign people in government or church work.

Program of Millersville College

Miss Huffines will study in Germany. She will leave aboard the S. S. Aurelia on August 19 for Phillips-Universitat, Marburg, Germany. She will have two months of intensive orientation before the winter semester begins.

Phillips-Universitat was founded in 1527 by Phillip the Magnanimous, Count of Hesse, as the first secular college in Europe. There are 10,000 students there, where JYA students are offered specially oriented courses, leaving approximately one-third of winter courses and all summer courses to regular curriculum. A series of guided tours, field trips to neighboring cities, and allowances for personal needs are included in the program.

A German major, Miss Huffines will be studying German under the cooperative students-abroad program of Millersville State College, Pennsylvania. After completing graduation requirements here at Maryville, she plans to attend graduate school and eventually to teach in college.

Hunter on Record

June 20, 1965, will be the 75th anniversary of the birth of Dr. Edwin R. Hunter. His recently released record, This Man's Art, epitomizes in voice and in thought a portion of these 75 years. Included on the album are "Three Sonnets for E. A. R.," "A Man from Stratford Entertains Ben Jonson," The Ballad of Jessie and the Cow," "Variations on a Theme by Longfellow: The Village Blacksmith," "Haikus, and the Christmas poems, all read by Dr. Hunter with the expression and surety of inflection which only the poet can put into his poems. Copies of this long—playing album in original jacket designed by William Swenson are available at $5 each from the Development Office.

1965-1966 Lecture Series to present four noted speakers

The 1965-1966 Lecture Series will bring four lecturers to the campus during the academic year in order to bring the campus community more into the flow of events and the development of learning in the nation and in the world. In the effort to achieve this in previous years such figures as Harrison Salisbury, John Mason Brown, Gov. Luther Youngdahl, William L. Shirer, Richard Armour, Carl Sandburg, Margaret Webster, Frank P. Graham, Sir Bernard Lovell and many others have been brought to the campus.

Drury to be first lecturer

On Friday evening, October 8, Allen Drury, noted Washington correspondent and author of the best-seller Advise and Consent as well as A Shade of Difference and Senate Journal, will deliver the first lecture entitled "Challenge to America: The View from Washington, D. C."

Hungarian to discuss Europe

The second lecture will be by Ferenc Nagy, Prime Minister of Hungary in 1946-1947 and President of the Hungarian Parliament in 1945. A prisoner of the Gestapo during World War II, he has been living in exile in the United States since 1947. Frequent trips to Europe and Asia since that time have kept him abreast of world developments. His topic will be "Central and Eastern Europe Today."

Alumnus returns as lecturer

The third lecture is tentatively scheduled for Friday, February 4, by Dr. John R. Stockton, Professor of Business Statistics and Director of the Bureau of Business Research at the University of Texas in Austin. Dr. Stockton holds both a bachelor's degree and an honorary doctorate from Maryville College. A consultant to both state and federal governments, he is the author of two textbooks in the field of business statistics. His lecture carries out the tradition of having one alumni or faculty lecturer each year. His topic will be announced at a later date.

Government sends speaker

The final lecture will be in the spring by a speaker from The Atlantic Council of the United States, whose honorary chairmen are former Presidents Truman and Eisenhower. Its speakers' bureau includes Henry Cabot Lodge, General Gruenther, Elmo Roper and several other persons active in the diplomatic service in the North Atlantic area.

Scholarship Requirements Are Assigned

Beginning with the fall semester 1965-1966, there will be a grade eligibility requirement for the scholarships offered to students who are children of ministers, missionaries, Maryville College faculty and staff, and also children of teachers of the Blount County area. The scholarship will be available to all such students for both semesters of the freshman year regardless of grade average, but will continue to be available only so long as the student maintains a cumulative average of at least 2.0 (C).

In like manner, any student wishing to take advantage of the Maryville College Rotating Loan system will be required to have a cumulative average of 1.75. A student having less than a 1.75 cumulative average at the end of a semester may not be granted a loan for the following semester without special action by the Faculty Committee on Student Committee on Student Help. Rotating Loan applications must be in by September 1. Only 50 percent of these loans will be given to freshmen.

Scottie Thinclads Strongest Ever

"This was the strongest team I've had in my five years here at Maryville." That is the way Coach Howard Tomlinson described the Scot tracksters, who posted a 3-3 record this spring. After losing to Emory University 80-67 in their first dual meet, the Highlanders went on to defeat arch-rival Carson-Newman 76-60, Milligan 72½—62½, and Bryan College 114-22 in the last meet of the year.

Several men undefeated

Maryville was exceptionally strong in running events and, by the same token, exceptionally weak in the field events. The 440 relay team (Dick Craig, Jack Smoot, Mike Dalton, and Bob Leach) was undefeated, while the mile relay team (Dave Alexander, Rich Reed, Jerry Bell, and Dick Craig) was defeated only once. Freshman hurdle Bob Leach was undefeated, as was javelin thrower Greg Hallen.

Alexander best all-around

Leading scorer on the team was Dave Alexander with 59 points. Alexander was nothing short of tremendous this season as he competed in the broad jump, low hurdles, 100 and 220 yard dashes, 440 yard run, high jump, and mile relay team and caused some to speculate that he is the best all-around trackman that Maryville has seen in recent years.

13 lettermen to return

Returning lettermen include three freshmen — hurdler Bob Leach, sprinter Dick Craig, and discus man Cole Piper. Other returning lettermen are distance man Bill Evaul; sprinters Jack Smoot, Mike Dalton, and Dave Alexander; hurdler Terry Amon; pole vaulter and high jumper Denny McGowan; 880 men Rich Reed and Hugh McCampbell; and javelin thrower Greg Hallen. Only Jerry Bell (440 yard and mile relay team runner) and John Livingston (mile and two miler) are lost because of graduation.

The track team was a vast improvement over last year's squad and, because of the large number of returning lettermen plus assistance expected from incoming freshmen, prospects seem, for the moment at least, very bright.

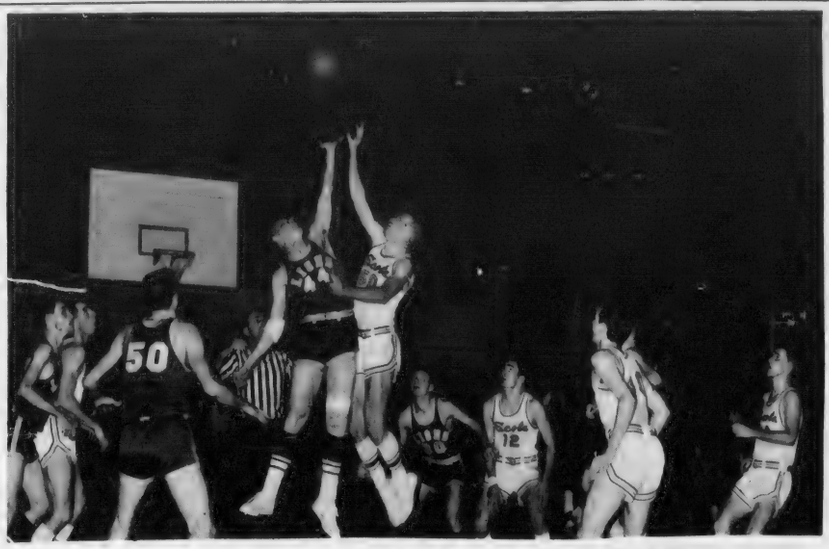
for the '65-'66 season. Only Moyers and sparkplug playmaker Kip Martin graduate in June. Four lettermen return to form the nucleus for next season's team in addition to McGowan. Sophomores Dan Mitchell and David Alexander (who was selected to the Suncoast Classic All-Tournament Team) are expected to fill key positions in the Highlander line-up, in addition to juniors Mike Dalton and Jack Lewellen. Also returning are freshmen Jim Hogue, Tom Ellis Ben Hendrix, Gary Meyer, Gerald Hodges, and Don Payne, all of whom gained valuable experience and were instrumental in several victories.



Baird predicts improvement

When asked to comment on next years possibilities, Coach Baird stressed the fact that because five lettermen will return, the Scots can justly expect a vast improvement over last year's effort. He also mentioned that the incoming freshman class could in all probability lend some support in rounding out the squad.

Help the Scotties sqoosh them flat.
Curse the refs and wave your hat.
Stomp your feet and tip your flask;
Throw off your timid freshman mask.
Stretch your lungs; get in the groove.
Help the Scots get on the move.

Reading maketh a full man, conference a ready man, and writing an exact man.

Band Records

In order to preserve the high quality of the 1965-66 Maryville College Highlander Band, John A. Roberts, conductor, has recorded for release on June 1 the best of this year's performances. The long-playing album is in limited edition for band members and for other students upon request.

The Highlander Band is one of the fastest growing college bands in the state of Tennessee. Following the rich Scottish tradition of the college, the Band is uniformed in original attire with women in imported Scottish kilts of the "Hay" clan and the men in the uniform of the Royal Scots Guards, each in scarlet tunics and fourteen inch bearskin hats. Flanking the Marching Band are four pipers who play the original Bagpipe music which has for years made the genuine Scottish tradition.

Several small ensemble groups from the Band perform throughout the year for whatever event they may be called. These ensembles include a brass quartet which toured the Midwest this year, a woodwind quintet, a wind ensemble, a Dixieland combo, and a full stage-band group.

Societies Furnish Freshmen Fun

A good deal of the social activities at Maryville College are channeled through the four societies: Kappa Phi and its sister Chi Beta, and their friendly rivals the Alpha Sigmas and their female counterparts the Theta Epsilons. Membership in these societies is non-restrictive, the only condition being the completion of the pledge period and initiation.

Some of the activities sponsored by the societies are: the intramural athletic program, rush week shows, skit night, the winter and spring formals, weekly informal dances, and a host of other activities. A spirit of friendly competition permeates most intersociety activity, which gives the student a chance to develop his varied talents while making lasting friendships.

In short, Maryville's societies combine the advantages of fraternal organizations while avoiding the selectivity and social stratification that show on the debit side of the fraternity ledger.

S.C. Will Sponsor Womenfolk

by Doug Gamble

We of the MC Student Council hope that our first major project of the year will set the stage for a series of popular concerts which supposedly car-less Scots can enjoy without the burdens of riding buses, renting cars, or taking unnecessary chances with Scotty Fate.

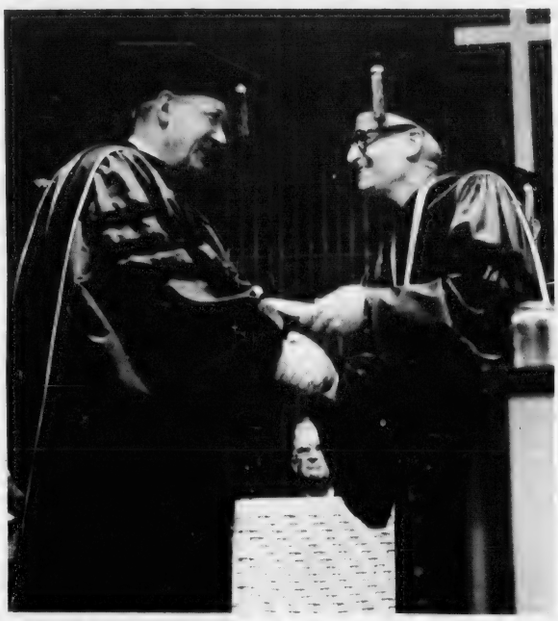
The Womenfolk, nationally rising RCA recording artists, are to appear in the Chapel at 8:00 on Saturday, October 9.

Summer TV'ers may have seen them on Ed Sullivan, Andy Williams, or Hullabulu. Wanderers might have encountered them appearing with Sullivan at Lake Tahoe. Those of you who plan a weekend abroad this fall will see them in London. All of you, though, should see them here. They put on a tremendous show.

Council members are aware of the significance of this effort. If we break even or better, we will be able to have more concerts of this caliber.

Tickets are by necessity $2.00 each. Those of you who buy before October 4 will be assured of good seats. Tickets purchased later will be honored on a first come, first seated basis.

Word of Mrs. Flynn's Death Received



Mrs. Jessie Baker Flynn

by John Noel

On Sunday, September 29, Mrs. Jessie Baker Flynn, the housemother of McLain Memorial Hall since 1959, died in a Charlotte, North Carolina, hospital.

Mom Flynn was popular and well thought of by those of us who lived in Memorial — not because of the way she did her job but for that which she did which was not her job. It is comforting to guys away from home to know that there is someone close-by who is interested in them and will take the time to listen and offer suggestions, especially after the latest major crisis in the life of a student.

Shown is Secretary of State Dean Rusk being congratulated by President Copeland after receiving an honorary doctor of laws degree.

Building Plans Changed

Returning students this year expected to see several new dormitories at least partially completed. Instead they were greeted by a few piles of dirt in various places around campus. What is not generally known is that these "piles of dirt" represent $200,000 worth of work. This figure includes the laying of pipes for the utilities in the new buildings, and the conversion of the college heating plant from coal to gas.

Bids exorbitant

As for the dormitory buildings themselves, contract bids opened July 22 proved to be far in excess of all previous estimates. This was due mainly to the designs for the new dorms, employing the group living plar which, gives far more space per student. This space includes liv-

Playhouse Presents: 1965-66

Opening the 1965-66 season with serious drama, the Maryville College Playhouse will present Eugene O'Neill's "Mourning Becomes Elektra" on November 12 and 13. Second production on the docket is the current hit, "The Sound of Music," by Richard Rodgers and Oscar Hammerstein, on March 11 and 12. The third and final major show this season will be George Bernard Shaw's "Androcles and the Lion," a comedy, scheduled for May 13, 14, and 31.

In addition, two movies are to be featured. On October 29 and 30, "Waltz of the Toreadors," starring Peter Sellers will be shown; and on April 8 and 9, Ingemar Bergman's "The Seventh Seal" is planned.

President to Speak at Vespers

Vespers has become a tradition at Maryville College by playing an integral role in the personal life of the students and in the community through a bond of common worship, fellowship, and service. At the Vesper service tomorrow evening, Dr. Copeland will talk about the reality of God's sacrifice in Christ. In his message, he will discuss the reality of time, power, evil, and divine love.

New Faces on Faculty

The Maryville College faculty has eight new members this fall semester. Three of them have earned their doctorates.

Robert J. Bonham, who holds a Master of Music degree from the University of Kansas, has joined the music faculty. Prior to his coming to Maryville, he was in the armed forces.

The new instructor in the Phychology department is Miss Mary Borkhuis. Miss Borkhuis served two years as an educational assitant with the Methodist Church in Huron, South Dakota, before beginning her graduate work in psychology at the University of South Dakota.

The former chairman of the English Department at Maryville High School is the new English instructor, Mrs. Herman B. Cate.

Arthur F. Dees is an Instructor in German. He formerly taught German at Carson-Newman College and has completed work on his Master of Arts degree in German at University of Tennessee.

The Visiting Professor of History for the 1965-66 school year is Dr. J. Wesley Hoffmann. Dr. Hoffmann, a noted scholar in his field, retired this year as head of the Department of History at

Secretary of State Gives Reminder that the Integrity of the American Commitment is the Pillar of Peace

Last Tuesday our annual Convocation and Founder's Day was led by Dean Rusk, Secretary of State, who was also awarded an honorary degree from Maryville College at that time.

Rusk Welcome Cordial

by Karen Keen

Secretary of State Dean Rusk was to arrive at the airport at 9:40 a.m., hold a brief press conference, and proceed to Maryville College. Dr. and Mrs. Joseph J. Copeland, Dr. Frank D. McClellan, and Dr. Carolyn Blair were in the welcoming party from the college. Also, Mr. and Mrs. W. Roger Rusk, the Secretary's brother and sister-in-law, and Mrs. James Perkins, his sister, of Memphis, waited to greet him. Fortunately, the day was clear and breezy because the welcomers had to wait fifteen extra minutes when the plane was delayed.

At 9:55, a silver and black Air Force Lockheed Jet Star taxied to Gate 1A. The door opened, a red carpet was rolled out, and Mr. Rusk stepped onto the field. After an official greeting, the reporters were turned loose to ask a few questions. Microphones were thrust into Mr. Rusk's face and cameras clicked frantically.

A soft-spoken man, Mr. Rusk could hardly be heard answering the two questions that time allowed. Dr. Copeland signaled an end to the conference and ushered Mr. Rusk into an air-conditioned car to begin the cavalcade to the College. The motorcade was led by a Highway Patrol car with four uniformed patrolmen, followed by the car driven by Mr. Raymond I. Brahams, Jr. that contained Dean Rusk, his personal security agent, and Dr. Copeland. This car was followed by another car with four plainclothes security agents. The remainder of the cavalcade was made up of cars containing the relatives of the Secretary, the campus greeting party, and another patrol car.

The Secretary had a full schedule during his stay at Maryville. His plane arrived at 9:40 a.m. at the airport where a news conference was held with regional press and college representatives. After a motorcade to the campus and a welcome by Student Council, he remained in the Chapel Green Room until the hour program at 10:30. Afterwards students were able to meet and talk with him in the Little Chapel until he left for a luncheon at 12 in Pearsons. Following dinner, he left again for the airport and a 1:30 departure.

Association long with M.C.

Dean Rusk has had some contact with Maryville College through his family. A brother graduated in 1929 while later a sister attended for two years. The Secretary himself is a graduate of Davidson College in North Carolina and has his M.A. as well as several honorary degrees. He is a member of the Presbyterian Church, Phi Beta Kappa, and the American Society for International Law.

Over-all world view needed

The Convocation message began with Dr. Rusk's comment that he could discuss the world in his speech by allotting 15 seconds to each country. He went on to urge that the American people look at the world situation from other viewpoints than their own. With a globe, for example, it's a different world when turned upside down.

No lesson from WW III

Although the Secretary's speech was quietly and simply delivered, his purpose was clear: to acquaint his listeners with the urgency of peace. The United States was taught a lot from World War II, but Rusk added, "we shan't have the lessons to learn from World War III and we won't be able to try again."

U.S. must be concerned

Responding to nationwide criticism of American foreign policy, Dr. Rusk estimated that there are presently 30-35 potential crisis situations in the world. We (the United States) don't go out seeking business, but we must be interested because of our importance as a United Nations member and because we are asked for help by other nations.

Goal to save Vietnam

About South Vietnam he said that "it seems a pity . . . that we should be called upon once more to deal with armed aggression. But, if the other side comes to realize that the American commitment is not serious, we haven't begun to see the trouble that would result." Rusk reported that he has been instructed by President Johnson to exhaust all diplomatic and political means to reach peace in Southeast Asia, and that the real goal is "not to save face but to save Vietnam."

Artist Series Announced

Maryville College is visited each year by prominent artists. The 1965-66 Artist's Series will be exceptional in the talent displayed. The season opens October 15 with Walter Carringer, lyric tenor returning to his native Blount County to perform at Maryville. On November 5, the New York Woodwind Quintet will perform. February 24, the Saltzburg Marionette Theatre with three-feet high puppets will give a comic opera performance of Tschaikovsky's Nutcracker Suite. April 2 Cellist Tsuyoshi Tsutsumi, former student at Suzuki Violin School will perform.

EDITORIAL OUTLOOK

Our paper today is full of comments by and about Secretary of State Dean Rusk. Whether we agree or disagree with him or his party or his President, the fact remains that he is an influential man in our nation. The coverage given by the Echo to Dr. Rusk's visit is one way of indicating how much we appreciated his coming. Too often in the past we have been confronted with Founder's Days that turned into Flounder's Days. It is such a relief to be able to tell the people back home that M.C. doesn't stand only for Maryville Convent — we can also DO things that are noteworthy and enriching.

The administration (whoever that is) sweated blood to bring Rusk here. Miss Ware was driven to distraction. Many of us had to watch the whole affair by closed-circuit television. Having a telephone close to the Secretary at all times was a real pain. We had to cut our first class to go to the airport. Somehow, it seems worth all of that.

We're willing to go through it again. Maybe there will be someone outstanding for Commencement?

Security Agents at M.C.

by Sandy Briggs

Mr. James McKee of Miami, Florida, the personal security agent for Dean Rusk, arrived on Monday, the 20th, from a Southern Governor's Conference in Georgia to arrange all security measures. His only occupation is to safeguard the Secretary of State. He met and scheduled meetings with the Highway Patrol, the Blount County Sheriff, and the Maryville Police Chief. Although he is primarily responsible for the physical safety of Rusk, Mr. McKee also organized the motorcade from the airport to the campus and vice versa. A public affair's officer from the State Department, Miss Christine Camps, also arrived Monday and arranged the press conferences and set up the protocol.

The personal assistant to Secretary Rusk, Mr. Edward Streator, had to be provided with access to a telephone at all times. While Rusk spoke in the Chapel, Streator sat in the Chaplain's Office to receive any possible calls from Washington. During the luncheon he had access to Miss Ware's telephone.

The security agents' main responsibility was the physical safety of Rusk and the open telephone lines to Washington. During the program in the Chapel, Mr. McKee stood facing the audience and Rusk's personal security agent stood in the doorway to the Chaplain's Office. Three other security men were in the balcony, and other plain-clothed Highway Patrolmen from the area were situated throughout the audience.

McKee, expecting no problems, ordered loose security measures — therefore allowing students to shake hands with the Secretary. However, in case you didn't notice, those security agents' eyes never stopped shifting.

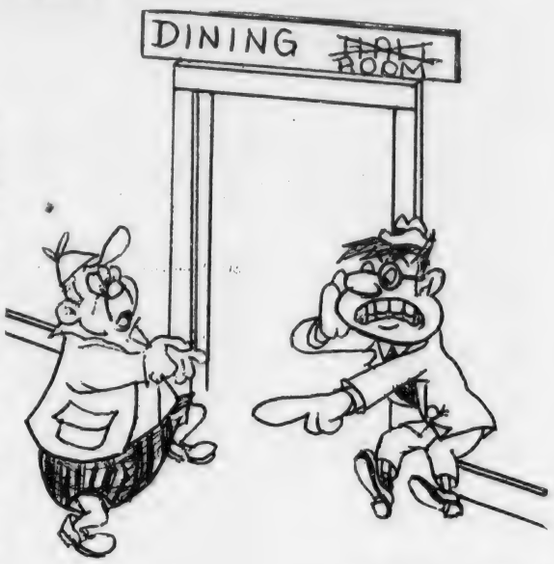
First Impressions



by Lois Grinstead

Well, the new crop is in . . . from where I stand, this year's freshman class looks like a good group. It is getting difficult to find familiar faces around the campus; everywhere one sees upperclassmen searching each other out. But it shouldn't take long for these frosh to get acquainted. They're friendly, full of energy, and ready to go — whether to work or home will soon be known.

Say, remember how you felt after all of those entrance exams? Registration line this year looked like the annual (or not so annual) snake dance at homecoming — well maybe it wasn't quite that hazardous.

As every other class has been impressed by Maryville, this year's freshmen were amazed by: Dr. Copeland's hair and his "stagecoach" (rumors are that his son left it as a keepsake), Dean McClelland's "father image," this crazy new biology lecture system, WSGA - a radio station? Bill Erwin's knees!!!, the shyness-or something-of the guys and the difficulty in getting to know the upperclassmen during these first two weeks, especially with the new dining room system. Try giving a smile and maybe an introduction when you see a new face (especially to good-looking members of the opposite sex) — the result could mean a larger sophomore class next year (and a date to Rush soon)!

Luncheon Held In Honor of Rusk

Luncheon was pleasant and informal as about eighty-five area educational, political, religious, and business leaders gathered in the Maryville College Dining Room in honor of Dr. Dean Rusk.

Two rows of diagonally arranged tables led to the front guest table. A touch of elegance was provided by bouquets of bronze and yellow mums on the diagonal tables and three large arrangements on the front table at which Rusk and specially honored guests were seated. Mr. Rusk was in the center with Dr. Copeland, Mrs. Rusk, and Mr. Gamble, President of the Maryville College Board of Directors, to his left. To his right were Mrs. Copeland, the Secretary of State's brother Mr. Roger Rusk, and Mrs. Gamble.

Miss Ware prepared a delicious luncheon including a fruit cup, filet mignon, stuffed cheese potato, and asparagus casserole, and ending with orange sherbet, topped with a brandy treat. Mrs. Harter assisted Miss Ware as hostess in keeping the operation running smoothly.

President Copeland read messages from various senators and Governor Clement. Dr. Rusk extended thanks for his presence on the Maryville campus and gratitude to the students for their sack lunch sacrifice. He concluded by expressing his deep feeling for the worth of Maryville College and the people here — as something to be cherished.

Mrs. Copeland and Mrs. Rusk

AN INTERVIEW WITH MRS. RUSK

by Sherry Proffitt and Sue Haldeman

Mrs. Rusk was warm, friendly, and eager to answer any questions posed by The Echo. Even though the interview was brief, we found her to be, like her husband, cordial and sincere.

Echo: Do you often travel with your husband?

Mrs. Rusk: Yes, very often, both in this country and abroad.

Echo: Where else have you lived and do you enjoy living in Washington?

Mrs. Rusk: I have lived many places, in small towns and in very large ones, and have really enjoyed most of them. I like Washington very much; this is the fourth time I've lived there.

Echo: In your husband's speech today, he said that it was good to be here again. When were you in Maryville before?

Mrs. Rusk: Frankly, I don't ever remember having been to Maryville before. Of course, we have done much traveling through the South and we have been to Knoxville many times. We go back and forth to Georgia visiting the family, but I don't remember having come by here unless it was when Jane (her niece) came to Maryville College. Of course I remember when the Maryville College Choir came through New York; Jane was in the choir and we were living there at the time. Yes, I remember that very well.

Echo: Who is the most interesting guest that you have entertained?

Mrs. Rusk: There have been so many interesting people there that I could not possibly choose. I'm afraid that I'll be no help there — there have been so many.

Echo: Do you use the Chief of Protocol who is on the White House staff?

Mrs. Rusk: Yes, we do; there is only one and he serves the State Department.

Echo: Do you personally have a secretary?

Mrs. Rusk: Yes, for the service staff I have a very helpful little girl who assists me a great deal.

Echo: Is she with you now?

Mrs. Rusk: No, she is back in Washington.

Echo: Before you met Mr. Rusk, what had been your vocational plans?

Mrs. Rusk: Fortunately I was not placed in a position to decide on anything. Mr. Rusk and I met at the end of my sophomore year, and I did not have to think about what I was going to do or further schooling. All I thought of was marriage, I'm afraid. (She winked.)

President's Prayer

O God, Who art infinite, eternal, and unchangeable, full of love and compassion; all Thy works praise Thee in all places of Thy dominion.

We beseech Thee, O God, to forgive those national sins which do so easily beset us: our wanton waste of the wealth of soil and sea, our desecration of natural beauty; our heedlessness of those who come after us, if only we be served; our neglect of backward peoples; our complacency; and our pride. For these wrongs done to our land and our heritage, as for right things left undone, forgive us, O Lord.

Almighty God, we beseech Thee with Thy gracious favor to behold our universities, colleges, and schools, that knowledge may be increased among us, and all good learning flourish and abound. Bless all who teach and all who learn, and grant that in humility of heart we may ever look unto Thee, who art the Fountain of all wisdom.

We lift our thanksgiving for this college, for its founders, and for all who have sustained its noble ambitions and unselfish service throughout its years. Guide Thou, O God, this generation of students, faculty, and administrative officers, that we may be worthy of our heritage and dedicated to the things that aid mankind and please Thee.

Most Gracious God, we humbly beseech Thee to direct the Congress of this nation. So prosper all their consultations that all things may be so ordered and settled by their endeavors, upon the best and surest foundations, that truth and justice, virtue and piety, may be established among us.

We commend to Thy keeping all the men and women serving our country by sea, land, and air, that we may win for the whole world the fruits of our sacrifice and a just peace.

Father, Thou who hast made of one blood all the nations of the earth, mercifully hear our supplications and remove from the world forever the dreadful menace of war. Guide the rulers with Thy counsel and restrain the passions of the people, so that bloodshed may be averted and peace preserved. Quicken the sense of our common brotherhood, bring the nations into a new bond of fellowship, and hasten the time when all the kingdoms of this world shall become the kingdom of peace and brotherhood.

Almighty God, Thou who hast called this thy servant, Dean Rusk, into the world's leadership, preserve Thou his alert mind, sustain Thou his compassionate heart, increase Thou the strength of his body, and continue Thou to use him for Thy divine purpose and for the welfare of this nation and all mankind. In the name of Jesus Christ we pray, (Choral Amen).

Strong Defense Holds Key to Scots Gridiron Success

Little All-American Benny Monroe is gone, but 18 lettermen return to form the nucleus for the 1965 Maryville football team. Of those returning, 14 are linemen whose defensive abilities will be put to the test as the Scots try to match last year's 7-1 record. Coach Tomlinson hopes that a strong defensive unit can afford some of the backs an opportunity to gain much-needed experience.

Defense to be strong

Hopefully, defense can give the Scots the ball in scoring position about four times a game. The offensive unit should then be able to provide a margin for victory in most of the games.

Says Tomlinson, "Our defense has been getting us the ball in scoring position that many times, and we expect to be much stronger this year."

If the defensive squad can be the mainstay long enough for the offense to swing into high gear, the Scots can look forward to a good season.

I-formation planned

The offensive backfield is handicapped primarily by the lack of an outside running threat and the loss of nine offensive backs from last year's squad. In hopes of off-setting this, the Scots will probably rely on a strong running attack to the inside and short-passing. The I-formation (which closely resembles a pro-set) will allow the Scots maximum flexibility while enabling them to concentrate on their strong game.

Directing the Scot backfield will be Herman Ramsey, a 5 foot 8 inch, 150 pound quarterback, who played for Everett High. Ramsey will be starting both on offense and as defensive halfback. Because of his height, the talented senior might have trouble seeing over charging linemen. In order to compensate for this, Ramsey has developed into a good sprint out passer and, according to Tomlinson, could become one of the best short passers ever to wear a Maryville uniform.

Behind Ramsey will be two transfer students, Butch Crabtree and Steve Dockery. Although hampered by a leg injury, Crabtree played at Austin Peay last season and is a fine long-passer. After transferring from Hiwassee, Dockery has caught on to the Maryville system very quickly and is running neck and neck with Crabtree on the second team.

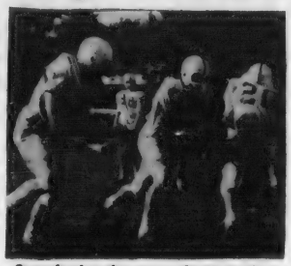
John Maietta, a freshmen from Morristown, New Jersey, will lead the freshman team and is another candidate for quarterback.

Dalton changes position

After three years at end, Mike Dalton has been switched to flankerback and will probably be the primary receiver in many of the Maryville pass patterns. Always a fine runner, Dalton's new position will enable Coach Tomlinson to utilize both his fine running and his abilities as a receiver. According to Tomlinson, "He's good enough to beat any defender one-on-one; he's just as good a receiver as you'll find anywhere."

Mike will probably see some action with the defensive unit in order to rest Ramsey. During the 1964 campaign, Dalton was on the receiving end of 21 passes including seven touchdowns.

Spelling Dalton on offense will be Archie Anderson. Achie's primary duties, however, will be with the defensive secondary where he will be a starter. Anderson is from Maryville.



Returning to the backfield for his final season is fullback Keith Bailey. Last year he averaged 3.8 yards per carry and is expected to be the workhorse of Maryville's inside running game.

Behind Bailey are Alex Robbins and Dave Belcher. Both are big (215 and 208 pounds respectively) and will probably see a lot of action.

Perhaps the answer to the lack of an outside threat will be provided by Lee Cerovac, a transfer student from Milligan. Cerovac has good speed and will start as tailback. Coach Tomlinson thinks that Lee could possibly become the best back Maryville has had in the last five years.

Resting Cerovac on offense will be Danny Rodgers. Lacking speed, Danny is nonetheless an excellent inside runner. He will start on the defensive squad.

Starting at the offensive end posts will be George Derbyshire, a letterman, and Dave Ronco, a freshman who played split end for three years in high school. Tomlinson is confident that Ronco is capable of picking up the MC system of play.

Gordon Higgins will see lots of action at offensive end. Higgins is a junior and weighs in at 175.

Sonny Webb and David Berry, both of whom are junior lettermen, will start at the defensive end positions. Webb, from Bristol, started both ways last season, while Berry, from Alcoa, was a starter during the latter part of last season.

A hard worker with lots of desire to play is Butch McDade. Butch is a sophomore and will be used with the defensive unit.

Defensive tackle strong

Perhaps the team's strongest position will be defensive tackle. Jim Pryor, at 205, and Gary Dutton, 260, will hold down this position. Back for his fourth season as starting tackle, Pryor is co-captain along with Mike Dalton. Dutton, from Loudon, has amazing pursuit capabilities for a man of his size. Both Gary and Jim have excellant lateral movement and will make it tough for any opponent to move the ball.

Replacing Dutton on offense will be Charles Berry, a guard who, in the words of Coach Tomlinson, "is capable of being one of Maryville College's best all-time linemen." Berry is a junior and hits very hard.

Freshman Steve Hutsell, sophomore Cole Piper, and junior Wayne South are also tackle candidates who could see a good deal of action.

Junior Frank Eggers will team with Berry at offensive guard. John Forgerty, a 200 pounder, and Carl Gehman, who has been hampered by a pulled muscle, will undoubtedly play a great deal on offense.

Shan Harris will start at offensive center. The 5 foot 7 inch, 185 pound sophomore is a hustling ballplayer and a good blocker.

The defensive backfield will again be led by linebacker Don Story, who will also serve as defensive captain. Ernie Greeno will lend his agressiveness to the Scottie defensive unit as he teams with Story at linebacker. Freshman Bill Clarkhuff is also a candidate for a linebacking post.

The Maryville Scots, in Coach Howard "Monk" Tomlinson's second season as head coach, boast 18 returning lettermen. This year's team, co-captained by Jim Pryor (74) and Mike Dalton (25), is expected to be one of the strongest in Maryville College football history.

WAA Begins Year

by Jean Ferguson

WAA had a really good turnout at the women's intramural party Thursday, September 23. A skit was put on by the members of Women's "M" Club, and cookies and punch were served. The party provided an opportunity to explain the intramural program to new students.

The first intramural sport to be played is field hockey, which begins Tuesday, October 5. Watch for signs and announcements for this sport. Everyone donn your best old cut-offs and your sox and sneaks, and come out for a lot of fun and friendly competition.

Don't forget, everyone welcome, including upperclasswomen.

Maryville Drops Opener 14-0

Although the Maryville Scots had the Lynx-Cats of Southwestern with their backs to the wall on five occasions, they could not cross the paydirt stripe as they dropped their opener 14-0 in Memphis. Southwestern tallied in the second and third periods with a surprisingly effective aerial barrage.

MC almost scores

The Scots hit paydirt early in the second quarter, but the touchdown was nullified by an offside penalty. The Scots had the ball inside the Lynx-Cats' ten-yard line on four other drives, only to lose the ball on downs three times and fumble with first down goal to go on the two yard line the other. Maryville's highly touted defensive line lived up to pre-season expectations as it held the Southwestern gridmen to 107 yards rushing. Southwestern's longest run of the day was seven yards.

Ramsey and Cerovac star

Senior Scot quarterback Herman Ramsey, operating offensively for the first time since his freshman year, capably marched the Scots down the field time and again to fall short of their goal each time. Lee Cerovac, junior transfer student from Milligan College, alternated with sophomore Danny Rodgers at the tailback slot. Cerovac ground out 103 yards in 19 carries as Rodgers ran hard to pick up valuable first down yardage.

Game tonight at 8:00

The Scots have been working hard this week to avenge their loss against Centre College tonight. Game time is 8:00 at Honaker Field.

M.C. Femmes Fatales

by Jan Rose and Marcia Bishop

Looking for adventure two wide-eyed Maryville co-eds headed for Europe. Here are a few of our escapades!

With romance in mind we each took a ship — separate ones . . . Marcia, anxious to see her family, crossed the ocean first on a military ship, and Jan followed later on a student ship.

Across the border in Germany, Marcia slowed the pursuit of adventure by tripping over a step and breaking her big toe. We had to laugh when Marcia returned from the hospital with a cast to her knee and her swollen toe sticking out. This monstrous cast, a blessing in disguise, aided us in meeting many local Germans — a real conversation piece!

Sick of rain and cold weather, we headed for sunny Italy. We expected to be pinched by at least one of those hot-blooded Italian men. Constantly on guard, we had made preparations to protect our virtue. Regretfully, no one even tried. The last day we discovered that pinching is now illegal, and those reported for doing it were heavily fined. We felt better! Yet, as our train left Rome, an Italian passed by us in the corridor and gave us a pinch that smarted!

My! The Italian men are friendly! Whenever we stopped to see the sights or pull out our maps, we were surrounded by men who wished to make "appointments" and give us personalized guided tours in their cars. We thought we were something special until we turned around and discovered that every other foreign girl was getting the same treatment.

We found the only way to get rid of them was to pass out our phone number. When they called, we were always "out." However, we did accept two personalized tours. One tour included a motor scooter ride for Marcia and a lesson in spaghetti—eating for Jan. The other ended up at an Italian carnival where Jan won a live goldfish, and Marcia got lost in the house of mirrors. As we left Rome, the words "belle Signorine" still rang in our ears.

Following the Convocation he will take part in discussion groups led by elders with College students as co-leaders. Special junior and senior high school discussion groups will be included.

Vespers at 7 p.m.

A barbecue supper is planned on the campus area between Pearsons Hall and Thaw Hall, to be followed by the College Vespers service at 7 p.m. when Dr. Thompson will again preach. Maryville President Dr. Joseph J. Copeland will lead the Vespers service, assisted by Chaplain Dr. E. Fay Campbell.

Active in church life

Dr. Thompson attended Bethel College and graduated from McPherson College in Kansas and the University of Chicago Law School. He is a partner in the firm of Hershberger, Patterson, Jones & Thompson of Wichita. His church work includes teaching responsibilities and activities on the Board of Deacons and Board of Elders of the First Presbyterian Church in Wichita, where he has also been active in the work of the Wichita Council of Churches. He has held many offices in the Presbytery of Wichita, the Synod of Kansas, and in the General Assembly of the church. A civic leader, he has been active in the Community Planning Council, the Community Chest and United Fund of Wichita, the Civic Music Association, and the Midwest Medical Research Foundation.

Dr. Barnett S. Eby, Pastor of New Providence Presbyterian Church in Maryville, is Chairman of the committee planning for the Presbytery Day program this year.

Biology Department Improved

by John Mulholland

Why have the professors of the biology department initiated a new program for the 101 Biology course? In an interview with Dr. Shields, he had this to say: "We are constantly seeking out methods to improve the courses by improving standards and the learning atmosphere and preventing failures. The basic theory for the freshmen level course is that the lecture material is as easily given to 2000 as to 20."

Professors specialize

He went on to make clear a number of other points. With the one large lecture session, each student gets the same material, avoiding the variation in presentation from class to class as in the past. As there is now only the one lecture section, each of the three professors of biology has fewer lectures to prepare, allowing them more time to prepare those lectures that are more within their own major field of study. Each lecture is made that much more stimulating when the lecturer prepares in this manner. The other two professors are always in attendance at the lectures so that they will know exactly what has been covered and in what detail.

Teaching aids used

As the lecture is being given, it is taped to allow the students to fill up their notes by listening to a tape in the lab after the lecture. In this way it is hoped that note-taking will be improved. Transparencies and film strips used in class are also made available for individual use in the lab.

Experiments correlate

During the lab time much of the time is devoted to discussion of the material covered in the previous lectures to answer questions that may arise. Then, as experiments are during the lab period, they are designed to correlate closely to the lecture material.

Learing through repetition

The revisions that have been made in the 101 courses have

Econ Department Hears McCutchen

Mr. Marvin McCutchen of Alcoa, the manager of the local branch of the J. C. Penney Co., was guest lecturer of the Business Management class Tuesday, October 5. Mr. McCutchen spoke on the problems encountered and the planning involved in opening a new store. J. C. Penney recently opened a new location at Midland Shopping Center. Mr. McCutchen also told the class about the J. C. Penney management training program.

This lecture and others to follow are part of an effort by the Economics Department to use local businessmen to relate the book material covered to business world conditions.

Dean Fuhr at Maryville

by Jerry Weeks

By now most students have seen a small blue car on campus with Utah licenses. This is the car of Dr. Tom Fuhr, the new Dean of Students. Dr. Fuhr has come to Maryville from Westminster College, Salt Lake City, Utah, where he was the Dean of Students this past year.

Education diversified

Dr. Fuhr is certainly no stranger to college campuses. He grew up at Hastings College in Nebraska, where his father was head of the Department of Music, and there received his B.A. degree. He then completed graduate studies at Princeton and Union Theological Seminaries, receiving a B.D. degree at Union; and he later received an Ed.D. degree from Columbia University. He has served pastorates in New York, Iowa, and California. He has also served two years in the school system of Bellflower, California.

Father of three

Dr. Fuhr explains that although he grew up alone, he is now the sole man in his house. He, Mrs. Fuhr, and their three daughters live at 304 Indiana Avenue. Mrs. Fuhr, who is from Memphis, is a teacher of pre-school children. Dr. and Mrs. Fuhr first met on the Maryville campus in 1942 at a Presbyterian Summer Conference, although neither of them attended Maryville.

Interests many and varied

The new Dean considers himself a man of contrasts—"an incurable schizophrenic:" he was born in a small town, but much of his student life was spent in New York; although he hails from the North, he married a Southerner; he is a clergyman, but he also delights in his talents as a magician; he is an ordained minister in the Presbyterian Church, but he has also served in Methodist and Congregational churches. His interests include carpentry, singing, golf, and travel.

Dean of Students job new

Replacing Mr. Arthur S. Bushing, the former Dean of Men, Dr. Fuhr comes to Maryville as the new Dean of Students. Regarding the change in name from Dean of Men to Dean of Students, Dr. Fuhr explains that the office of Dean of Students is an attempt "to co-ordinate all student activities in one administrative office." While the Dean of Students still has the responsibility of the general oversight of

Lecture Series Features Drury

Allen Drury

The first distinguished speaker of the 1965-66 lecture series was Allen Drury, a leading American political novelist, who spoke in the Maryville College Wilson Chapel last night. Mr. Drury is best known as the author of two best sellers, Advise and Consent and A Shade of Difference. For fifteen years prior to the publication of the former book, he had gained journalistic experience through his coverage of national politics and the Senate and had been employed by the United Press, the New York Times and several other publications. Presently, he is a political contributor to the Reader's Digest.

Mr. Drury's first novel, Advise and Consent, published in 1959, was adapted for the stage and had a successful Broadway run before it was produced as a movie. His second novel, A Shade of Difference, published in 1962, although very successful, is not available for sale to motion pictures because Mr. Drury feels that, condensed for the movies, it might be very harmful to the United States abroad.

Mr. Drury is planning to publish three more novels in the near future—two political works, Capable of Honor and Preserve and Protect, as well as a non-political novel, That Summer, to be published in 1966.

Playhouse Wins Awards

At the second annual Malcolm Miller Memorial Award Banquet in Knoxville, Saturday, October 2, Maryville College Playhouse won every award for which it was eligible. Three productions of the 1964-65 season received top rating: "The Fantastics" for the best college production of musical comedy; "Harvey" for the best comedy; "J. B." for the best drama.

The leading actors and actresses for each of these plays also received awards: Marty Miller, best college actress for comedy for role in "Harvey"; David King, best college actor for musical comedy for role in "The Fantastics," David Evans, best college actor for drama for role in "J.B.," Mary Gay Boettcher, best college actress for drama for role in "J.B.," Sarajune Schue, best college actress for musical

Art On Exhibit

by Sara Parker

Another art form is visiting our campus, although it may not be as easily understood nor as well accepted as the singing of the Womenfolk. The Fine Arts Gallery is exhibiting a collection of paintings in oil and collage by Mr. Henry Botkin. Mr. Botkin is a prominent American artist represented in collections across the country, including the Metropolitan Museum of Art in New York.

Collage, a new term to many, may be understood as the assemblage of natural and manufactured objects which are not normally used as art materials. William Seitz, of the Museum of Modern Art, New York, refers to collage as an interest in "found objects" that are "enriched by deterioration and fragmentation," which "calls attention to the intereaction of man and

We often hesitate to admit that we give much thought to things that appear to be insignificant on the surface. With war in Vietnam, erupting volcanos, society rush, etc. to consider, discussion of the MC diningroomhall seems uncosmopolitan, provincial, or something. It is, however, the place where we resident students congregate 1-3 times a day, day in and day out, during the school year. Therefore, its importance to us cannot be denied.

Returning students this year were happily confronted with a rennovated dining room interior. Instead of a gymnasium-type area, there was a decent place to eat; instead of cobwebs, there were chandeliers; instead of splinters, there were white tabletops. And there was even a hostess!

Establishing a staggered eating schedule was not especially pleasant for all concerned. Couples were assigned to different times, 1:30 lunch refugees felt like the plague had hit, and meal tickets were more or less discreetly traded.

We survived the change quite well, though, until that fateful Saturday, September 25th. It was a great day: first Echo, first home football game, first chance to sing and cheer with the PORKIES. But, wait. Where were the Porkies?? Outside.

Now, after much discussion, the Porkies are back where they belong, and we are convinced that Maryville College needs the Porkies in the dining room just as much as it needs Dean Rusk on the speaking platform. Without either and what they stand for, we would soon find ourseles stagnantly watching the world go by.

Bo-bo-ski-wottin-dottin-wa-dottin-shhhhh.

BETA BETA BETA

by Betty Currie

Have you ever noticed a gang of biology majors gathering around the fish pond Wednesday evening? Wonder what they are up to? The Beta Beta Beta Biological Honor Society on the Maryville campus sponsors a weekly seminar which has been an exciting and helpful program for students interested in biology.

There are two seminar groups-one for freshmen and sophomores and one for juniors and seniors. The groups meet on alternate Wednesday nights at the homes of the biology professors.

The programs are carried out entirely by the students, each one preparing a paper of biological interest and presenting it at one of the meetings. After the paper has been read, everyone has a chance to contribute to a discussion of the paper and the ideas that it stimulates.

This year the two seminars will meet jointly every fourth Wednesday evening to hear a guest speaker. Some of the Maryville doctors have already agreed to meet with the group.

All the meetings are informal, refreshments are served, and it is a fun way to learn.

Rush

Kappa Phi–Chi Beta

by Jim Gifford

Ask a freshman about RUSH and you'll get A GREAT BIG SMILE. That's understandable, because for at least two weeks out of every year, Maryville College Freshman are the most UNdiscriminated against minority group in the world. (HECK, if the Freshman classes keep getting bigger, they may not even be a minority group!)

This year at least 100 Kappa Phis and Chi Betas put in countless hours preparing for our two BIG days of RUSH! The results: 1.) Thursday, Sept. 30, all the new freshmen were our guests for a steak dinner in the New Dorm. 2.) That very same night, the freshmen were treated to what many upperclassmen consider the best dance ever held at Maryville College. The GREAT MICE had a capacity crowd so enthralled with their music that every once in a while I looked around to make sure some low-flying cloud hadn't come along and taken the intramurel gym with it. Man, what atmosphere!! 3.) Friday, Oct. 1, Chi Beta had a tea for all the freshman girls. 4.) That night we put the finishing touches on RUSH with our show "Love Never Faileth." A standing room only crowd, integrated with many upperclassmen from all the societies had a laugh-filled evening.

When I was just as tall as grass
(and never mind the cat or little boys)
I used to play among the blades
with snails and flies
and guys my size
who knew the game of smallness.

Sometimes when the wind was soft
and the earth was damp with summer,
We'd creep down among the roots beside the river
—and silent as acorns
stop to watch the mushrooms
passing through the glen.

Alpha Sigma – Theta Epsilon

by Ginny Wells

"Round-up" was the theme this year, and western was the style. Preparations begun last spring resulted in a whompin', stompin', rarin', bang-up time. Monday afternoon, Sig's "rodeo" led the events, and was directly followed by a barbeque. There Hugh McCambell entertained with song and story until the beef and trimmings were ready. On Tuesday afternoon, Theta and Minton's Clothing Store joined forces to present a "Fall Fashion Round-up." Rush activities were culminated that night with an inimitable production — the original "Stranger in Paradox." Afterward the Shades played at an outdoor dance.

This season's rush was marked by enthusiasm, hard work, perfect weather, and good response.

And the Livin' Was Easy

by Sue Foreman

Summer School 1965 started on June 15 in the traditional Maryville manner—it rained! The total enrollment of summer school involved 100 students with about half of them living on campus. This enrollment was an increase over the previous summer.

Students were allowed a maximum course load of 7 hours. Each class met for 1 hour and 15 minutes Monday through Fridays. Chapel was held on Wednesday with voluntary attendance.

It is almost a unanimous agreement that summer school at Maryville College was a success. Small classes offered better opportunities for an exchange of ideas between students and faculty. Students became better acquainted with one another, and the "pre-freshmen" had a preview of college life.

There were several workshops and conferences on campus during summer school. Fred Waring's group and their Doxology at supper will never be forgotten. The conference people ate in the dining "room," lived in the dorms, and used other college facilities. Occasionally the students were invited to their activities.

Many students were involved with the summer community playhouse. They helped with the technical and stage crews, as well as with acting in the plays presented.

Our Trip OR "THAT MIGHT BE AN UGLY PASSPORT PICTURE BUT LOOK WHERE IT GOT US"

by the Bloys

The above picture is an actual unretouched photograph of the Bloys in one of their many European disguises. Dr. Bloy is doing an imitation of Goethe and Barbara is asleep.

Everybody knows that there are windmills and tulips in Holland, featherbeds and real live castles on the Rhine, students and metros in Paris, so we'll skip the picturesque and tell you our adventures. Our first discovery about Amsterdam was that the rain trickling down the back of your neck is there to stay. The weather explains the Dutch school of rather grim painting. We didn't stay around to see what it would do to us.

We took a train a few hours north to have our most exciting musical experience of the summer. One of us played a rather unique organ, the other listened, and I can't say which had a better time. We were at Lauren Skerk in Alkmaar and the organ there dates to the sixteenth century. It's present design is from the early eighteenth century, built by the Art Schnitger family, leading builders of the type of organs for which Buxtehude and Bach wrote. It is one of the few remaining organs of this fine vintage. The sound is certainly worthy of it's world-wide reputation, and it's case is a delightful collection of g i l d e d cherubim and other mythical beasts.

We'll skip down to the Hungarian-flavored Koblenz and take the Saturday afternoon Rhine steamer up that great river with hundreds of merry-making Germans. And up we went with a more sober South African businessman who is on the local school board and with whom we swapped educational theories. On the train to Frankfurt he had a hard time convincing the conductor that he would rather be in the second-class compartment with starving teachers than in first class with the expense-account crowd. University German doesn't always go over with train conductors.

Saturday evening is a superb time to be in Frankfurt. All of the churches ring bells for vespers. We were on our way in the midst of this quarter-hour bell concert to hear Helmut Walcha play the service at the Church of the Three Kings. Walcha is a renouned performer of Bach, and my husband studied with him several summers ago. I had heard his records and knew he deserved his fame, but I only then discovered that he is totally blind. His postlude was improvisation, and was very much not an imitation of Bach, as you might expect; rather an exciting twentieth century Walcha.

Our next adventure was dinner in Munich with a wonderful former landlady. We were anxious to try the untranslatable specialty of the restaurant, but it was, alas, a huge mound of ground steak—RAW—garnished with little piles of salt, pepper, paprika, and a raw egg. I was lucky enough to have the mustard pot on my side of the table, and I clandestinely doused each repulsive bite with hot mustard. We filled up later on big bowls of vegetable soup. Then we were off for two days of swimming at the largely German alpine resort, Garmisch-Partenkirken.

Next Venice. Venice is just Venice, and if you're fond of pigeons it's even better. At breakfast one morning we discovered that two burglars had been caught trying to climb in a window from the canal below. We almost lost our whole collection of drip-dries and were oblivious to the whole thing!

We took a Greek ship from Venice which would eventually get us to Cyprus, and cruised around with a mad Irishman who is with the U.N., an American who runs a school on Cyprus, and his Greek wife. Our favorite port of call was Heraklion on Crete, just a few miles from the reconstructed palace of Cnossus. What a place to retire! We came back to the ship several dolphins and much enchantment richer. We had by this time learned the Greek alphabet, but we never did get proficient enough to figure out how to put on the life-jackets! We finally arrived on Cyprus by tiny overcrowded motorboat from the harbor; I was trying to remember the cross-chest carry the whole way. That lovely island was full of U.N. personnel and an uneasy truce. We flew from there to Beirut, and expected the next day to fly to Jerusalem. But we were booked on a non-existent flight so we took the only other transport short of camels—a city-to-city taxi. Ten hours—most of it Syrian desert, with a tubercular Arab driver who kept swapping his turkish cigarettes for my priceless Marlboros—ten hours, mind you, on one Pepsi-Cola, was a bit much for us. We were most happy to see Jerusalem's golden walls and most grateful for the Anglican Hospice and their midnight snack. Jordanian Jerusalem does not belie the Revelation of St. John or the Junior Choir hymns—it is golden. Not much milk or honey in evidence, but the local stone is decidedly golden. The bazzars are colorful and odiforous, the veiled wives are intruiging, and the Mosque on the sight of Solomon's temple is far and away the most artistic thing to be seen, but still the most impressive sight is the Church of the Holy Sepulchre. On Sunday morning the Copts, Armenians, Greeks, and Romans chant in their separate chapels. On Sunday afternoon two different processions go on at once. On weekdays each group takes a turn at celebrating the Mass at the Sepulchre. Every day is Easter there. A more accurate reflection of the condition of the Church cannot be found—each group treasures its few feet

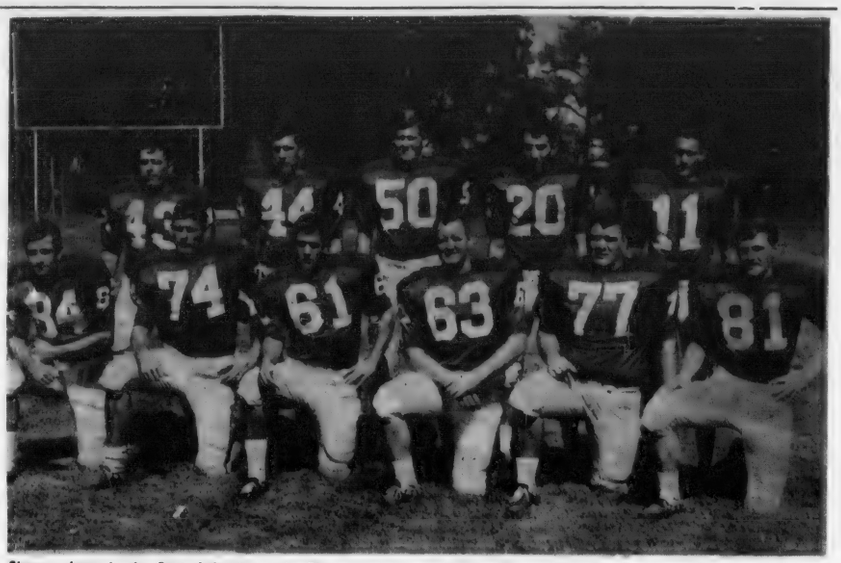
Physical Education Majors Have Articles Published

Three Senior Physical Education majors, Linda Davis Gresham, Ellen Lankenau, and Richard Reed, have recently had papers published in the Tennessee Health and Physical Educator. Last Spring, Mrs. Edith Largen, Assistant Professor of Physical Education, requested that the three write articles for the fall publication of this magazine. The articles were to be on any subject which was of interest to the author, and in the fields of health, physical education, or recreation.

The retarded deserve help



Mrs. Gresham wrote her paper on "The Value of Recreation Programs for the Mentally Retarded," a field in which she has interest. She has written: "Mentally retarded children are often subnormal physically as well as mentally. Without special training and guidance, they are prohibited from developing the potential they possess." . . . "Today more and more citizens of the United States are beginning to realize that the growing problem of mental retardation is not only the problem of the defective but is also the responsibility of the nation as a whole. There is a definite need for every community of this country to provide education, health, counseling and recreational facilities and services for those who are mentally retarded. Recreation programs should be adequately organized and staffed in order that the defective and his family may benefit mentally, physically, socially, and emotionally from them."

Somatotype determines fitness

"Consider . . . Somatotyping" was the topic of Mr. Reed's article. Mr. Reed is writing his independent study on somatotyping and included some facts and general principles of somatotyping in his article. He has defined somatotyping as "a means of numerical classification for various body types. A somatotype is designated by three numerals, one for each component. These three numerals indicate the degree to which a subject exhibits each of the three components. The numeral "1" stands for the lowest observed amount of the component; the numeral "7" stands for the most extreme dominance of the component." Mr. Reed also pointed out that "A great number of studies testify that somatotype, or body type, is a basic determinant of health and physical fitness, as well as of athletic and personality characteristics of human beings. The body type also has significant implications for individual guidance in health and physical fitness."

Leisure time important

"Carry-Over Value and Community Recreation" was the subject of Miss Lankenau's paper. This paper was a call to the American public to make use of their leisure time and improve community recreation programs. Miss Lankenau has written: "An important principle of physical education is the "carry-over" value which physical education can offer. The objective of this principle is to promote an interest and a desire for further participation in the activities taught in physical education classes, and an appreciation of sports activities for one's leisure moments." . . . People ARE interested in sports, as attendance at football or baseball games shows; but are we becoming a nation of "watchers" instead of "participants?" Therefore, educate the public toward active recreation and then provide them with the facilities and training to use this education and interest. Our community recreation programs need to be strengthened, expanded and publicized. We must interest our communities in seeing that there are facilities and opportunities for everyone — from the youngest to the oldest — to participate in a healthy, active, recreative life.

Colonels Spoil Home Debut

by John Maietta

The Maryville Scots suffered their second setback in as many outings at the hands of Centre College 14-8 in this season's home opener.

Dutton is outstanding

The Colonels scored first in the early minutes of the first quarter when their fleet right halfback slanted 33 yards off tackle to paydirt. Gary Dutton, winner of the Amos Alonzo Stagg award for his performance in the contest, broke through the Colonel forward wall to block the point after touchdown attempt. He later stifled two field goal tries and a punt in the same manner.

A hard hitting defensive battle ensued throughout the first half and into third quarter. In the final period, however, a Colonel halfback broke loose on a well-executed trap play and scampered 51 yards for Centre's second tally. This time they successfully converted for two points with a quarterback keeper.

Ramsey—Dalton connect

The never-say-die Scots came roaring back behind the strong right arm of senior quarterback Herman Ramsey, who completed seven out of ten passes enroute to the Scots' lone score. The big play was a 21 yard scoring pass to flankerback Mike Dalton. The versatile Dalton took a pitchout from Ramsey and tossed to sophomore tailback Danny Rogers for the two point conversion.

Tomlinson hopeful

Trailing by six points with two minutes remaining, the Scots tried an onside kick, but Centre held the ball and ran out the clock. Disappointed, but by no means discouraged, Scot head coach Howard Tomlinson said that he was proud of the team effort and still had high hopes for a successful season.

Sig's Sledges Knock Knights

by Sonny Hughes

With the first busy weeks of the fall semester over, men's intramurals got into swing. Intramurals at Maryville cover all sports except swimming. The program is designed to present an opportunity for juniors and seniors to participate in physical activity they miss in regular physical education classes. It is also a good source of competitive activity for all freshmen and sophomores. Alpha Sigma and Kappa Phi provide the largest teams in the leagues.

Flag football got underway with a hard fought contest between last year's league champs, the Alpha Sigma Sledgehammers and Kappa Phi's best team, the Knights. The Sig team, reinforced by several newcomers, proved to be the superior team as they gained a 19—13 victory. Quarterback Bucky Hartenstine accounted for all of Sig's points as he ran for one touchdown and passed for two others. He also added the points after touchdown. He connected on a 30 yard pass play to end Big John Agnew and another 20 yarder to wingback Dick Craig. Lynn Howard tallied all 13 points for the Knights with runs of 45 and 5 yards.

Intramural flag ball games are scheduled for 3:45 on the intramural field.

Tigers Topple Skidding Scots

Winless Scots Face Emory and Henry Wasps Today

by Bill Evaul

The Maryville Scots dropped their third straight last Saturday night to the powerful toe of Georgetown College by a score of 23-0. Georgetown scored in each quarter on three field goals and two touchdowns. Maryville's defense was the only bright spot of the evening, as Georgetown got only six first downs.

First field goal missed

Maryville started off wrong when it fumbled on its own 32 on the third play of the game. The defense held, and the Tigers tried a field goal. Even though this one failed, it was a pattern to be repeated many times in the game.

Pass intercepted

Both teams had trouble moving the ball, but with 3:42 left in the first quarter, Georgetown scored on a thirty yard field goal by big (275 lbs.) Tom Seals. At this point the defensive teams took over and kept the ball stationary until late in the second quarter. With under two minutes to play, the Scots tried a pass play from the Georgetown 30. Clyde McConnaughhay intercepted the pass and ran 55 yards to the Maryville 19, where Lee Cerovac tackled him after a desperate chase. Seven plays later, with 30 seconds left in the half, James McKenzie scored from the 1 and Seals got the extra point. At half time the score was 10-0, in favor of Georgetown.

Anderson to Hebel scores

The second quarter began with the Scot defense holding the Tigers on the Maryville 35, but Seals put his toe into another one and the score stood at 13-0. The second Georgetown touchdown came after a 66-yard march, capped by a 16 yard pass from Jan Anderson to Jon Hebel. Seals boomed another extra point, leaving the score at 20-0, and only 13½ minutes left.

TD nullified

Four minutes later, it looked like Maryville had finally scored, after a punt had been fumbled by Georgetown and picked up by Alan Cropper, who ran across the line. But the ball was blown dead on the Georgetown 44, where it had hit the ground after being fumbled.

Rogers injured

Maryville and Georgetown traded the ball on a couple of fumbles and an interception, then, with 2 minutes left in the game, Georgetown—unable to move the ball, had to settle for their third powerfully kicked field goal. This one was from the 30, raising the score to 23-0. Just a few seconds before, the crowd was dismayed to see Danny Rogers carried off the field after colliding with a Georgetown player, but nothing serious was found, and he was on his feet after the game.

Final pass intercepted

Maryville started moving the ball through the air on its last set of downs, but an interception at the goal line ended this last drive, leaving the final score 23-0 in favor of the Georgetown Tigers.

Cerovac gains 52 yards

The Scots' leading ground-gainer was once again Lee Cerovac, who netted 52 yards. Co-captain Mike Dalton was second, gaining 35 yards. Georgetown honors went to McKenzie with 74 yards gained. The big toe for Georgetown was Tom Seals, the field goal kicker, who scored on 3 of 5 attempts plus 2 extra points for a total of 11 points. Georgetown punter Willis Toliver, who averaged 42½ yards on six punts, consistently put Maryville in bad field position and was partly responsible for preventing Maryville's offense from getting started.

Week-ends began on Friday afternoon. This gave everyone a chance to take a short vacation, to catch up on sleep, to study, or to relax. Things to remember include a free bus to Cades Cove and a guided tour by Dr. Shields; a special tour of Fontana Dam; a picnic in the rain; a low-flying, empty-tanked airplane in the mountains; a race down the mountains; Killer and Malcolm's dancing lessons; Miss Ware's delicious and huge picnics; a watermelon fight; and the open public meeting of the Ku Klux Klan behind the court house.

Summer school 1965 was indeed worth all the time, money, and effort spent. Why not attend Maryville if you plan to go to summer school in 1966?

of holy ground. And the building itself would have fallen by now if the objective British hadn't shored it up during the Mandate. But it's an overwhelmingly joyful place, and one that juxtaposes the most complex and ugly things about the Church with the one simple fact underlying faith.

Before we leave Jerusalem, guess who we saw at the Y.M.C.A.? Dr. Walker, Miss Lightfoot, and Miss Hunter!

We travelled to Jericho, Bethlehem, the Jordan River and the Dead Sea with two American Benedictines and an American Beatle. Never stick your foot in the Dead Sea. It won't dry for hours. I had a donkey ride in Bethlehem which brought home the incredible difficulties of the first Christmas Eve.

We regretfully crossed the border into Israel and saw the desert bloom. What an exciting country! The theatre, music, art, as flourishing as the farms. For obvious reasons, much of the population is under thirty and the verve of youth is everywhere. Israel is a frontier, and gives one the impression of vastly telescoped history. The two most noteworthy sights in Jewish Jerusalem are the Marc Chagall windows at the Medical Center and the new museum. The museum is fascinating just architecturally, and the sculpture garden defies description.

We travelled briefly to Nazareth, an unassuming hill town, and then to Tiberias where the heat finally got to us. The Sea of Galilee is below sea level so we spent our time either swimming or watching the ceiling fan go around while some Pentecostal friends (ran into them later, too) made us feel guilty by seeing the sights.

We caught another Greek ship at Haifa and, after a peek at Rhodes, finally arrived in Athens. We saw the Acropolis by the full moon that night, and nobody was there except the romantic French. The museums in Athens have quite a few things that Lord Elgin missed so they took up a solid week. We heard a Bach concert in an ancient theatre and saw an excellent production of Sophocles' Antigone at a new theatre on Lycabettos. We jumped to the eleventh century A.D. every time we investigated a Byzantine church, saw the renowned mosaics at Daphni, and, by the way, had a creepy experience in a Russian church. The celebrant was a double for every Eastern icon and mosaic we'd ever seen of Christ.

Tenor Opens Artists Series

A Blount County native who has achieved fame as one of America's outstanding native singers, Walter Carringer, will open the 1965-66 Maryville College-Community Artists' Series with a concert Oct. 15 at 8:15 p.m. in the Maryville College Chapel.

Carringer, a tenor, sang his first professional engagements as a soloist with the famous Robert Shaw Chorale, and has built his reputation as a soloist in oratorio and choral works. He is a favorite for performances of Bach and Handel, and makes frequent appearances in the Passions of St. Matthew and St. John and as tenor soloist in the Messiah.

Carringer made his debut in 1958 in London at the Town Hall in New York in 1959. Since then, he has toured extensively in the United States and Canada and appears frequently in the major American summer music festivals.

Tickets for the concert are available at the Treasurer's Office at Maryville College and may be purchased at the door on the night of the concert.

ARMY MEDICAL OFFICER AT STUDENT CENTER

Captain Perry A. Barnes, MSC, will be on the Maryville College campus Wednesday, October 13. Captain Barnes will meet with any interested students from 9 a.m. to 2 p.m. in the Student Center to present army medical service corps direct appointments and active duty programs.

Representative of Emory Here

Don Jones, on recruitment tour for the Emory University School of Nursing, will speak at Maryville College, Maryville, Tenn. Oct. 11 at 10 a.m.

Mr. Jones is assistant director of student development for the Emory nursing school.

Emory offers a collegiate nursing program leading to a Bachelor of Science in Nursing degree. The Emory nurse receives two years of academic work in the Emory College before entering the three year professional nursing program.

Mr. Jones has had extensive experience in student work, including eight years on the faculty of the Baylor School in Chattanooga as instructor and as a guidance counselor. At Emory he served as acting dean of men last summer before assuming his duties in the nursing school this fall.

men students, he is also responsible for co-ordinating the various curricular and extra-curricular activities on campus, counseling with students, and executing the general policy of the college.

Communication vital

Dr. Fuhr believes that communication between the students and the faculty and administration is very important and necessary to the life of the college. He says that an important part of every student's education is to participate in the administration of the college, whether through the Student Council, Student-Faculty Senate, or individually by discussing problems and offering suggestions with the faculty and administration. Regarding present rules and regulations, he explains that he trys to interpret reasons for rules and regulations. "Rules operate in individual situations . . . I am more interested in justice than strictly enforcing a set of rules. Maryville tries to couple freedom and responsibility."

Opinion of MC favorable

"The student body is very well mannered and friendly: two magnificent qualities which I hope will never be lost," says Dr. Fuhr. "Maryville also takes its spiritual life seriously. It is the desire of Maryville to have a first rate academic program through its fine library, its independent studies program, comprehensive examinations, its excellent faculty members, and the interest of its directors, faculty, and administrators in evaluating the college program."

National Poetry Contests Renew College Awards

The third annual Kansas City Poetry Contests offering $1,600 in prizes and publication of a book-length work have been announced by Thorpe Menn, literary editor of the Kansas City Star, which co-sponsors the awards.

Six $100 awards will again be offered to college students for single poems in the Hallmark Honor Prize competition, sponsored by Hallmark Cards, Inc.

The Dr. Edward A. Devins Award offers a $500 advance on royalties for a booklength manuscript to be published by the University of Missouri Press. Four $100 prizes are offered to poets of the Great Plains region by the Kansas City Star, and high school students in Kansas and Missouri may compete for four $25 H. Jay Sharp prizes.

Both the Hallmark and the Devins awards are offered on a national basis. Closing date for submission of entries is Feb. 15, 1966 and winners will be announced April 28. Complete rules may be obtained by sending a self-addressed stamped envelope to: Poetry Contests Directors, P. O. Box 5335, Kansas City, Mo., 64131.

Announcement of the 1966 winners will be made at the final American Poets' Series of the Jewish Community Center in Kansas City. The winner of the $500 Devins Award will be brought to Kansas City to receive the prize and to sign a contract with the University of Missouri Press. The Devins winner will also be invited to speak at this session.

In both years of competition, Maryville College has won top honors among all colleges and universities in East Tennessee.

Red Cross Recruiter Here October 20

Miss Hazel Breland, Assistant Director Personnel-Recruitment, Southeastern Area, American National Red Cross, Atlanta, Georgia, will be at the Anderson Hall Conference Room Wednesday, Oct. 20, to interview graduating students interested in various positions in the field of welfare and recreation.

Miss Breland said that careers in Red Cross are open to both men and women with the following general requirements: U. S. citizenship, good health, and world-wide mobility. Preference is given to college graduates, she said.

The greatest needs at present are young women to do casework and recreation with the armed forces and men to serve as Red Cross welfare workers at military installations. Young women selected as recreation workers may serve in a clubmobile program in Korea or conduct recreational activities for persons in military hospitals in this country and overseas. To carry out its program of welfare services in military hospitals; the Red Cross also employs as social workers young women with degrees in social welfare, sociology, psychology, or related fields. On-the-job supervision is provided by professional social workers.

The young men who are employed as welfare workers by the Red Cross are assigned with armed forces personnel wherever they serve and perhaps will be better prepared for the positions if they have already had military service.

Retirement, Social Security, group insurance, and annual and sick leave are among the benefits provided Red Cross employees. An educational incentive plan offers opportunities for future professional training to those who qualify.

been based on the new programs at Purdue and the University of Tennessee. The central idea of the plan adapted at Maryville is "learning and retaining through repetition." With the use of more mimeographed material, taped lectures, and discussion sessions, the learning process is made much easier, in addition to providing increasingly stimulating material.

Future anticipated

In the the upperclass courses the emphasis is more on independent work. Instead of a lecture type class, the class is entirely discussion. In this way more responsibility is given to the student to prepare and study material. Revising its methods, its curriculum, its program to meet the ever changing need of the academic community, Maryville College looks to the future.

"A man practices the art of adventure when he . . . breaks the chain of routine and renews his life through reading new books, traveling to new places, making new friends, taking up new hobbies and adopting new viewpoints."

Student nurse administering medicine in a ward of the Frances Newton Hospital.

Francis Newton Hospital Aids in Indian Crisis

by Karen Keen

Near the Pakistan-Indian border in Ferozepore, Punjab, India, the center of the area of the present Kashmir crisis, lies the Frances Newton Hospital. This is not the first time that the hospital has cared for the Indian people during a border war. After the partition of India in 1948, many people who had been driven from their homes and caught up in the border war between the Hindus and Moslems were helped by the hospital.

The Frances Newton Hospital is of particular importance to Maryville College; its director, Dr. Dorothy Ferris, is a Maryville graduate. For several years, Maryville College through the Fred Hope Fund has been sending money to the hospital. This has been used to buy a shadowless lamp for the operating room and an autoclave or sterilizer; to build a ward for men patients, and a home for nurses in training school; and to provide scholarships for two young medical students. Last year $1800 was sent to assist in establishing a school of medical technology.

The Fred Hope Fund, established in the early 1900's by Maryville students, sends money contributed by the students and faculty of the school to mission projects in Africa and China, but mostly to projects in India.

The moral of this story is: even though we here at Maryville College may consider ourselves isolated from the outside world, our money is right in the middle of world current events.

"There should be an endless conflict between ideas — for it is only in the struggle against constantly appearing false ideas that the truth is enlarged and clarified."

NEW NANNIES

by Sara Humphries

Two new housemothers have been added to the staff of Maryville this year.

Mrs. Harrison, housemother of Memorial Hall, is from Memphis, Tennessee. This is her first experience as a housemother of a boys' dorm. For eleven years she worked as medical technician in various cities in Tennessee. As a mother of two sons, she is well acquainted with the "male nature" and is thoroughly enjoying getting to know the residents of Memorial Hall. Mrs. Harrison is especially impressed with the beauty and friendly atmosphere of the Maryville campus.

Mrs. Roberts, the housemother of Crawford House, is a familiar face on the campus. She has served as secretary to Mr. Raymond Brahms, the Director of Development, for over four years. Mrs. Roberts has two daughters. The youngest, Barbara, is a sophomore here at Maryville. Although already well at home here at Maryville, Mrs. Roberts is enjoying making new friends with the girls at Crawford House.

Summer Research Completed

During this past summer Sandy Briggs and Reed Tarwater, senior chemistry majors, participated in an eight-week research project under the direction of Dr. David Young. Both students received stipends of $600 which were made possible by grants to the chemistry department by Research Corporation and the Petroleum Research Fund of the American Chemical Society.

Sandy's research concerned an investigation of Michael Additions of tertiary phosphines, whereas Reed's research was directed towards the study of a Thio-Wittig reaction. Both of these projects were in the general area of organophosphorus chemistry — a branch of organic chemistry involving the study of compounds of carbon and phosphorus.

The nature of the work was basic research, which means that one is interested in the knowledge for its own sake rather than for the purpose of an immediate practical or commercial application of that knowledge. Although neither of these projects was brought to a conclusion in the short time of eight weeks, both Sandy and Reed did make important and significant advances towards a better understanding of these two areas of research. Further work is being projected for study throughout the school year and in the summer of 1966.

Insurance Company Donates Money to M.C.

Connecticut General Life Insurance Company has given $25 to Maryville College under its direct and matching grants Program of Aid to Higher Education.

The company makes direct grants to institutions whose graduates have been salaried employees and career agents of Connecticut General for ten years or more. The direct grants are given annually as long as the graduate remains with the company. In addition, Connecticut General annually matches the gifts made by salaried employees and career agents.

This annual program is designed to show appreciation for the contributions made by institutions of higher learning to the development of company employees. It also reflects the company's conviction that the business world should contribute to the much-needed financial support of private institutions.

Since 1958 the company has given through this program a total of $358,899 in unrestricted financial aid to private colleges and universities.

Third College Tour Planned

The third Maryville College Tour of Europe with KLM Royal Dutch Airlines and Blue Cars, Ltd., is scheduled for six countries July 13 to Aug. 3 next summer.

Two successful tours, one to western and southern Europe in 1964 and another to Scandinavia in 1965, have already been held.

This year's tour will begin in Amsterdam and continue through Cologne, Heidelberg, Munich, Innsbruck, The Breuner Pass, Venice, Florence, Rome, Paris, and London.

Stops in Rome, Paris, London

Accomodations will be in first class hotels with all evening meals and continental breakfasts included, plus some lunches. Travel will be by economy class jet airliner, private motorcoach, and first class rail service. Private rooms are available at $44 extra per person. An experienced courier will be in charge and lead the group over the entire route.

Participants need only a valid passport and smallpox vaccination certificate. The cost this year will be between $848 and $898 depending on the number in the group. A minimum of 30 will insure the lower fare.

Feb. 1 date for deposit

Those interested in the tour may write the Alumni Office at Maryville College for a preliminary itinerary, and should plan to deposit $100 by Feb. 1, 1966, an amount refundable until 60 days before departure.

On Saturday and Sunday, October 23 and 24, in honor of Homecoming, the dormitories will observe an open house. On Saturday, Carnegie and Memorial Halls will be open from 4:00 until 5:00 p.m.; on Sunday, Baldwin Hall will be open from 1:30 until 2:30; Pearsons Hall and Margaret Lloyd Residence from 2:00 until 3:00 p.m. The purpose of open house is to provide, for everyone who is on the campus Homecoming weekend, the opportunity of an informal visit to the dormitories.

Quintet to Appear

On Saturday night, October 30, the Maryville College Community Artists Series will present the New York Woodwind Quintet in a recital of chamber music. The group has appeared in numerous concerts at home and abroad, on television and radio, and has also made highly praised recordings.

The quintet has been honored by the United States State Department with invitations to appear overseas. In 1956 the men traveled through South America, and in 1958 they appeared at the American Pavilion at the Brussels World's Fair. In 1962 the group toured eleven countries of the Orient. These overseas tours included not only concerts, but also workshops and clinics at colleges and schools.

Miss Sara Parker, senior art major from Erie, Pennsylvania, will reign today as our 1965 Homecoming Queen. Members of her court include Miss Betty Brown, Miss Louise Crawford, Miss Faith Scotchmer, and Miss Christine Lim. They will be in today's Homecoming Parade and will be officially presented at tonight's football game.

Foundation Fellowships to be Awarded

The National Academy of Sciences-National Research Council has been called upon again to advise the National Science Foundation in the selection of candidates for the Foundation's program of graduate and regular postdoctoral fellowships. Committees of outstanding scientists appointed by the Academy-Research Council will evaluate applications of all candidates. Final selection will be made by the Foundation, with awards to be announced on March 15, 1966.

Applicants judged on ability

Fellowships will be awarded for study in the mathematical, physical, medical, biological and engineering sciences; also in anthropology, economics (excluding business administration), geography, the history and philosophy of science, linguistics, political science, psychology (excluding clinical psychology), and sociology (not including social work). They are open to college seniors, graduate students working toward a degree, postdoctoral students, and others with equivalent training and experience. All applicants must be citizens of the United States and will be judged solely on the basis of ability.

Applicants for the graduate awards will be required to take the Graduate Record Examinations designed to test scientific aptitude and achievement. The examinations, administered by the Educational Testing Service, will be given on January 15, 1966, at designated centers throughout the United States and certain foreign countries.

Amount of awards announced

The annual stipends for graduate Fellows are as follows: $2400 for the first level; $2600 for the intermediate level; and $2800 for the terminal level. The annual stipend for postdoctoral Fellows is $5500. Limited allowances will also be provided to apply toward tuition, laboratory fees, and travel.

Further information and application materials may be obtained from the Fellowship Office, National Academy of Sciences-National Research Council, 2101 Constitution Avenue, N. W., Washington, D. C. 20418. The deadline for the receipt of applications for graduate fellowships is December 10, 1965, and for regular postdoctoral fellowships, December 13, 1965.

Campaign Planned to Assist M. C.

A campaign to raise $50,000 for Maryville College and Tusculum College through the churches of the Synod of Mid-South of the United Presbyterian Church in the U.S.A. will get under way Nov. 1 and is to be concluded next March 31, it was announced today by D. W. Proffitt of Maryville, Chairman of the Synod's College Fund Committee.

Expanded facilities to benefit

The money will be used by the two colleges in their capital funds programs to provide new buildings and equipment on both campuses. At Tusculum, these needs include a chapel and fine arts building, enlarging the library, a cafeteria and student center, and a field house and gymnasium. At Maryville, the needs are three new dormitories, student center, new or expanded library facilities, a physical education building, and a new language laboratory. Some of these projects are already under way at both schools.

Maryville College and Tusculum College will share the funds on the basis of their full-time enrollments this fall.

Copeland on Committee

Members of the College Fund Committee, which is composed of both ministerial and lay leaders in churches in the Synod, plus Synod staff members and administrative personnel from both schools, constitute the committee. Ex-officio members of the committee are Dr. Douglas G. Trout, President of Tusculum College; and Dr. Joseph J. Copeland, President of Maryville College, plus the Directors of Development of both institutions.

Synod churches to participate

Mr. William Walker, a member of the Committee who is also the Stated Clerk of the Synod of Mid-South, will inform the churches of the plans for the campaign as they develop. The campaign for funds is to be conducted in and by the churches, although it is to be an individual solicitation of church members for the support of higher education and not part of the church budgets.

The campaign for the support of Maryville and Tusculum in the Synod of Mid-South has been discussed for some time. The Synod includes all of Tennessee, Mississippi, and Alabama, Southwestern Virginia, Western North Carolina, and North Georgia.

Enrollment Facts Given by Registrar's Office

The enrollment for the first semester 1965-66 at Maryville College stands at a total of 812 students. With transfer students included in each class figure, there are 124 seniors, 161 juniors, 205 sophomores, 320 freshmen, and 2 special students.

Approximately 700 applications for admission were received this year, and out of that number only 311 new students were enrolled.

Seventy-eight per cent of the freshman class ranked in the upper one half of their graduating classes. The average scores from the placement tests given during Orientation Week ran 496 in Verbal and 506 in Math, which is a slight increase over last year's average scores.

Of the 276 new students in the freshman class, 144 are women and 132 are men. This is an increase in the number of men over the class that entered last year.

The freshman class represents 32 different states, 3 foreign countries, and 17 denominations and religions.

Calendar Changed

Through an error, the calendar listing in the 1965-66 Catalog says that Christmas holidays end on Wednesday, Jan. 4, at 8 a.m.

The Jan. 4 date is correct, but the day is Tuesday. This is called to the attention of students planning their Christmas holidays which will end Tuesday, Jan. 4, 1966, at 8 a.m.

HOMECOMING SCHEDULE

EDITORIAL OUTLOOK

Campus reactions to Homecoming are kind of funny. Some ignore it like the rest of the year; others live it with late nights and those infernal paper napkins cut and stuffed; still others like it just a little but hate-to-admit-it-because-it-might-be-childish-and-we-had-better-wait-to-see-what-everyone-else-is-doing-before-we-commit-ourselves.

We wonder now what it will be that we remember come Alumni Day 1985 or even 1966. Maybe it will be the marigolds that got out of hand and had to be roped back . . . maybe the walnut that hit us on the back of the head (and never mind the editorial "we") . . . maybe the teacher that didn't bother to prepare for class . . . maybe the late night, unfair tests, rainy mornings . . . maybe the ever-losing football team . . . maybe the dorm bells that ring for nothing at 6 p.m. . . . maybe the soccer team that ceased to be . . . maybe a thousand unpleasantries related to college life.

Or maybe, just maybe, we'll remember the spirit of a president who wears an orange and garnet tie . . . the choir's "Jubilate" before Vespers . . . the kid who said "It's getting pretty bad when I don't cut chapel because I like it" . . . Sunday steaks . . . Senior pep rallies . . . the beauty of a Chilhowee autumn.

SCOTTY LASSIE

by Sue Foreman

Presenting the Maryville band's "Highland Lassie," Miss Brenda Laipply. Brenda hails from Mansfield, Ohio, where she was one of eight high school majorettes for four years. This is her first year as a solo majorette.

Brenda does a number of different routines including ones with flags, fire, pompoms, and hat and cane, in addition to marching and twirling.

As a special half-time attraction tonight Brenda and Drum Major John "Boom Boom" Campbell will do a duo-baton routine to the music of "With a Little Bit of Luck."

Brenda, a freshman, plans to major in elementary education.

Surprise Announcement of Groundbreaking Made By President Copeland

Three new dormitories, one for men and two for women, will be built immediately on the Maryville College campus by the Tipton and Reynolds Construction Co. of Alcoa, President Joseph J. Copeland announced yesterday.

Groundbreaking ceremonies marking the start of the construction will be held at 5:30 p.m. today as part of the Homecoming celebration this weekend. The ceremonies will be held near the present Margaret Bell Lloyd Residence for Women. Three gold shovels will be used, one for each building. Representatives from the contractor and the architect will be on hand, along with several representatives from the College.

The dormitories were designed by Barber and McMurry of Knoxville, and will provide housing for 366 new students. Total cost will be about $1,900,000.

The expansion, first since the construction of the present Lloyd Residence Hall in 1959, is in response to growing enrollment. The new buildings are part of a planned expansion of the College outlined in the $7,000,000 Sesquicentennial Development Program.

DIARIA

by Jim Gifford

The Indian summer that descended upon Maryville College was much the same as when Isaac Anderson founded our fair institution. As a matter of fact, our fair institution was much the same, too. The Freshmen were soon filled in on the Maryville facts of life: Don't smoke, drink, drive cars, stay out late, or make noise. Please, Please don't get married or have a vending machine on campus, without the expressed written consent of the faculty. Go to chapel . . .Keep the Sabbath but return everything else to the Lost and Found Dept. Above all, accept responsibility. With this in mind, they set out to achieve the goals which all good freshmen achieve. They went to class every morning and during class they wrote letters home asking for more money. In the afternoon they tried, as best they could, to get a good sun tan. At night they played their guitars, took long walks, sharpened their ping-pong game and forgot to study.

First it was the homing pigeon, then the Buffalo and now the second-semester freshman who isn't on academic probation. They're all becoming extinct.

Moral of the story: sometimes it is easier to get out of college than it is to get in . . .

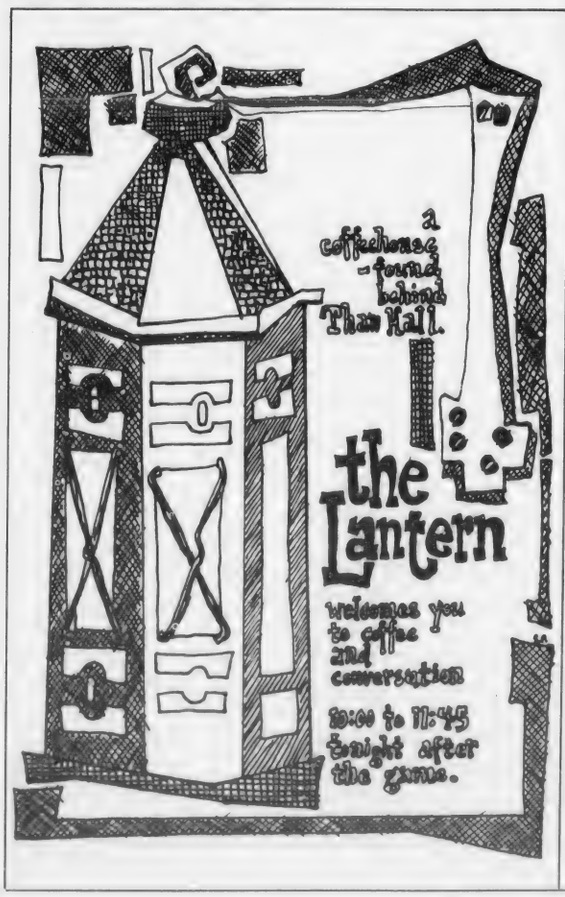
The Artists Series opened October 15 with an excellent concert featuring Walter Carringer, tenor. Accompanied by Nancy Wright of Spartanburg, South Carolina, Mr. Carringer presented an interesting program that was as diverse as it was enjoyable.

The first group of songs by Baroque composers was expertly performed. The agility and flexibility demanded from these works was effortlessly delivered and the brilliance and clarity of each sound was distinct, even to the twenty-fifth row.

The German songs in the second group and particularly the Mozart aria in the third group were especially outstanding musically. Being one of the most difficult of recital groups, these German pieces were mastered by the controlled and steady flow of breath required to generate the solidarity of the music as well as the language.



Particularly enjoyable was the last group containing the songs of contemporary composers. "Alleluia," by Ned Rorem ended the program. Its difficulty was easily discarded by the vivacious tenor.

The music in itself is exciting, but the interpretation and life put into it by Mr. Carringer made it simply fascinating. His poise on the stage and rapport with the audience were excellent, and the relaxed manner in which he conducted the program made him easy to listen to. The enthusiastic concert-goers applauded him for three encores.

Chapel Chortles

(Statement made at chapel Saturday, October 9, 1965 by President Joseph J. Copeland)

As I sat at breakfast on this particular morning, these thoughts flashed across my mind and since they did I concluded, why not let them flash verbally. So at the last minute I let go at the close of the announcement period at Chapel.

"What a challenging week to be an editor of the Echo!"
Were I such an editor there are three stories I would write:
Story Number 1: The word drooling Alan Drury directly and definitively defined Washington, D. C., B.C., A.D.
Mr. Drury dreamed that Mr. Johnson died and went to heaven — unexpectedly. There was a great commotion. Explosion after explosion occurred. God didn't like the idea of being Vice-President.
Story Number 2: Headlines; "Freshmen elect officers!"
Subhead: "Freshwomen elect the Dean's Office!"
Story Number 3: Headlines; "The Womenfolk Arrive on Campus."
Subhead: "Student Council Goes Broke! I mean, the Student Council Goes For Broke."
Conclusion: Now abideth Drury, Johnson, God, Freshmen, and the Womenfolk; but the funniest of these are the Women, folk.

"Are you ready?" SNAP, SNAP. CLAP, CLAP . . . Thus begins each cheer for the Scotties' team.

The cheering squad this year is composed of three juniors, three sophomores, and two freshmen. It includes captain, Fran Lantz, an English major from Knoxville; Becky Smith, a sociology major from St. Cloud, Florida; Linda McClain, an elementary education major from Knoxville; and Donna Nettle, an elementary education major from Newtown Square, Pennsylvania.

Their partners are Andy Ruhlin, an English major from Trenton, New Jersey; Bill Baird from Claremont, California; Tex Harris, a history major from Amarillo, Texas, and Craig Rigell from Baltimore, Maryland.

The cheerleaders are very pleased with the crowd response this year, especially the intense class spirit. They have been working on a number of new cheers which will be used at tonight's Homecoming game for the first time. Several of these new cheers call for a lot of muscle and gymnastics on the part of the squad members.

With such an enthusiastic crowd, led by the band and cheerleaders, we can really cheer our team on to victory over Guilford tonight. "LET'S HAVE A HOWIE, HOWIE. ARE YOU READY?"

"The farther backward you can look, the farther forward you are likely to see."

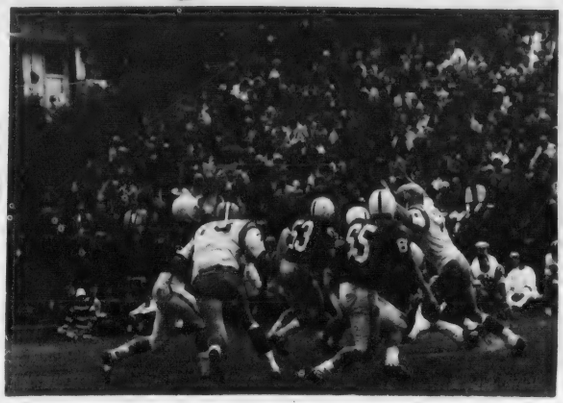
Homecoming Tilt With Guilford Tonight

Scots Play Tough But Feel Stinger Go Deep as Wasps Emerge Victorious

The Maryville Scots dropped their fourth straight encounter to Emory and Henry Saturday, October 9, 13-12. The determined Scots, playing by far their best game so far, defeated the Wasps everywhere but on the scoreboard as freshman quarterback Harvey "Butch" Crabtree and his classmate, 138 pound tailback Bob Bosco spearheaded the Scot attack. Bosco was awarded the Amos Alonzo Stagg award for his efforts.

Scots Score First

The Maryville gridmen grabbed a 6-0 lead in the second period when Crabtree passed six yards to paydirt to Mike Dalton to climax a seventy yard drive. The Scots had taken the opening kickoff and driven for a touchdown only to have it nullified by a penalty. The Wasps drove sixty yards and converted to take a 7-6 halftime lead.



The spirited Scots stormed back in the third quarter and once again took the lead on a two yard pass from Crabtree to junior end Sonny Webb. The same combination failed in the try for the two point conversion. The Wasps scored in the same period to clinch the victory 13-12.

Offense Sharp

The Scots amassed 305 yards total offense. Bosco accounted for 105 yards on the ground as Crabtree completed 11 out of 22 passes for 142 yards. Maryville's perennially strong defense held the Wasps to a 206 yard total.

The offensive line was particularly impressive and the blocking crisp. The defensive team, returning a punt, enabled Mike Dalton to go 55 yards before he was finally stopped. Jim Pryor's key block taking out three men was to no avail as the play was called back on a disputed clipping penalty.

The satistics:	Maryville	E. & H.
First Downs	16	9
Yards rushing	163	112
Yards passing	142	94
Passes attempted	22	10
Passes completed	11	6
Punting average	34.3	36.9
Penalties	65	20
Passes intercepted by	2	3

Freshman quarterback "Butch" Crabtree (12) launches a third quarter touchdown pass to Sonny Webb against Emory and Henry, as Joe Dawson (65) and Shan Harris (53) give vital protection. The touchdown was to no avail as the Wasps scored in the same period to win 13-12.

Bob Bosco (42) and Mike Dalton (25), shown here in action against Emory and Henry, will be counted on heavily in tonight's Homecoming contest with Guilford. The kickoff is slated for 8 p.m.

Intramural Race Tight

The first complete week of flagball competition saw Alpha Sigma's highly touted Sledgehammers successfully defend their champion standing. The Sledges ran their string of wins to thirteen straight as they notched up impressive victories. Alpha Sigma's other team, the Hammers, made Kappa Phi's Squires their first victims. The Squires have lost to all the teams in the league. The final round of play in the first half of the intramural season saw the Sledgehammers on top with a record of three wins against no losses. The Knights of Kappa Phi were in second place with a 2-1 record. The Hammers claimed third place and the Squires rounded off the league.

The second round began with renewed vigor. The top two teams squared off again with the Knights emerging victorious from their second encounter. Other league play found the Squires pitted against the Hammers, the Knights against the Squires and the Hammers against the Sledgehammers. This completes the first half slate with the possibility existing for a play-off game between the Knights and the Sledges for the championship of first half competition. The season's second half will commence Monday, October 25. All games will be scheduled according to the team standings at the end of the first half.

Maryville Succumbs to Livingston Tigers As Scots Drop Fifth Straight

The Maryville Scots journeyed 400 miles to be the opposition in Livingston State's annual homecoming game in Livingston, Alabama. State's Tigers proved too much for the Scots, who are still looking for their initial victory of the '65 campaign.

Livingston jumped to an early 3 point advantage by virtue of a 20 yard field goal in the first period.

The Tigers poured it on in the second sequence, scoring twice more to roll up a 17 point advantage at intermission. The Scots, unable to get going, never really penetrated the tough Tiger defense and were hampered by interceptions and mental errors.

Livingston scored once in each of the final quarters to walk off with a 30-0 victory. This evened the series at one game apiece with Maryville winning last year's tilt. David Berry and Jim Pryor were Maryville's bright spots on defense.

Progressive Spirit in Cades Cove

by Faith Scotchmer

Ignorant? Backward? Uncultured? Are our modern day concepts of the Tennessee mountain people correct? Has literature given us a true picture of these people whose descendents are still living in our area today? Dr. A. Randolph Shields, head of the Biology Department at Maryville, was born and raised in Cades Cove. Recently he wrote an article for the Tennessee Historical Quarterly which clarifies the spirit of the early settler and brings us up to date on what is presently happening in the area.

Vigorous spirit evident

Dr. Shields sees the progressive spirit that dominated pioneer life and enabled them to overcome impossible odds as a valuable heritage still evident today. The preservation of log cabins and primitive atmosphere is secondary to the remembrance of their vigorous spirit, a spirit not based on stagnation and ignorance.

Shields' relative early settler

Vivid descriptions of the early settlers are given and include such interesting people as William "Fighting Billy" Tipton, a shrewd business operator who accumulated 200 acres of flat land; Peter Cable, who set up a telephone system in the cove; and Frederick Shields (Dr. Shields' great-grandfather), who had sixteen children and a dining room table twenty-four feet long!

It seems strange to us that there was a time when approximately three million visitors a year did not make their way through the area. Dr. Shields goes into the events that occured in the process of making Cades Cove a part of the Greater Smoky Mountain National Park. Instead of destroying old homes and changing the land back to its "natural" state, the Park Commission realized that unless the mountain culture was preserved, much of its charm would be lost.

Pioneer satisfaction found

Upon visiting the Cove today, one cannot escape the spirit that must have prevailed in the life of each settler. Dr. Shields believes that the "beautiful valley, is and will remain, the same soul-satisfying attraction it was to the pioneers of over a century ago, but to a completely different people living a completely different type of life. However the fact that it does attract visitors from all over the world seems to indicate that innately we like to get the same pioneer satisfaction of mountain quietness."

This article may be found in the magazine section of our library, Tennessee Historical Quarterly, summer edition (1965).

Painting Given to the College

A gift of a painting attributed to Joseph Mallord William Turner, British painter and member of the British Royal Academy, has been made to Maryville College. The donor prefers to remain anonymous.

The College's use of the gift is unrestricted, and the painting can be sold at some future date and the income used for any College project. This gift brings to five the number of paintings given to the College by this donor, who earlier gave a Goya portrait, two rural scenes by Zucharelli, and one by Gainsborough.

Turner's painting, called "Bacchanal," was probably painted in 1838 while the artist lived in Italy.

"The worst sin toward our fellow creatures is not to hate them, but to be indifferent to them: that's the essence of inhumanity."

Vol. 51 Maryville College, Maryville, Tennessee, November 6, 1965 No. 5

Echo to Sponsor Vietnam Week

Forum to be November 11

The final event in the Echo-sponsored week of emphasis on the Vietnam crisis will be a Student-Faculty Forum to be held on Thursday, November 11, at 8 p.m. in the Fine Arts Center Music Hall. In the face of rampant rumor and unfounded opinion, the newspaper staff has thought it necessary to promote a deeper campus understanding of the issues involved. The Forum will present both Administrative policy in Vietnam and the reasons for recent vocal protests throughout the country. The views expressed will be in an effort to discuss intelligently both sides of the American problem without necessarily leading to a definite conclusion.

Moderated by senior biology major John Mulholland, the panel members representing the faculty will be Dr. Phillip Griffin, Associate Professor of Philosophy; and Dr. David P. Young, Assistant Professor of Chemistry. Rev. Dale Watson, assistant minister, New Providence Presbyterian Church, will also participate.

Students participating on the panel will be Bill Erwin, senior history major; Paul Millin, senior political science major; and Dale Schellinger, senior history major.

The Forum is open to the public, and there will be an opportunity for discussion following the panel's presentation.

Summer Jobs Offered

Every student in America can get a summer job in Europe and a travel grant by applying directly to the European headquarters of the American Student Information Service in Luxembourg. Jobs are much the same as student summer work in the U. S. with employers offering work periods ranging from three weeks to permanent employment.

Lifeguarding, office work, resort-hotel jobs, factory, construction, camp counseling and farm work are only a few categories to be found among the 20,000 jobs ASIS has on file. An interesting summer pastime not found in America is tutoring. Numerous well-to-do European families are inviting American college students to spend the summer with them and teach their children English.

Wages range to $400 a month, and in most cases neither previous experience nor knowledge of a foreign language is required. ASIS, in its ninth year of operation, will place more American students in summer jobs in Europe this summer than ever before.

Students interested in working in Europe next summer may write directly to Dept. II, ASIS, 22 Ave. de la Liberte, Luxembourg City, Grand Duchy of Luxembourg, enclosing $2 for the ASIS 36-page booklet which contains all jobs, wages, working conditions, etc., job and travel grant applications, and to cover the cost of handling and overseas air mail postage.

Echo Asks for Books

by Jane Brenckman

Very few Americans other than the families of the men in Vietnam posses an awareness of the urgent hopes, fears, and needs of our soldiers. Martha Raye, world-acclaimed comedienne, is one of this embarrassingly small number. She has attained this astute understanding from direct experience with the situation. While she continues to maintain her professional career, she has devoted much time and effort in Vietnam entertaining the American troops there.

This summer, as she toured various parts of the country in a dramatic leading role, Miss Raye made a special plea at the close of the play's final act. She informed the audience that she was preparing to return to Vietnam and suggested that there was one way in which those of us at home could demonstrate to the American soldiers in Vietnam our pride and appreciation. Surprising as it may seem, our soldiers would most enjoy receiving paperback books.

As a vital part of the emphasis on Vietnam encouraged by the Echo, a collection of some of the thousands of extra books on campus will be made. From Monday to Thursday staff members will be canvasing door-to-door in an effort to lend some lift to the morale of the American forces. For assistance with mailing and packaging expense, the faculty and staff will be contacted.

The effort required here is minimal; the results can be of great impact.

'Oklahoma' to be Shown

Mark November twentieth as an important date to remember, for this is the night of the Sophomore class movie. At 8:00 P.M. Rogers and Hammerstein's well-known musical Oklahoma will make its debut on our campus. It costs only 25 cents for card-carrying sophomores and 50 cents for all others, so plan to attend this delightful show at very reasonable prices.

The second presentation of the 1965-66 Lecture Series on November 19 will bring to the campus the former prime minister of Hungary, Ferenc Nagy.

Presidential Petition to be Circulated

The Maryville College Circle K message to the President is presented to interest students and faculty in the campus issue of involvement in Vietnam. An invitation to sign this statement is extended to all students and faculty members. This will coordinate with the Echo's sponsorship of a student-faculty forum and book drive. Before the message is sent to the President, photostatic copies will be made to mail to the American forces in Vietnam.

To the Honorable Lyndon Baines Johnson, President of the United States of America.

We, the undersigned Faculty and Students of Maryville College, are opposed to the principle of war, and we affirm our belief that lasting peace among nations can be achieved only through continued negotiation in the spirit of Christian love and tolerance. Moreover, we affirm our confidence in the integrity and judgment of the leaders of our nation in their commitments to the cause of world peace. We recognize, however, that a peace-loving nation may at times be compelled to resist with military force the aggression of other nations even as it seeks negotiation.

For this reason we view with concern the actions of demonstrators against the United States' involvement in Vietnam, the demoralizing effects these demonstrations could produce on the spirit of our fighting men, and the encouragement the demonstrators thus offer to the Communists.

We hereby attest to our active support of our nation's stand in this crisis, and we do express the hope that our position may be so understood around the world as to assure every living person that Americans stand united in their defense of freedom and, under God's guidance, will continue to strive for "liberty and justice for all" until that goal is achieved.

Chilhowean Picture Schedule Announced

Today, November 6, the following groups have been scheduled to have their pictures taken for the 1966 Chilhowean. The staff asks every member of each organization to be present at the place designated at least five minutes prior to the scheduled time.

2:00 Band — Band room

2:55 Alpha Sigma — Chapel steps
3:15 Chi Beta — Chapel steps

4:05 Circle K — Memorial steps
4:20 Echo — Thaw steps
4:35 SNEA — Thaw steps

All organizations not photographed this afternoon will be contacted and scheduled for a convenient time within the next three weeks.

by Paul Millin

In the past few weeks there has been much said about the "New Left," the latest and most vocal of the groups that opposes the effort in Vietnam, and the "students" that make it up. This small but very vocal minority has been appointed by the national press to speak for American college students in general. The "New Left" has accepted this appointment and has been leading "parades" and "demonstrations" from Berkeley to Chicago to Washington. They wear skulls, beat drums, and sing a song written for the occasion comparing the President to Hitler and Stalin.

Is this group of draft dodgers, mis-led pacifists, pseudo-intellectuals, and communist organizers going to be allowed to speak for American students? They have given Hanoi, Peking, and, worst of all, the American soldiers fighting and dying in the jungles of Vietnam the impression that they do speak for us.

It is difficult for one to imagine the morale of men risking their lives daily to uphold American national honor when they hear that their friends back home are parading in the streets to give aid and comfort to the enemy.

No one questions that these people have a right to parade and demonstrate if they want. But if they have a right, we, the vast majority of college students, have an obligation — to make our true sentiments known in Hanoi and Peking, and especially in that jungle foxhole. We on this campus have an obligation to make our feelings known, not particularly in some parade or demonstration aimed at impressing the communists, but we do owe it to the boys in the foxholes to let them know how we feel.

There are those who will say that this is merely jumping on the bandwagon, because there are already movements beginning on other campuses across the country to back the war in Vietnam. But is it wrong to stand and be counted just because you weren't the first to stand? We think it's high time Maryville College students were counted.

Education Week Outlined

by Helen Griffin

The theme of American Education Week is "Invest in Learning," which comes from Benjamin Franklin's statement, "An investment in knowledge always pays the best interest." During this week of November 7-13, each day has been set aside to examine a different area of education: Sunday, Moral and Spiritual Values; Monday, Cultivation of Intellect; Tuesday, Enhancement of Personal Fulfillment; Wednesday, Improvement of Earning Powers; Thursday, Development of Good Citizenship; Friday, Enrichment of Family and Community Life; and Saturday, Development of International Understanding.

During this week it is hoped that each student and faculty member will examine his intellectual life to see that all these aspects of education are included in it.

The Student National Education Association also invites all students and faculty to visit one of the public schools in the Maryville area. It is the belief of the SNEA that an understanding of what the children do, of the curriculum and of the program in the schools will lead towards a better informed public. There will also be a series of displays on campus for the viewing and enjoyment of all.

Membership in the SNEA is open to all students interested in education. During this year programs on discipline, retarded children, Student Teaching and other topics have been planned. All are cordially invited to the meetings.

Playhouse Meeting Held

by Marty Miller

The second meeting of the Playhouse was held Thursday night, October 28. The business meeting began with election of officers: president, Joanne Gidley; vice-president, Celia Tiffany; secretary-treasurer, Donna Moss. A program chairman will be appointed by the officers. The activities for the coming year were also discussed.

The guest speaker was Mr. Maxwell from the advertising department of WBIR. He explained some aspects of movie - making and before his speech ran the first reel of the "Ladykillers" as a sneak preview.

Mr. Maxwell described the montage process used by Disney in "Mary Poppins." This process allows live actors to be put in cartoon sequences and can also be used for a flying effect. He gave examples of special photography effects such as those used in the opening title for "Theater X."

Refreshments were served after the program in the back stage area.

Playhouse membership is open to anyone interested in any aspect of theater: make-up, lighting, construction, painting, costumes, props, writing, directing, and acting. No experience is required, just willingness to work and have fun.

EDITORIAL OUTLOOK

Too many times this week there have been letters from friends asking about our Thanksgiving plans. To each the reply has been a rather bitter, "Well, as a matter of fact, I thought I'd go to chapel a couple of times, four or five classes, Barnwarming, etc." You know the answer: "Barnwarming???" That is the initial shock; then there is the matter of chapel and classes . . . not on Thanksgiving Day, to be sure, but it's about this Thanksgiving weekend thing.

We vaguely remember something special about our Freshman Thanksgiving—a four-day holiday, perhaps? Those were the good old days: time to sleep, cram, type, travel, play bridge, and the other necessities somewhat limited in the course of an ordinary college week. Those who had the money went to the Student Center; those who didn't went to Florida.

There is always the danger of appearing ungrateful for the one day vacation that we do have. We have heard for several years about the time when students protested having a pagan May Day holiday when required to go to classes on Good Friday. The problem was quickly remedied: no more May Day. Yikes!

Surely it is true that faculty and administration want and need this short break in a long semester just as much as we do. If so, then what's the problem?

Theatre Tidbits

by Sandy Combs and Karen James

Tom Jones, director of the theatre at Maryville College, in the throes of producing the first play of the 1965-66 season, Mourning Becomes Electra, paused momentarily to make these brief comments on his past and present work in the theatre.

Echo — What was your experience in a large university?

Mr. Jones: I was technical director at the University of North Dakota.

Echo — What were your reasons for coming to Maryville College?

Mr. Jones: I wanted to work in a small liberal arts college. Several of my friends graduated from Maryville College.

Echo — Do you have any comments about the theatre?

Mr. Jones: I'm hopeful that students will be interested and willing to work in theatre program. The Maryville College Theatre is one of the best equipped in the South.

Mice!

Brown, Ronco form team in August; Maietta accepted on family recommendation; Hunt and Greene increase trio to five—five musicians who are mice—The Great Mice. Maryville's newest instrumental group, The Great Mice, will be officially rated as professionals after their November 24 engagement at the Senators' Club, even though their performances at MC dances and parties have already earned them the reputation of being as good as professionals.

Al Brown and Dave Ronco, the group's originators, play complementary guitars, with Dave on lead and Al on bass. Before coming to Maryville from Summit, New Jersey, Al played with the Vectors and acquired experience then to qualify him as business manager for The Mice. His future plans include a career as a veterinarian and possibly a trip to England. New Jerseyean Dave Ronco first played the saxaphone and later taught himself to play the guitar. A physical education major, he intends to go to Rutgers for a graduate degree in educational administration.

Another New Jersey man, Darrell Maietta, was recommended to Al and Dave by his cousin John Maietta. Darrell adds the polished sounds of the organ to Mice music. Jim Hunt and Doug Greene both joined The Mice after hearing practice sessions here at Maryville, Jim plays rhythm guitar; and Doug, the drums.

All five sing, but with only three microphones available, Al, Dave, and Doug take the lead as vocalists. Spokesman Al Brown says The Mice enjoy most entertaining at big dances and have the most fun playing More, Money, and Surfer Girl.

Last week's winner of the Amos Alonzo Stagg Award, Scot co-captain Mike Dalton will figure heavily in tonight's contest.

Guilford Quakers Foil Scots' Annual Homecoming Tilt

The Maryville College Scots dropped their sixth game in as many outings to Guilford as an enthusiastic Homecoming crowd looked on.

27-0 at halftime

The Scots received the opening kickoff and marched down the field only to have their impressive drive bog down on the fifteen. Sonny Hughes' field goal attempt was short and speedy Guilford halfback Danny McQueen broke the Scots' back as he went 87 yards to score. The Quakers scored three times in the second period to command a 27-0 lead at the half.

Maryville returned from intermission and quickly scored on a twelve yard pass from Harvey Crabtree to Mike Dalton. Fullback Keith Baily was the big gun in the Scots' drive.

Dutton and Story sidelined

Guilford struck twice in the fourth quarter to end the game 39-6. Defensive stalwarts Gary Dutton and Don Story were lost for the remainder of the campaign. Dutton, a 255 pound tackle, sustained a chipped knee while Story, 190 pound linebacker and defensive captain suffered an undetermined knee injury. Both will be sorely missed by the Scot defensive unit.

Sig's Sledges Are Intramural Aces

In intramural football the past two weeks, there was a dominance of the league by Alpha Sigma's teams, the Sledgehammers and the Hammers.

The Sledges defeated Kappa Phi's Knights in a high scoring contest, 39-33. Sig's golden boys were led by end Big John Agnew, who scored three touchdowns on 40, 10 and 8 yard pass plays. Quarterback Dick Craig notched up three tallies as he hit paydirt on runs of 60, 15, and 5 yards. The Sledgehammers capitalized on the Knights numerous mistakes as they took advantage of an onsides kick and interceptions and turned them into points.

The Knights' Lynn Howard was again the man to stop as he rambled through his own backfield picking out his receivers when they were open.

Scots Succumb to Millsaps for Loss Number Seven

Maryville dropped their seventh consecutive game of the year to Millsaps College in Jackson, Mississippi, by a 28-13 margin.

Hughes converts

Major halfback Tommy Dickerson proved too much for the Scots as he scored three times. Millsaps combined a strong running game with an effective passing attack to defeat the Scots.

Maryville scored in the second period when sophomore tailback Danny Rogers bolted over from three yards out to climax a long drive. Sonny Hughes converted for the point after touchdown.

Dalton runs 85 yards

Down 28-7 at intermission, the Scots came roaring back as captain Mike Dalton took the second half kickoff and returned it 85 yards to the Major five yard line. Quarterback Herman Ramsey sneaked in for the tally. The kick was wide and the score remained 28-13.

Maryville's defense held Millsaps at bay for the remainder of the contest, but the damage was done and number seven went down the drain.

The Scots play host to a strong Mars Hill College team tonight at 8:00 and will be long overdue for win number one. Mars Hill was defeated in last year's contest 6-0.

In other contests the Hammers of Alpha Sigma tied Kappa Phi's Squires 13-13. Sig quarterback Dave Spencer led the scoring in that game with two touchdowns.

Roundballers Edge Faculty All-Stars

by Lynn St. Clair

Saturday evening, October 30, the Faculty All-Stars met the Varsity basketball team in the first annual Faculty-Varsity clash. Entering the game as underdogs, the hustling Faculty stayed even with the Varsity for three periods, only to lose in the final second of play, 82-23.

Precision Unit

The condition of the faculty and their fine all-around play gave evidence of many long hours of practice. The team worked their numerous plays to perfection and their precision passing constantly had the varsity off balance.

Ramger, Hileman Star

Leading the scoring for the faculty was Big Bob Ramger (14) and A. E. Hileman (3). Mr. Hileman highlighted the game by using a playground ball to shoot fouls and by scoring once at an off court basket. Captain Denny McGowen led the Varsity.

Students Get Preview

Following the faculty game, the Varsity held an intersquad scrimmage. Those fans that stayed, were treated to a look at what is quite possibly the best team Maryville has had in recent years. With five returning lettermen and the addition of several new members, team members feel they can have a winning season. Freshmen Les (6'6") Dunson and Lynn Raby looked especially good. The Scots still have a full month of practice in preparation for the season's opener December 2 at Bryan College.

Sox 'n Sneakers

by Jean Ferguson

Fall Retreat for Women's "M" Club was Saturday and Sunday, October 9 and 10. While camping at Cades' Cove, we planned the intramural program for this year.

Ping pong and horseshoes underway

The field hockey tournament was won by Theta Epsilon with a score of five to four. Ping pong and horseshoes are now being played and all participants are asked to see the bulletin board in the intramural gym to learn who they play and the deadlines for their matches. Please remember that if the match has not been played by the date specified, a forfeit is in order. Rules for both ping pong and horseshoes are posted in the gym.

After several soccer scrimmage and tournament games which began October 26, the competition looks keen between Chi Beta and Theta Epsilon. The winner of the tournament will be determined the same as field hockey in that the team with the highest accumulative score wins.

The Art of Living

It could have been favorite Uncle Artie just dropping by for a visit with the young'uns, but it wasn't—it was Art Linkletter speaking to an attentive group composed mainly of students on October 21 as the first program of the U-T Forum series.

Bible reading and commercials

Mr. Linkletter charmed the entire audience with his beaming homey personality. He told of his rise from boyhood life as the son of an itinerant Baptist minister to the TV personality of today. As a boy he used to have to read the Bible aloud to his father (who knew it by heart) for an hour a day, all the time thinking of playing baseball and the good times he was missing. Today he realizes this was a valuable experience—he is able to read his commercials with utmost sincerity.

Linkletter intended to become an English teacher but took a radio announcing job instead because it paid $125 a month, not $120 (this for a 60 hour-a-week job—and we thought student help wages were bad). He figures over the years the decision has made $450 more dollars for him —at least.

Actually, at fifty-three, Linkletter has been in a high income bracket for twenty years. Twenty years of pestering by the Internal Revenue Service. He plans to have his body cremated and sent to the IRS in an envelope with a note, "Now you have it all!"

Thinking man important

Art Linkletter had a little to say about almost everything — his view that man will not use the bomb, his support as an American of declared government policies, specifically that in Vietnam, and the belief that machines will never replace the "thinking man" (despite the Berkeley student who wasn't known to exist until he bent his IBM card).

He urged students to regard their college diplomas as licenses to further learning—the only hope for "staying alive."

Caring is what matters

He gives two challenging questions to ask oneself, "What needs to be done?" and "How can I help do it?"

"Caring makes the difference," he said, caring and, "something to work for, something to love, something to hope for." In possessing these, one will "master the art of living."

The audience loved Mr. L. they gave him a standing ovation

After the lecture, Linkletter received the audience in the U-T University Center. Dr. Fuhr introduced himself as Dean of Maryville College, a Presbyterian school nearby. As the Fuhrs walked on, a man rushed up to Mr. Linkletter, "As a fellow Baptist I want to welcome you." "Careful," he said, "you're standing next to a Presbyterian." The Fuhrs laughed; Linkletter gave one of his famous winks.

The Lantern

by Sara Parker

Questions are flying as to the nature of future plans for our new coffeehouse, The Lantern. (Perhaps it's time to shed a little light on the subject? . . .)

Maybe "fresh" coffee-house would be a better choice of word here—fresh, in that a change in location (due to extensive problems of basement ventilation and sound) has meant a change in atmosphere and an attempt to keep the basic idea relevant to a unique situation.

Projected plans include being open two or three evenings a week for coffee and other menu specialties of the evening. Programs will be of an undetermined number, as the opportunities and needs arise, all of an informal nature, of as much variety as possible. Decor will tend toward the continental.

A note may be in order here concerning other uses of the facilities: groups and organizations are more than welcome to use the Lantern rooms, including the kitchen, for meetings and parties, when they are not in regular use. However, arrangements must be made through the office of the Dean of Women. Plans are in full swing for much of a rennovation which, we hope, will not be long in coming. Meanwhile, everyone is welcome—the conversation's free!

Ed's note: This is the first in a series of old sentimental pictures to be published in each issue. If you don't know who this is, watch for the reddest face on your way out of Chapel.

"Gee, Mrs. Ross, did you say 13 stars representing 13 what??"

"And the Armistic Day Ball is at dusk!"

Trampoline available

Something added this year is tumbling and trampoline. The trampoline is new and seldom used and we invite you to come to Bartlett gym on Monday, Tuesday, Thursday, or Friday afternoons from four to five o'clock to take advantage of the opportunity to use this apparatus free of charge. For safety's sake bring some friends with you — they make good spotters and you can take turns jumping.

O'Neill Play Presented by Playhouse

The play generally considered to be Eugene O'Neill's greatest, the monumental "Mourning Becomes Elektra," was presented by the Maryville College Playhouse Friday and Saturday, November 12 and 13, at 8:15 p.m. in the College Theatre. The original play, which was six hours long and had a cast of 20, was cut to about three hours with a cast of 11. Thomas E. Jones was the Director, assisted by student Assistant Director Margaret Shaklee.

In the lead roles were Diane Caylor as Lavinia Mannon and William Klingener as Orin Mannon. Nancy Vann played the part of Christine Mannon, and Keith Jones played Adam Brant. Other roles were taken by John Myers as Seth Beckwith, Carol Vandergriff as Minnie, Sue Donaldson as Louisa Ames, Peter Neale as Amos Ames, Sue Anthony as Hazel Niles, Fred Callies as Peter Niles, and Harry Lyle as Brig. Gen. Ezra Mannon. The Chantyman was Peter Neale.

There were four settings for O'Neill's psychological drama based on the Agamemnon story from ancient Greece with many overtones of contemporary Freudian psychology. The play opened at the Mannon house in Massachusetts at the end of the Civil War, and the scene changed from the exterior to the interior of the house, including a sitting room and bedroom, and then to a clipper ship.

Costumes authentic

Scenery for the Maryville College production, designed by the Playhouse Director, was a series of free-standing sets which could be rolled on and off stage from the wings. The exterior scene of the Mannon house measured 14 x 24 feet and was probably the largest single set ever built in the excellently equipped Maryville College Theatre.

Each of the three acts of the O'Neill play was a separate play, and music was used extensively between the acts. Most of the music was the ballad "Shennandoah" which was specified by the author in the original script. Costumes were authentic for the period, with elaborate dresses of brocade and velvet for the women and Union Army Civil War uniforms for the men.

APPRECIATION EXTENDED

The Editor would like to express her appreciation to those listed here and all others who assisted with the successful Vietnam Week:

More Funds Received

More than $4,000,000 in new resources has been received by Maryville College in the $7,000,000 campaign of the Sesquicentennial Development Program to be concluded in 1969, Director of Development Raymond I. Brahams, Jr., reported to the Board of Directors at their annual fall meeting. The $7,000,000 goal was set for the decade 1960-1970, and the report to the Board was the total received up to last May 31.

New dormitories will be constructed

The Sesquicentennial Program will close May 31, 1970, at the end of the College's 150th anniversary celebration during the 1969-1970 school year.

The key goal in the program, doubling of faculty salaries, has already been met, and increases will continue, Mr. Brahams told the Board. In addition, new science facilities are assured and financial aid to students has been increased. Several new dormitories will be constructed during the coming year.

Total received is $4,028,363

A breakdown of the goal shows that $3,000,000 was needed for current operations, $1,500,000 in additional endowment, and $2,500,000 for capital improvements and new construction. Toward these goals the amounts received are $2,001,230 for current operations, $721,131 in additional endowment, and $583,107 for capital improvements. In addition, $17,500 is unallocated, $21,000 has been given for other special purposes, and $684,305 represents unpaid pledges to the Development Fund Campaign, most of which will eventually be spent for new buildings and equipment. The total received is $4,028,363.

Over $650,000 received by May 31

Meanwhile, full-time enrollment for a full year has risen from 654 in 1958-59 to 772 in 1964-65, and total enrollment this fall is 812.

During the fiscal year which ended last May 31, the College received $655,618.67 in gifts, including cash and real estate.

Queen Mary Simpson and King John Mulholland will reign during Thanksgiving festivities on November 25, including the Honaker Bowl game with Earlham College at 2:30 and Barnwarming at 8:00. Mary, a psychology major, is from Smithfield, Kentucky and John, a biology major is from Youngstown, Ohio.

The 1965-1966 members of Who's Who Among Students in American Colleges and Universities who have been selected by the Maryville College seniors and faculty members are as follows: Sandra Briggs, Elizabeth Brown, Carole Brownlee, Sandra Chittick, Louise Crawford, Michael Dalton, David Ellison, William Erwin, Marianne Jefferson, Hugh McCampbell, Sara Parker, Richard Reed, Keith Renne, Dale Schellenger, Lewright Sikes, Reed Tarwater, and Oliver Williams.

Qualifications necessary for election

Who's Who Among Students In American Universities and Colleges was started in the school year 1934-1935. The organization began with the idea of creating one national basis of recognition for college students that would be democratic and devoid of dues.

Election by Who's Who means that a student is officially recognized by his college or university and by the national organization. Nominations may be submitted by any four-year degree-granting institution. College juniors, seniors and graduate students are eligible for nominations. The selection usually involves a student's scholarship, his leadership and co-operation in educational and extracurricular activities, his general citizenship, and his promise of future usefulness.

Plane Chartered for Philadelphia

This Christmas, as last spring vacation, Maryville College will have a chartered plane round-trip to Philadelphia, Pa. The contract this year is with Delta Airlines. The cost to the student will save approximately $20 on a coach class ticket and $30 on a first class fare. The capacity is seventy-seven (77) passengers on a DC-7 aircraft. Seats will be given on a first come basis. A deposit of $10 will hold a reservation, with the balance due by December 5. Total cost for the round-trip flight and the chartered bus to and from the campus is $57.60. The Treasurer's Office is handling the reservations.

If you are needing only a one-way ticket, come in and sign-up. You will be paired with someone who needs the other half of your reservation. The one-way cost is $28.80. We can also arrange for connections to New York, Boston, and points beyond Philadelphia if you will leave your request when making your reservation.

If you have any additional questions, see either Dave Conklin or Fred Abramoff.

Dr. Young to be Visiting Lecturer

Dr. David P. Young, Assistant Professor of Chemistry at Maryville College, has been selected as a lecturer for the Visiting Scientist Program of the Tennessee Academy of Science. The program, supported by the National Science Foundation, provides scientists, engineers, and mathematicians who visit secondary schools to discuss scientific topics and projects with students, teachers and administrators.

High schools are encouraged to invite the visiting scientists, and Dr. Young has so far been invited to the Cocke County High School in Newport for a visit in February, 1966.

The program is designed to stimulate an interest in science on the part of the students and offer support and professional advice to high school teachers.

Six New Members Admitted to Tau Kappa Chi

by Mary Rucker

Tau Kappa Chi, the honorary music society of Maryville College, wishes to announce the admittance of six new members to its organization. They are Alice Junken, Carol Pucey, Jim Breckenridge, Joe Henry, Lee Sikes, and Mike Shaver.

The name Tau Kappa Chi is formed by the Greek letters which stand for a phrase meaning "the beautiful is difficult." In order to become a member of the group, a student must have an over-all scholastic average of 2.5 with a 3.00 in music courses. A student majoring in any field is eligible if studying applied music for credit.

New members were given a party on November 4 at the home of Dr. and Mrs. Harter. The music faculty, which votes on the acceptance of members to the organization, was present. Tom Llewellyn, president of Tau Kappa Chi, and secretary Mary Rucker, outlined plans for the year. Besides its regular duties of providing ushers for faculty recitals, Tau Kappa Chi will present a series of seminars led by members of the music faculty. The first of these seminars, all of which pertain to some phase of twentieth century music, will be Thursday night, December 2, with Dr. Bloy leading a discussion on "Contemporary Trends in Liturgical Music."

Forum Set for November 20

A Knoxville Community Forum has been established to discuss international problems by groups of scholarly speakers. The forum chairman is TVA engineer Donald W. Newton. The topic for the first forum will be Red China.

This forum is planned for November 20, at the Church Street Methodist Church. Registration will be from 3:30 p.m. to 4:00 p.m. The four topics and speakers with times of presentation are as follows: "Recent Economic and Political Developments Within Mainland China," by Mr. Arthur Ainsworth, 4:15-4:45; "The Foreign Policy of Mainland China," by Dr. Rhoads Murphey, 5:15-6:00; "American China Policy, Past and Present," by Dr. Ruth Stephens, 8:00-8:00, and "American China Policy: Suggestions for the Future," by Dr. Murphey, 8:30-9:00.

There will be a question and answer period following each speech. A registration fee will be charged to those who attend.

Mrs. Schoen to Give Recital

Sallie Warth Schoen, pianist and assistant professor of music at Maryville College, will present the first in the college's series of faculty recitals at 8:15 p.m., Friday, November 26, in the Music Hall of the Fine Arts Center.

Mrs. Schoen holds the Bachelor of Music degree from Oberlin Conservatory of Music, the Master of Music degree from Indiana University, and is now working toward a Doctor of Music degree in performance at Indiana University.

Her program will include "Duport Variations" by Mozart, "Sonata, Op. 111" by Beethoven, "Cappricio 'On the Departure' " by Bach, and "Symphonic Etudes" by Schuman.

EDITORIAL OUTLOOK

In the last issue's "Seen and Heard," we included a comment that went something like this: "You can read the Knoxville Journal from front to back and never find anything but funnies." Little did we dream at the time that these words would have a special significance again this week.

Those students and faculty members who attended last week's Vietnam forum will understand the point to be made here. Those who didn't will probably be able to figure it out without much trouble.

Present at the forum was a Journal reporter (to use the term very loosely), who subsequently wrote an article that appeared on Saturday, November 13th. It isn't necessary to relate the entire content of the article since the first sentence sums up the tone of the thing pretty well: "Nearly 200 Maryville College students and faculty members last night expressed their opposition to United States involvement in Vietnam in a campus forum." This statement must have come as quite a shock to those people who were unaware they had participated in a calculated effort to undermine American policy. We feel sure that even those two panelists who did express opposition to the Vietnam war would agree that the Journal remarks were completely unjust.

Now then, after working closely since September with our own newspaper, we can understand the temptation to slant news stories to our best advantage. We fail to see, however, that there is an excuse for unadulterated falsehood in the field of journalism.

The Highland Echo sponsored its Vietnam Week because the staff saw a definite need for campus involvement in a world-wide issue. The books were collected and the petition signed to visibly demonstrate this involvement, and the forum was held so that we might all profit from the opinions of others. It is only through such interaction of ideas that we can ever expect to confirm our own beliefs. The forum was just that. No conclusions were reached; none were expected. Things are getting pretty bad when a group of people cannot meet for discussion without being labeled as anti-American by a newspaper determined to oppose whatever vague thing it is they dislike about our school.

Our questions are these: How in the world can we ever be sure of anything we read when there has been an example of such unreponsible reporting so closely affecting us all? How can we possibly respect a newspaper that apparently cares nothing for truth?

Quintet Success

by Sarah Tompkins

The New York Woodwind Quintet in concert here November 5, presented a program of chamber music that was well-received by the student, patron, musician, and faculty audience. Being one of the more uncommon forms of musical expression, chamber music has the delicate flavor that enables it to delight the serious music lover, or provide a gentle means of falling into sophisticated sleep. This group of musicians held the interest of the audience unflinchingly to the end of the concert.

The program began with a light selection by the Mannheim composer, Franz Danzi, and then shifted into the twentieth century with Carl Nielson. Next performed was a concerto by Antonio Vivaldi, and then two works by Milhaud and Hindemith. The selections by twentieth century composers were the most interesting parts of the program and were best received by the audience.

The rapport between the players, so very essential in this type of music was excellent. The sensitivity of each member of the group allowed the instruments to mold themselves into a unified sound and yet the quality of each instrument was easily discernible.

Letters to the Editor

Dear Editor:

I was disturbed by the behavior of the audience during last Friday night's performance of Mourning Becomes Electra. It appears that many people came to see just "a play" — a play being primarily a form of entertainment, not an art form. What they saw on the stage seemed to remind them of a movie or television program — perhaps the Playhouse should sell popcorn.

What is the legitimate theatre — did the compulsive gigglers in that audience have any idea? It's older than "perfect" theatre, where if someone fails to catch a coin the scene can be re-filmed.

I shall be explicit. Some misguided person behind me said "clunk" when a character was shot on the stage. He was rolled over and the person actually came out with another "clunk." Now that boy was not really dead; the person knew that. But

Dear Editor,

It's not because I'm a senior and feel it's my last opportunity for gripes that I'm writing this letter. It's because for the first time in four years I have managed a schedule with no Saturday classes. Now, isn't that great?? Yes, it's just tremendous, especially when one can start it off with "spiritual inspiration at 8:00 a.m."

After two months of Saturday trudging, I decided to go to the office and make sure it was really required. Yes, indeed it was. But this wasn't what really bothered me. The complete irrelevance of the answers I received literally floored me.

In answer to why I had to go:

(1) Well, you live on campus, don't you? (What that had to do with why one should get up for ten minutes of cheering, five minutes of announcements, and one chapter of Psalms, I'll never know.)

Concepts of Praise

Praise,
With its compliments,
Its seeming flattery,
Conveys a world
Of inner warmth
And happiness.
It tends to inspire,
To encourage,
To create an emotion
Of gratitude
Mingled quietly
With a breath of humility.
The barriers of shyness
Are shattered;
The fears of opinion
Are overcome.
And, then,
The miracle of true workmanship
Can begin to show itself.

A Woman's Role

Dear WSGA,

What are you? Are you a radio station? Or are you a ham operator's code letters? You say you are the Women's Student Government Association. Whew! No wonder you use the initials. Who is a member? Every woman on campus, eh? And you are run by a few officers. So they're the ones who planned the supper that Saturday. I could hardly believe that anyone would serve us a free meal. What is it that you called those sloppy joes? Maggie's special. They were delicious. And you gave seconds and thirds too. That was almost too much for me to comprehend.

Then you had that program Sunday night. WSGA has never sponsored a discussion before. What was the book that you used? The Feminine Mystique. Yes, I remember. The author, Betty Friedan, comments on the role of the twentieth century woman. A woman's role is something more that being a housewife. And I'm glad that you asked Dr. Swenson to lead the discussion. She is vitally concerned about the woman's role today.

Is this a one-program-a-year deal? No? Good. I was afraid that you would say yes. You have a series of programs planned? What are the other programs about? Oh, your topic for the series is the role of women today. Ah, I'm beginning to understand. Each program will dwell on a separate aspect of the woman's role. Right? Right. Well, just tell me when the next one is and I'll be there.

Sincerely,
A woman student

GRAYCOURT

by Jim Gifford

Among the recurrent gripes of the last few years is the one about Maryville not preparing us for the "outside world." Whenever I hear this general statement, I'm reminded of the old Middle Tennessee saying: "The Good Lord made us all with the same wonderful ability for being a fool — some of us just exercise it more than others."

How easy it is to get wrapped up in daily life. The well adjusted mind their own business and someone else's too. The mal-adjusted find even more exciting ways to pass the day.

Snap out of it! This school has an obligation to educate you, not to raise you. One has to step out of his own little world before he can really see the outside world.

Below is an excerpt from a letter from a former Maryville College student in Vietnam.

All in all, I'm afraid we're doomed over here. If someone like Nixon or Goldwater were in the White House, our chance might be better. But, as long as we remain in the U.N. and try to fight the same people we support, our chances are ever so slight. Of course LBJ's great society seems to be a haven for the very enemies that we're fighting over here, so if our house isn't clean, it's hard to imagine how we'll ever clean up a country 10,000 miles away. I hear that Marines returning from Vietnam have been killed and beaten up in airports and bus depots by teenagers who protest against our inhumane activity over here against the Vietnamese. If you run across any of those milk-fed idealists, ask them how they'd feel if they saw one of their friends hanging from a tree by his toes with his testacles cut off and stuffed in his mouth. These orientals are unlike the occidentals in numerous respects. Women and children as well as men are part of the V.C. They're very treacherous people who take advantage of us good-hearted, generous Americans, and sometimes we have to do unpleasant things for our own protection. I'm afraid that few Americans actually realize what we're up against.

It kind of makes you wonder how important stinking shoes and brand new shoes, special studies and special buddies really are, doesn't it?

There is no competition between schools because of the diversification of curricula and extracurricular activities. The quota for each institution is determined by the number eligible in the student body. When a student is chosen he is required to give biographical material to be printed in a publication which is released the summer after the candidates are submitted.

Each student who becomes a member receives without cost a certificate of recognition, a writeup in the annual publication, and the benefits of the Student Placement Service to aid in securing employment.

Theatre Lights

(A review of the November 13 performance)

by John Kerr

The first Playhouse production of the 1965-66 season, Eugene O'Neill's Mourning Becomes Elektra, must go down as an outstanding performance. A psychological analysis of hatred and its guilt consequences, this play was dominated by a foreboding heaviness, the portrayal and maintenance of which were primarily a result of cast unity.

Suspense main dramatic elment

Drama and tension were high throughout, particularly centering around the violent deaths. Yet for the careful observer the deaths came not as an unsuspected shock; but rather as inevitable events, foreshadowed masterfully in previous actions and speeches by the actors. Indeed, this overall suspense due to foreknowledge was the dramatic element which drew the audience directly into the action of the play.

Audience responds inappropriately

Unfortunately, the audience was not prepared at times for the emotional depths to which they were exposed. I refer specifically to the ship scene in Act Two. Having just shot Adam, Orin, who is wavering on insanity, remarks that the murder seems like his own suicide. Unwilling to sympathize with Orin's reference to his own deterioration, the audience laughed — a most inappropriate response!

Characters occasionally harsh

Concerning the cast's performance, articulation and projection were excellent from the opening lines on, being remark-

The Lantern coffee house

by Margaret Lee Mottett

It is time again to clear up some questions about the coffeehouse. Briefly, these are some of the ideas we have discussed and set in motion. We will establish the practise of being open every Friday and Saturday night, regardless of the program, for coffee and conversation. Some nights will be casual sings with coffee, tea, cokes, cookies, and a fire in the fireplace. Other evenings will feature discussions, speakers, readings, art displays, and musical and dramatic presentations. How many times have you and your date, you and your roommate, you and your mood — wanted to stop at a place to sit and chat? We now may have the perfect place! We do not want this to become routine to the point that it is boring in atmosphere, program, or menu, and are going to great lengths to keep it exciting and varied. You have a standing invitation.

A note concerning organization: a "board of directors" has been established, which will change as time schedules and interests permit. Sara Parker is chairman; Bob Young is in charge of programming; Margaret Lee Moffett is heading administration; Marvin Beard is treasurer.

Once in awhile it is our aim to have a Special—and Thanksgiving is a good time to begin! Great things are in store for Saturday the 27th. Going to the formal and no time to go out to dinner before the dance? Don't want to eat your sack supper? Not going to the formal but want some excitement? All of these problems solved:

The Lantern will be open for you at seven o'clock for a light supper—in a European flavor. Begin a gala evening of dancing or a light evening of a European party. Entertainment for those coming to and from The Lantern throughout the evening includes special autumn readings of literature, relaxing piano music, perhaps a few European folk-songs.

One of the most important aspects of the evening—and one in which you all can and must take part—will be in establishing the welcome of all faculty, community people, and visiting parents and friends. Many of these will be helping in preparations for this first Special; in fact, several are already offering to donate tempting dishes, and making helpful suggestions. We owe thanks to them and welcome them to The Lantern any time, but especially November 27.

In the meantime, get your interest built up, come to The Lantern on Fridays and Saturday evenings, or to a work session if you're so moved! It is impossible for this coffeehouse to succeed in its purposes unless each one of us takes an active interest in making it so.

Look for more announcements —follow the developments—and come on over—to The Lantern.

Hidden Treasure

by Martha Edington

Few students realize the abundant treasures held for them in the Lamar Memorial Library. Not only are 77,000 books made available to them; there are also numerous periodicals, microcards, newspapers on microfilm, and map, pamphlet, and picture files. These are all available to the students through the open stack system. Students, too, may check out an unlimited number of books for use.

Extensive use is made of the library each year. For example, about 36,000 of the library's 77,000 books circulated last year at the rate of 200-400 a day. In addition, 11,000 books passed over the reserve desk. Imagine, then, the many hands through which these books must pass in order to reach you, the student!

The library also houses several valuable collections: an art collection, a museum, and an old book collection. Paintings in the art collection are the work of Elizabeth Gowdy Baker, who bequeathed them to the college upon her death. Her works range from beautiful landscapes to realistic portraits. In the museum can be found relics from the Civil War, collections of dolls and crafts from foreign countries, aged bricks from early Maryville College buildings, and many other interesting and unique items. Of particular interest are the items from the Orient. Books in the treasure collection are of diverse types. Some are those which belonged to Isaac Anderson, while others are those which once circulated in the library. Especially treasured are a copy of Samuel Johnson's dictionary and an early English copy of the Bible.

So, if you ever have a free afternoon, why not go to the library and view some of the treasures made available to you? You will soon see that the library is more than a building filled with books. It is a storehouse of valued items for every person's interest.

To know what you prefer, instead of humbly saying Amen to what the world tells you you ought to prefer, is to have kept your soul alive.

—Robert Louis Stevenson

Talk and Travel

by Sherry Proffitt

November 5-6 the debate team participated in the Applachian Debate Tournament held at Applachian State Teachers College in Boone, North Carolina. We left the college at six o'clock Friday morning and enjoyed a jolly trip over the mountains. Upon checking into the motel we found that Dr. Walker had been assigned to the bridal suite. Her classic comment was, "Just my luck to be in the bridal suite alone!" This one incident more or less set the mood for the whole tournament and we found that this one was more relaxed than the Mercer Tournament — and more successful. The varsity squad won eight and lost four; the novice squad won five and lost seven. Paul Millin received a certificate for excellent debating in the novice division. Both Wanda Hannah and Lee Sikes won speaking certificates for superior debating, in the varsity division, Lee having the highest number speaking points in the entire tournament. We left Saturday afternoon and enjoyed driving through the colorful mountains, some of us facing forward and some of us facing backward. The team has only one other tournament this semester, a novice tournament at Carson Newman College.

Scots Defeated in Grid Finale

The Carson-Newman Eagles provided Maryville's Scots with a dreary end for a dismal season turning a close first half into a 37-7 rout at the final gun.

The Eagles scored first on a 46 yard run by Larry Watson in the first period and added seven more points on a 12 yard pass play in the second quarter.

Maryville came back in the second period converting Herman Ramsey's pass interception into pay dirt. Sophomore tailback Danny Rogers provided the punch with hard nosed running and a quick scamper around left end for the touchdown.

Carson-Newman took a 13-7 lead to the locker room at intermission. The Scots received the second half kick off after having been penalized for delay of game as the halftime show exceeded the twenty minute limit.

Each time Maryville threatened in the second half, a major penalty, fumble, or an interception would kill the drive.

Carson-Newman scored twice in each of the final two periods bring the final total to 37-7.

Maryville takes an 0-8-1 record into the Honaker Bowl Thanksgiving Day against Earlham College of Indiana. Kick-off is at 2:30 in this first annual bowl sponsored by the Honaker Club of Maryville. The gate goes to the Honaker Fund to provide academic scholarships for athletes in honor of the late coach Lombe Honaker.

Hardcourt Outlook Brighter for Coming Campaign

by Frank Gready

Practice is underway on the 1965-1966 Scot basketball team. With returning lettermen, captain Dennis McGowan, Mike Dalton, Dave Alexander and Jack Llewellyn, the Scots look forward to improving last year's 6-18 record. This year's team consists of 5 freshmen headed by center Les Dunson.

Coach Baird has picked possible starters Denny McGowan, Dave Alexander, Les Dunson, Jack Llewellyn and Don Payne.

McGowan is the only 3 year letterman on the squad and should have his best year yet. He has shown considerable improvement and is a hustling team leader. Alexander is impressive in practice and is probably the most improved man from last year's squad. He will be relied upon heavily for commanding the boards. Llewellyn, playing one of the guard positions, is the team's best shooter with a consistant set shot from the outside. The Scot playmaker, Don Payne, is the best floorman combining leadership with operating and good ball handling. Les Dunson, the only starting freshman, is a welcome sight to the Scot court. Coming from basketball rich Ohio, he played for the 1963-1964 class double A Ohio State champions. At 6'6", he is the tallest man on the squad.

One distinguished characteristic over last year's team is the improved bench. With four returnees, and five new players, the bench boasts plenty of reserve strength.

Letterman Mike Dalton is a hustler on defense and playmaker. Danny Mitchell is counted on for front line reserve. Sophomores Gary Meyer and Jim Hogue round out the veterans. Meyer is tabbed by Coach Baird as "the most aggressive man on the team." Hogue's shooting has improved, and he will be counted on to add an extra punch to the offense.

The five new players are Dean Clark, a transfer student from Blackburn College in Illinois, and freshmen Darrel Maietta, Dave Maxwell, Lynn Raby and Chuck Rumford. These men have shown aggressiveness in practice, and have provided Coach Baird with the most balanced bench in many years.

Pre-season injuries have hit the Scots hard. Mike Dalton and Danny Mitchell both have wrist injuries, and will miss a good portion of the season. Freshman Lynn Raby has a knee injury, which might necessitate a possible operation. In addition, Jack Llewellyn, Don Payne, and Gary Meyer have all suffered injuries but should be ready by the first game.

Lions Hold Scots to Tie

The Maryville Scots teamed up against the Mountain Lions of Mars Hill in a grueling defensive battle that ended in a 6-6 stalemate.

The Scots drew first blood near the end of the first period when senior quarterback Herman Ramsey rifled an 11 yard bullet to end Sonny Webb in the end zone. Sonny Hughes' attempt for the point after was blocked by a charging Mars Hill lineman.

Not to be denied, Mars Hill came back to even the score in the waning moments of the first half on a four yard sweep. The conversion attempt was wide and the half time score was 6-6.

Neither team could push across another tally the remainder of the contest as the Scot defense held and the offense could not generate a scoring drive.

Maryville's defense played superbly as they limited Mars Hill to a mere 2.2 yards per attempt. Herman Ramsey snagged three Mountain Lion aerials, one setting up the touchdown. He was awarded the Amos Alonzo Stagg Award for his performance in the game.

This hard hitting contest was by far the Scots' best showing this year. Hard running Danny Rogers provided the offensive spark on the ground as Ramsey was effective in the air. Co-captain Mike Dalton suffered a broken wrist and is out for the remainder of the campaign.

Volleyball Tourney on Tap for WAA

by Ginger Proffitt

Women's intramural volleyball practice began Tuesday, November 16, under the direction of manager Peggy Williams. Enthusiasm has always been high for this popular sport, and the teams should be very good again this year.

Congratulations go to Kathy Bishop and her fine Theta team that emerged victorious in the soccer competition. They defeated Chi Beta in the final game on Thursday to win 12-3. Chi Beta had two soccer teams with Marge Stewart and Joyce Rumiers as captains. Thus far in intramurals Theta has won all three events—hockey, soccer, and ping pong.

let's help the illusion a bit! Were the gigglers embarrassed or merely amused when people died or embraced on the stage?

Then there is the snicker department. In the last part of the trilogy there was a problem with similar lines which caused one part of a scene to be repeated. This is a quite understandable error to make in a long play with recurrent themes and even recurrent words. This envoked snickers from the enlightened people around me.

Consider a few things about the difficulty of the art form. If a pianist hits the wrong note, do people giggle? When an actor is using his whole being in an effort to become the character he is portraying does it not, to put it mildly, distract him to hear such a callous, objective, shall I say ignorant audience reaction as a giggle?

Aristotle was the first of a long line of wise people who tried to convince us that serious theatre is not primarily entertainment. But with the competition of Hollywood it is difficult for people to get involved in "live" art. But shall we reassess our attitudes and try?

—Mrs. James A. Bloy

(2) Well, what are you going to do when you get out into the world? This really dumbfounded me—literally, "what in the world" did that have to do with it? Maybe they think if we have off Saturday we'll still be required to go to 8:00 a.m. coffee break if we live within a radius of five blocks? I was, however, relieved to hear an admittance of this being another world.

I was then informed that town students were not required to attend Saturday chapel if they had no classes. Since I had been out of town on two Saturdays, I asked if I could then appeal these cuts. The answer received was the driving force to write this letter:

"Why, just take them as part of your five. What would you do with them anyway?" (At the time I could only think of maybe ten million things, so decided to skip it.)

At the forum on Vietnam last week, I heard complaints from our faculty here at Maryville about President Johnson's administrative policy—keeping us in the dark, not telling us why we're in Vietnam, etc. Well, may I be the first in writing to wage such a complaint against this administrative policy for the same reasons. I welcome a valid answer to my question "why" from anyone who knows.

ably well maintained through those rapid heated exchanges. Facial expressions and body movements were, for the most part, subtle and quite appropriate, being used in extremes only when the climax of emotion called for them. Perhaps the only conspicuous fault was the forced shouting of some of the characters which produced an unreal harshness on certain occasions.

As I have said already, however, the cast acted most admirably as a whole, producing a feeling of unity difficult to attain.

Production factors excellent

Acclamation goes also to the Production Staff for excellent work on make-up, costumes, and set construction (especially with reference to the intricacy and speed with which the scene changes were made). Lights and sound, maneuvered with pinpoint accuracy, also greatly enhanced the over-all impression. As a theme song, the beautiful "Shenandoah" provided a contrast to the dismal atmosphere.

For the supervision and coordination of all these features, the final word of appreciation must go to the directors, Mr. Jones and Miss Shaklee.

To each and every one involved in the production of Mourning Becomes Elektra — a job well done.

Nagy Focuses on Cold War

by Robert Hart

The second distinguished speaker of the 1965-66 lecture series, on November 19, was Ferenc Nagy, former prime minister of Hungary during the bitter years of the Communist take-over there in 1945-46. Since that time, he has been an exile in Europe and America, and has lectured widely on Eastern European politics.

Cold War began in Europe

Mr. Nagy traced for his listeners a careful history and interpretation of events in Eastern Europe since 1945. He began by explaining that the Cold War began in Eastern Europe, and its outcome could well be decided there. He delineated methods of Soviet take-over in the present satellite nations using his own experiences in Hungary as prime examples.

Cultural exchanges can help

Mr. Nagy's lecture dealt with the gradual deStalinization of the Communist bloc and the important consequences this has for the West and especially the United States. This liberalization process plus the Sino-Soviet split has caused Eastern Europe to reassert itself. Cultural exchanges by the West, according to Mr. Nagy, can help the Iron Curtain countries broaden their sense of independence and national freedom even though it may mean that exile leaders like himself may never return to their native lands.

U. S. must win in Vietnam

Concerning Vietnam, he stated that the United States must hold the tide there and reach a reasonable, stable peace. He stated that the future of Eastern Europe depends a great deal on American success. Following an American end to the war, Mr. Nagy said, Eastern Europe can resume its gradual course to national freedom. If the United States fails in Vietnam, the whole communist world will be forced to join in large scale expansion in Southeast Asia, ruining contact between the East and the West and possibly precipitating a third global war. Mr. Nagy also feels an American peace will cause Soviet Russia to move closer to the West rather than toward her historical enemy, China.

Solutions suggested

Mr. Nagy drew some tentative solutions to the problem of Eastern Europe despite the many complications. He described how Eastern Europe could be a buffer zone that would protect both Russia and the Western World and still allow the member states to have a measure of freedom. This, however, depends on the willingness of the United States after the Vietnamese War to work for a permanent peace. Eastern Europe will be right for the move if we are willing to take the responsibility.

Teacher Examinations Announced

College seniors preparing to teach school may take the National Teacher Examinations on any of the four different test dates announced today by Educational Testing Service.

New dates set for the testing of prospective teachers are: December 11, 1965; and March 19, July 16, and October 8, 1966. The tests will be given at nearly 500 locations throughout the United States, ETS said.

Results of the National Teacher Examinations are used by many large school districts as one of several factors in the selection of new teachers and by several states for certification or licensing of teachers. Some colleges also require all seniors preparing to teach to take the examinations.

On each full day of testing, prospective teachers may take the Common Examinations, which measure the professional and general preparation of teachers, and one of 13 Teaching Area Examinations (formerly called Optional Examinations) which measure mastery of the subject they expect to teach.

Prospective teachers should contact the school systems in which they seek employment, or their colleges, for specific advice on which examinations to take and on which dates they should be taken.

A Bulletin of Information containing a list of test centers, and information about the examinations, as well as a registration form, may be obtained from college placement officers, school personnel departments, or directly from National Teacher Examinations, Box 911, Educational Testing Service, Princeton, New Jersey 08540

On Sunday December 12, 1965, a 250-voice chorus will present Handel's Messiah in the Samuel Tyndale Wilson Chapel at 3:00 p.m. The chorus will be under the direction of Dr. Harry H. Harter, Chairman of the Department of Fine Arts. Accompanying the chorus will be a 50-piece symphonic orchestra.

12 soloists chosen

The Messiah is performed each year after only nine regularly scheduled rehearsals held on Monday evenings with an additional dress rehearsal. Several rehearsals have now been held, and the soloists have been chosen. The soloists for this year are Sandra Boatman, James Breckenridge, Patricia Clendenen ,Frederick Doscher, Lynn Duke, Joseph Henry, Ibbie Ann Jack, Thomas Llewellyn, Margaret Miller, Mary Rucker, Lewright Sikes, and Sarah Tompkins.

Faculty members to participate

This will be Dr. Harter's eighteenth year directing the Messiah chorus. Playing the organ will be Dr. James A. Bloy and at the harpsicord, Mrs. Sallie W. Schoen. Two new members of the faculty will also be participating in this year's presentation: Mr. Robert J. Bonham will be a pianist, and Mr. Robert W. McKaskell will be concertmaster.

The Messiah chorus is made up of the 65-voice College Choir, which forms the nucleus for the chorus each year, the Women's Choir, the Men's Glee Club, members of the student body and the faculty, and singers from the community and surrounding area.

Written over 200 years ago

The Messiah is an oratorio written by George Friderik Handel consisting of Biblical passages set to music. The oratorio is in three parts: Part One tells the prophecy and fulfillment of the Nativity; Part Two depicts the Passion and Resurrection of the Christ; Part Three anticipates the Resurrection of all mankind to the glory of God. The Messiah was first performed in Dublin, Ireland, in 1742 by Handel himself with a chorus of twenty-six singers and an orchestra of thirty-five. Ever since the time of Handel the Messiah has gained in

Christmas Readings to be in Lantern

Christmas readings will be given this year in the Lantern on Sunday evening, December 12. As in the past, there will be the informal reading of appropriate stories and tales by faculty members and students, as well as a performance of the Carol Singers, composed of choir members. The room will be decorated the night preceding with a Hanging of the Greens—enjoyable in itself. And this year, the warmth of the Lantern will add an extra measure of the Christmas spirit to the hearts of those who listen.

EDITORIAL OUTLOOK

There are many petty things with which an editorial can concern itself, and we have chosen perhaps the pettiest of them all for this week: PINK SLIPS.

We know nothing about the historical background of the practice, but the procedure is this. When a girl student wishes to go out in a car driven by a man (horrors!), she is required to get the aforementioned pink slip, giving her permission to enter the car. Without said slip she cannot legally accompany the man—unless he is her father or a faculty member. (A problem arises when the faculty member is also a date, but we shan't go into that.)

This seems like a relatively harmless requirement. It is, however, not only harmless but utterly ridiculous. In the first place, dorm assistants (fellow students) are often the only ones present to sign the pink slip. Permission given by peers has always seemed unnecessary. But this is nothing compared to the really stupid part of it all: A girl signs on the slip where she is going, with whom, and when she will return, and then she takes the slip with her. And for what reason? Surely she doesn't need to be reminded that she is on her way to the movies or that her date's name is Bill. Because she is in possession of the pink slip, those at the dorm often have not the vaguest idea of her whereabouts, although they may check her sign-out card—if she has put all the vital information on this card as well.

And then to carry things still further, we have heard of those town students who were seen driving their parents' car and were asked if they had car permission. One girl we know refused to run an errand for her mother because the housemother had not given permission. To go to the grocery store by herself?

It seems mighty silly to be senior women from September to May, required to ask permission for riding in a car, and then in June to be "people of the world" — married, teachers, graduate students, etc. That's a pretty sharp transition, isn't it?

"Why," said the freshman, "should this Be different in any way?"
"We were afraid you might go to New

"Well, I didn't go home," snarled the senior,
I just overslept, like a fool."
"That's really too bad; I think it's so sad —
See you in summer school."
The freshman wept; the senior cursed;
The campus was filled with chagrin.
This is how Maryville College
Develops its five-year men.
"Oh, but we care; we're concerned —
Don't think your deal is raw
'Cause your graduation was delayed

"Then you can change it," cried the student.
"Ain't it folly through and through?"
"Hrumph, what's good enough for my grandfather
Is good enough for you."

Students, faculty, and administration, these three . . ., but the greatest of these is the administration.

Beauty Onstage

by Sarah Tompkins

Sallie Warth Schoen, pianist, presented the first faculty recital of the semester last Friday night, November 26. With a new Mason & Hamlin at her fingertips, she performed on a higher plane of excellence than audiences here have experienced for years.

Listeners amazed

Her program opened with the cheerful, spinning sound of Mozart, the "Variations in D Major on a theme by Duport." Second was the C Minor sonata, opus III of Beethoven. The strength as well as the sensitivity in the interpretation of this work were consistently maintained throughout, and the way in which Mrs. Schoen played the unusual jazzy rhythm employed in the second movement made Beethoven really swing. Her listeners were both amazed and excited by this composition. After intermission the "Capriccio in Bb Major," by Bach brought us into the solid contrapuntal sound of the 18th century—also well-performed.

Standing ovation given

The last work on the program, the "Symphonic Etudes," by Schumann, was the most difficult of any she played and by far the most exciting. Each variation being different requires sudden changes in approach and intensity. Perhaps a shade of doubt, or an instant of panic caused her control to weaken, but the last few measures slipped from her command. Showing no signs of emotion, she valiantly exited the stage and returned with the same poise and confidence of her very first appearance. With that and the audience in her grasp, she encored with a Chopin prelude. The standing ovation given her then spoke for the success of the performance.

Mrs. Schoen has always set a precedent not only to her own students, but all music students for stage presence as well as musicianship. Her performance Friday was the perfect example of grace and poise. The sound she created was more than beautiful; it was alive and moving, and thrilling.

MY COUSIN'S

"The Student in Higher Education"

WASHINGTON, D. C.
CONFERENCE — OCTOBER, 1965

(Ed's note: At a recent conference on Higher Education, attended by President Copeland and Dean Fuhr, the following remarks were made in the section on Higher Education and the Moral Revolution. These excerpts are printed here with comments from administration and student. We welcome further conflicting views.)

Moral revolution

"(We) have emerged from a culture which often identified morality with moral codes. But it seldom occured to us to question the manuals . . . I submit that the moral revolution we are witnessing on our campuses today is, indeed, calling the codes into question. I am obviously vulnerable to the charge that skepticism may be totally or largely irresponsible, that human beings always have and always will use rationalization to cover their own license and weakness. (But) our challenge at this moment in time is to accept the skepticism, to encourage it, to nourish it, even to share in it. Only if a man is allowed to frame his own question can he be really responsible for his own answer . . . Only persons who are responsible skeptics and responsible decision-makers can effect such a break-through. We are part of one culture involved in producing another: part of a culture of two world wars trying to produce world peace, part of a racist, segregated society trying to produce integration, part of a ruggedly individualistic capitalism trying to produce personal responsibility and social concern, part of a moralistic religious society trying to allow the morality of empathy and compassion."

—Jacqueline Grennan, President, Webster College

Is present morality better or worse?

Commenting on specific student problems, a psychiatrist at the conference said: "Psychologically the late adolescent is not prepared for adult sexuality. The average college undergraduate by his nature prefers an emotional and a physical relationship with the opposite sex which is intimate and private but not one which includes intercourse. (He desires) an emotional fusion or identification rather than a physical one. Delaying sexual gratification until marriage does not cause a degree of frustration liable to lead to psychological damage nor can sexual experimentation before marriage be correlated with greater sexual compatibility after marriage. College students today appear to have developed a new kind of sexual morality based upon fidelity rather than chastity . . . Many students experiment only once with drugs such as marijuana or mescaline, simply on a dare; but those who routinely ingest such substances usually fall into a category best described as the inadequate personality. They feel less than whole. Drugs provide a temporary respite from this feeling or relative ineffectiveness. Most of them do not prove themselves adequate by doing anything remarkable when under the influence of a drug, but they feel as if they could. Rarely does (addiction) occur in college, but each case of this kind is a truly tragic one . . . It is hard to say whether insurrections have become more violent because the civil rights movement has given to civil disobedience some degree of honor which it never had before or because the students have more justifiable causes for complaint. A willingness to discuss matters of policy with students, combined with the reservation of the right to make, hold to, and enforce the ultimate decision regardless of student agreement with it is usually the wisest administrative policy . . . These are the most intelligent and the healthiest group of college students there have ever been. They want to forge their own moral values. It is too early to tell whether the present morality is better or worse. It is up to the young to prove its worth."

—Graham B. Blaine, Jr., Psychiatrist, Harvard University

Social morality and the civil right's struggle

(In) the late 1950's a new morality began to assert itself. The civil rights struggle burst upon the horizon of the college student like the glorious sun of a great new day. He was confronted with a moral issue in which he believed it was clearly possible to know without hesitation what was right and what was wrong. All the pretentions and compromises of the previous generations were rudely thrust aside. He had a Cause, and his morality derived from involvement in that cause. Not to be involved was immoral . . . At the same time, a profound change had come over personal morality. In matters of sex, of the use of alcohol, or academic honesty, the new generation not merely rejected all former patterns. Where the 1920's based a false feeling of well-being on false values and false enjoyments, the 1960's bases its standards on equally false dis-values and equally erroneous sources of displeasure, to achieve an equally false feeling of ill-being. The 1960's would thus appear to have produced a student generation in which social morality is dictated by the necessities of the civil rights struggle, while personal morality is what is left after restraints and inhibitions have been swept away."

—Buell G. Gallagher, President, City College New York

COMMENTS

Tom Fuhr, Dean of Students

"I note that one of the commentators is optimistic about our current student generation, one is somewhat pessimistic, and one sets a conspicuous challenge. I am interested that Sister Jacqueline Grennan, a Roman Catholic, suggests that we 'call the codes into question.' By this, she does not mean to flaunt the established moral patterns, if I understand her correctly, but to evaluate them with a high degree of personal responsibility. Dr. Gallagher, who takes the historian's approach cautions us that distinguishing between right and wrong proves continuingly difficult, and that uninhibited personal conduct does not necessarily promote well-being. The comments by the psychiatrist are helpful and to the point, and they make clear that a man who deals so much with the seriously disturbed personality has excellent counsel for those of us who grapple with the more common tensions of campus life."

by Dale Schellenger

Student volatility is age old; the sexual revolution has a 35 year history behind its present form. Yet we are as concerned today with student revolt as we ever have been. Some, as the analysts above, seek the moral basis for such dissatisfaction. Others, myself included, credit the student with less ability to think, tracing part of the unrest to the state of ignorance in which the student is kept concerning the affairs of his institutions be it educational or social.

Student vaguely discontented

Dissatisfaction with adult standards is common only to the minority capable of analysis and thought. This group runs the usual range from reckless activists to sober thinkers—the extreme activists unfortunately receiving the bulk of national publicity and concern. These last to me, have failed to think through their protests, regardless of validity. But beyond the minority lies the 'majority student,' apathetic, unwilling to think, vaguely discontented — with a stimulating, probing education, this could change.

Student discontent analyzed.

Speaking from this campus, I would say the only hope the student revolt can offer the future—or the present—lies in the acceptance of the horrible responsibility to question and revalue all values. This will, of course, further disturb adult status quo and understanding. But this is the value of Sister Grennan's challenge and analysis. Gallagher appears to misread the whole student unrest, failing to grasp central issues, overemphasizing fringe areas. Blaine provides a framework within which the student discontent can be analyzed, also suggesting a perceptive, wise administrative response.

The nature of the student revolt is not yet characterized—we can only strive for the best.

Kappa Phi Wins Stinkin' Shoe Game

As a climax to the intramural football season, the members of Kappa Phi defeated Alpha Sigma 35-28 on Honaker Field. The Sig team dominated the first half as they rolled to a 21-7 halftime lead. The second half saw a determined Phi team take the field and score four touchdowns to Sig's one.

The strong factor of Phi's second half comeback was the accurate passing of quarterback Lynn Howard. Howard's favorite target was right end Rich Marshall. The varsity tennis teams' No. 1 doubles team, Howard and Marshall, combined their talents to score three touchdowns on passes of 55, 43, and 40 yards, with another being stopped on the two yard line by an outstanding defensive play by John Agnew.

Other touchdowns were scored for Phi by center Dave Hutchison and left end Jim Stiano.

Outstanding for the Alpha Sigma team was the passing and running of quarterback Dick Craig and the pass receiving of Daryl Stoker.

The winning touchdown was scored with less than 90 seconds showing on the scoreboard clock. The margin of victory was a 40 yard pass launched by the arm of Lynn Howard into the waiting arms of Rich Marshall who was standing all alone on the five yard line of Alpha Sigma. Marshall then ran the remaining distance for the tally.

However, more excitement was to come as the Sig team returned the kickoff to the 30 yard line of Phi, only to lose the ball on downs to a stubborn Phi defense.

popularity. Today it is Handel's most famous work and is presented annually throughout our land, from which multitudes receive inspiration and spiritual perception.

MC performances since 1933

The Messiah has had a long tradition at Maryville College. This year marks the thirty-third annual presentation here at the College. The Messiah was first presented in December 1933, with a chorus of 100 singers accompanied by a single piano. Since that first performance there have been many significant modifications including the use of a full orchestra with harpsicord, a pipe organ, student soloists, and an increase in the size of the chorus. Performances were held in the Elizabeth R. Voorhees Chapel until 1947 when the Chapel was destroyed by fire. For the following seven years performances were held in the Alumni Gymnasium. This year's presentation will be the twelfth to be held in the Samuel Tyndale Wilson Chapel.

With eight teams competing, the WAA Volleyball Tournament is off to a strong start. The first games were played on Tuesday, November 23, with Chi Beta winning three of the games and Theta one.

The volleyball All-Star game will be played December 14 at 7:00 p.m. in the Alumni Gymnasium. Each of the four team captains from the societies will submit the top six girls from her society, and the teams will be made up from these lists. This game will be open to all students and faculty.

Women's "M" Club will be sponsoring a dessert party on December 13th at 6:45 p.m. Their guests for the occasion will be prospective "M" Club members, those 15-20 girls who have the highest number of points gained through participation in the women's intramural program.

Sledges Cop Title With 38-38 Tie

Alpha Sigma's Sledgehammers and the Knights of Kappa Phi battled to a 38-38 tie to end this year's regular intramural flag ball play. Although the game ended in a tie, it gave the league championship to the ever-powerful Sledgehammers. Sig's team effort was sparked by the fine play of Darrell Stoker who scored two touchdowns. Stoker, who set up another tally on a quick trip up the middle, amazed both Knights and onlookers as he demonstrated his quick moves and hard running ability.

As usual, the big gun for the Knights was quarterback Lynn Howard as he proved once again the fast striking potential of the Knights.

With the close of the official season comes the annual "Stinkin' Shoe" game in which Sig and Phi pit their cream of the crop against each other to fight for possession of the coveted shoe (now in possession of Alpha Sigma). This year's contest promises to be very close since each team has beaten the other at least once in the regular campaign.

Finally you realize that it's better to be rejected than to reject—at least you're feeling something.

Scots Drop Bowl Tilt

The Maryville College Scots finished a disappointing season dejected but by no means ashamed as they dropped the first annual Honaker bowl tilt to Earlham College 26-17. The Scots made their most impressive showing of the year in the gala Turkey Day contest.

Quarterback Herman Ramsey, named Maryville's most valuable player, put the Scots ahead 7-0 on a one yard plunge after a long drive. Sonny "Gogolac" Hughes kicked the point after touchdown. Maryville scored twice in the second quarter, once on a 22-yard field goal by Sonny Hughes and again on a 12 yard pass from Ramsey to tight end Sonny Webb. Hughes booted the PAT. A blocked punt by Steve Hutsell set up the touchdown.

Maryville led 17-14 at intermission, but a fired-up Earlham eleven took the field and quickly scored to put 6 more on the scoreboard. Earlham scored again in the final period to round out the total.

On the ground, Earlham rolled up 238 yards to Maryville's 91, and in the air, the visitors also led, 132 yards to 30 for the Scots. First downs were 19 for Earlham and 6 for Maryville. The game was much more hard fought than the statistics show. The Scots could not generate a serious offensive in the second half, which accounts for the one-sided figures.

In post-game ceremonies, trophies were presented to each school and their coaches. Individual trophies were presented to each member of both squads.

Double-Header Slated Tonight for Openers

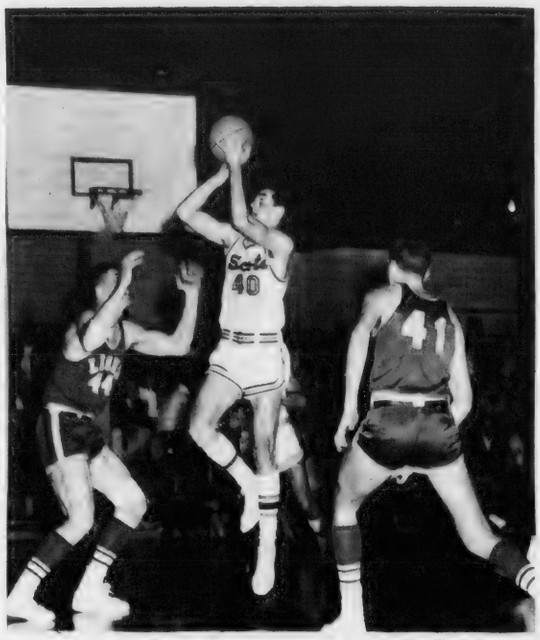
Roundballers Entertain Railsplitters

Led by senior captain Denny McGowan, the 1965-66 Scotty basketball squad has finished their pre-season competition with home and away scrimmages with both Tennessee Wesleyan and Knoxville College.

The injury-hampered roundballers made outstanding showings in these scrimmages, most notably in the second Knoxville encounter, played here at Maryville. Down by 17 points with only a few minutes to go, the cagers fought back brilliantly, only to fall three points short as the clock ran out, halting action at 64-61. Injuries have played an important part in the practices so far. Senior Mike Dalton and junior Dan Mitchell have both suffered wrist injuries, and freshman Lynn Raby was operated on recently for a knee injury that he had incurred earlier. All three are hoping to return sometime around the beginning of second semester, and will be of great help to the thinned ranks of the team.

McGowan, junior Dave Alexander, sophomores Don Payne and Jack Llewellyn, and freshman Les Dunson, the starting five, have looked good on offense, and are showing steady improvement on defense. Alexander and Dunson have showed the aggressiveness that is necessary to control the boards, and Payne and Llewellyn have outstanding outside shots.

Sophs and frosh promising



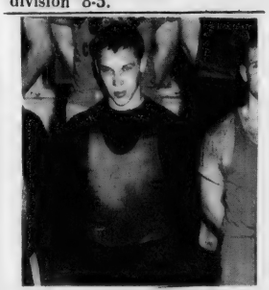
Back-up men will include sophomores Gary Meyer, Jim Hogue, Dean Clark, and freshmen Darrell Maietta, Dave Maxwell, and Chuck Rumford. Meyer and Hogue, both members of last year's team will be counted on to help out in the tight spots. Rumford, who played no high school ball in Pennsylvania, has been improving from day to day and will be able to substitute for any of the big men, should the situation call for it. Freshmen guards, Maietta and Maxwell, have shown quick hands and display a tough style of defense.

Game tonight with LMU

The Scotties opened their season two nights ago at Bryan College. Tonight, the home season begins with a game against Lincoln Memorial University. LMU has a 1-2 record thus far, beating Berea (Ky.) College, while losing to Transylvania and Cumberland. Between now and Christmas break, the squad will play home contests with LMU, Berry, West Georgia, and Milligan. The lone contest on the road will be a return match with tonight's opponent, LMU.

The 1966 portion of the schedule will begin on January 7, at Shorter and will continue until February 26, when Maryville plays its 20th and final game of the season against Mars Hill.

If the cagers are able to avoid the injury jinx that has seemed to follow them throughout the pre-season, they should have little trouble bettering last year's 6-12 record.



Basketball Captain Denny McGowan shown notching up two more points for the Scots. Last year's leading scorer, McGowan will be relied on heavily in tonight's contest against LMU's Railsplitters in the Alumni Gym.

Matmen Play Host to ATSC Squad

Last Saturday the Maryville College wrestling team began its season at Milligan, with six returning lettermen leading the squad. Milligan, with only two lettermen, relied on freshmen heavily, much to the premature delight of Coach J. A. Davis' grapplers. The Scot matmen learned 23—16 never to underestimate freshmen, as a lack of experienced upper-weight wrestlers led to defeat.

Milligan completely rebuilt its team around newcomers drafted from wrestling schools in the North. As expected, the Scot lower weights won their matches in hard fought bouts, but the pins registered by Milligan in the upper weights proved the margin of victory in a meet that could have gone either way until the final match.

Maryville's 123-pound wrestler, John Henderson, who last year finished third in the Southeastern Conference, led the Scots by turning in his first collegiate pin in 6 minutes 13 seconds over Jim McHwain. Ron Pritts, 130-pound junior, decisioned Tom Kim 7—0. Newcomer Ron Kolb was defeated in the 137-pound division 8-5.

Team Captain Ralph Johnson

Team captain R. A. Johnson, moving up a class after winning the SEC title at a lower weight last year, defeated Bowers 8—3 in the 145-pound contest. George Patton was decisioned at 152 by Dennis King. In the 160-pound class, Bob Nicholas and Bruce Bittenbender battled to a 2-2 draw.

Dick Stevenson, weighing only 155, filled in at 167 and was pinned in 4:15 in the match. George Snitzer, a freshman, was also pinned. One bright spot in the upper weights was Dan Gilmor's 5-2 win in the 191-pound class.

Pat O'Brian, Scot footballer, had only two days preparation for the meet and was pinned with 20 seconds left in the first period.

The Milligan match proved the dependability of the team in general, despite the drawback of the unusually long football season. which prevented football players from getting into shape for the match. A costly injury occurred in the final period of the 145-pound match as Ralph Johnson broke two fingers manhandling his opponent. Coach Davis feels that Roy Reis can fill the vacancy. Johnson is expected to be out of action about two weeks.

Tonight the Scots play host to Appalachian State Teacher's College after the basketball game as a doubleheader kicks off Maryville's winter sport program on the campus.

Vietnam Forum Review Given by Participants

(Ed's note: Although the Vietnam Forum was held several weeks ago, it has been thought ecessary to include in this issue four of the views expressed by panelists participating in that forum. We hope that this may clarify some of the misunderstanding resulting from our discussion.)

Moderator Gives Opinions

by John Mulholland

Opening with the presentation of the Circle K-sponsored petition to be sent to President Johnson supporting our government's stand in Vietnam, the Highland Echo—organized Viet nam Week was a great success. About 450 to 500 students and faculty signed their names to the petition, and quite a number of paperback books were gathered to be sent to the soldiers in Vietnam. It is a challenge to all other organizations and groups on campus to develop similar types of programs concerning problems of prime interest in our world today and topics that a community of scholars need always to be discussing.

Though our intentions may be grossly misinterpreted (as they were reported in the Knoxville Journal — we thank the Journal for their front page article of apology), we can never avoid controversy, for we must always preserve that priceless commodity called "academic freedom" in maintaining a college community in open-minded dialogue.

Each one who attended the forum gleaned something new, realizing the points that make each stand on Vietnam strong or weak. I could never suggest that we remove to the "coastal cities" to be blasted to death, or that we remove ourselves from our military obligation in Vietnam. Yet we should never allow our only stand in Southeast Asia to be military. The United States must work hard to push the Mekong River Delta project, the Southeast Asia Bank, education of these peoples, instruction in new methods of production, health projects, etc.

The United States has a responsibility to take a strong stand in this area, as Dr. Nagy, exiled Prime Minister of Hungary and recent speaker at our Lecture Series, informed us. His main point concerning Vietnam was that victory there and halt of Communism in Southeast Asia would mean relaxation of present Communistic holds on countries in Central and Eastern Europe.

Let us learn from this experience that we must never avoid involvement, that we should do and contribute what we can, and most of all that we be concerned.

Exchange of Views Valuable

by Bill Erwin

The forum just held on Vietnam was certainly a step in the right direction for our campus. That we have remained isolated from world affairs and that we have shown little concern for the problems of our day is a fact that should have been remedied long ago. I believe that the method of presentation was adequate and the three introductions were concise and to the point. The discussion rambled a great deal too much until it no longer seemed to consider the question at hand. If nothing else, we learned from the forum that there is more than one side to the question, that popular opinion does not necessarily mean the correct opinion. Somehow that in itself is a victory.

Communication Needed

by Dr. David Young

In my opinion the debate was worthwhile and provocative. In the context of that discussion, I would briefly frame my position as follows: war in Vietnam is not the final answer, but at this moment we must be involved in it in order to check the agressive tide of Communism in South Asia. The ultimate answer, it seems to me, does lies in communication and the conference table. However, I chose to make the value judgment that this type of "grass roots" agressive Communism is causing people to be subjected to an intolerable situation (else why would so many leave North Vietnam — or Cuba). Therefore I feel the United States must take a forceful stand for self-determination in this area until we can open the path to the conference table. The tide must be stemmed somewhere, and it will not be stemmed by withdrawing to the coastal cities.

It is, admittedly, still a strange puzzle that a stable government cannot be raised in South Vietnam — perhaps this is an indication of our interference — or perhaps of the inability of those people to see the value of self-determination which we as a nation cherish. To me the question is not how is our display of military strength causing permanent damage to our Asian or world image but what would happen if we pull away from this confrontation? We must constantly seek to open communication, but we must at the same time be willing to stand up and defend our way of life and sense of human dignity (imperfect as it is in our land).

Peace Should be Sought

by Dr. Phillip Griffin

It was good to have the presentation and questioning of views which the forum on Vietnam policy afforded. The thing to keep in mind is the need for constructive and workable alternatives to a policy which has failed to help our friends or hurt our enemies in any significant measure. To suppose that more of the same policy will not rather hurt our friends and help our enemies is somewhat unreasonable. I believe that the world can hope for something better from America than the all-out destruction of an already prostrate nation. Whatever else is intended by the present policy, this final destruction of Vietnam seems the only likely outcome of this course of action.

There are proposals already available which are worthy of consideration. But the administration does not seem to be willing to discuss them seriously. This is the point that disturbs me most. While I do not believe that our leaders are evil or bloodthirsty men, I cannot help but think that they are following a line of thinking that is alien to the American tradition and to our pledge to seek peace with justice at all costs. The future of America in the world depends not upon our out-killing the Communists, but upon our out-living, out-working, and out-caring all those who would enslave men. Only an alert, intelligent, and compassionate generation of Americans can do this.

WINTER IN THE COUNTRY

Christmas to be December 25

by Sara Parker

A few days before the holidays, on or around December 18, Maryville students will join the national shoppers' union in their traditional plight before Christmas. Preparations for the big day will include bringing home the baby tree from the local gas station parking lot and sending Yule cards which we will have forgotten about back at the dorms.

Some may spend their spare moments typing (or, woe, writing) their independent studies, only to end up in complete frustration as the family begins the ceremonies of hanging the greens and roasting the turkeys. There will be reminders to mend the holes in our stockings and to come home early from the high school basketball game — so that someone can unload the tree ornaments (that have come to us from several generations past) from the top storeroom shelf.

When Father sits down to read that "Marley was dead to begin with," then mother will excuse herself to go and stir the pudding and Son will remember to call his girl and Daughter will leave to wrap a forgotten package. However, the star on the top of yon tree will wink at old friends, grown older since last year.

Choir Tour Set

The Maryville College Choir Tour is scheduled to visit various cities of the Synod of the Mid-South. At the present they have commitments to sing in Chattanooga, March 23; Leeds, Alabama, March 25; and Birmingham, March 27.

Tenative engagements have been made for other appearances and a number of churches in the Synod will set dates through proposals sent out by the college. These will be during the time of Spring Vacation, March 18-29.

The Tour will aid in the securing of funds for Maryville College and Tusculum College which is a project now under way by the Synod.

Ainsworth Thesis Published

The doctoral thesis of A. D. Ainsworth, Associate Professor and Chairman of the Department of Political Science, approved for publication by the University of Lausanne in Switzerland, has now been published. It is entitled "The Relations Between Church and State in the City and Canton of Geneva."

The book deals with the constantly changing relationship between the religious and state authorities from the mid-fourth century, when Christianity came to Geneva, until the present time. It is of particular interest in the English-speaking world since Geneva was the birthplace of the Reformed and Presbyterian Churches, which grew out of the ministry of John Calvin in Geneva.

Two Gifts Received

Two gifts were recently received by the college. One was from the Eastman Kodak company of Rochester, New York amounting to $7,400, and the other by the Sears-Roebuck Foundations for $1,000. Both gifts may be used for any purpose decided upon by the college.

WARNING!

The Highland Echo staff, as a public service, wishes to inform all new students and remind all old students that their dormitory rooms will be searched during the Christmas holidays. Please act accordingly.

History of Christmas Customs Described

Christmas is described in song as the season to be merry. It's also a season steeped with rich traditions — some of which evolved from customs practiced before the birth of Christ.

The use of greenery at Christmas, for instance, grew out of ancient Roman and Greek customs. Romans made lavish use of green boughs and garlands to honor Saturn, their god of agriculture. Greeks awarded laurel wreaths to victorious athletes.

Monk began use of tree

Holly was a favorite Roman decoration. The Druids of ancient England thought it sacred. Mistletoe was regarded as a charm against evil in Greek mythology. It was a symbol of hope and peace to the Romans. The Druids believed it had healing powers. The Norse considered it to be sacred and a symbol of love.

It was in heavily-forested northern Europe that the Christmas tree custom was begun by St. Boniface, an eighth century monk. He converted the pagans living in what is now Germany, and ended their human sacrifices to Odin's sacred oak. He convinced the people instead to adorn fir trees in their homes in tribute to the Christ Child.

Cards exchange since 1840

Exchanging Christmas cards is a fairly recent custom. It began in England in the 1840's — the exact date is in dispute. The first sender also is a source of argument. At least four persons, including a 16-year-old artist, are credited with being first.

Christmas cards were introduced in the U. S. by Louis Prang, a German immigrant who settled in Roxbury, Mass. Known as the "father of the American Christmas card," Prang printed his first one in 1873. By 1881, he was turning out five million yule cards a year.

Creche popularized by St. Francis of Assisi

The use of poinsettias as Christmas decorations isn't old as customs go. Dr. Joel Poinsett of Charleston, S. C., after whom the flower is named, introduced the plant to the U. S. in 1828. In Mexico and Central America, where the flower apparently originated, it was known as the "Flower of the Holy Night."

One of the most revered Christmas customs is the reenactment of Christ's birth with a creche, or crib scene. Although started several hundred years earlier, the custom wasn't popularized until the 13th century by St. Francis of Assisi.

At that time, there were few books available and most people couldn't read anyway. To give an understanding portrayal of Christmas, St. Francis dramatized the Nativity in 1224 at Greccio, Italy.

Villagers took the parts of Mary, Joseph, and the shepherds. Live animals were used. A life-sized wax figure of the Christ Child was placed in the manger. The living creche attracted large crowds from nearby and distant areas.

And, as the pilgrims stood about admiring the scene, St. Francis led them in joyous songs written in the vernacular. Thus was born another great and popular custom — Christmas caroling.

EDITORIAL OUTLOOK

In past years we have become very disgusted with those students who constantly griped about administrative policies and their results. Our usual reply was that anyone who doesn't like it here can transfer; that it is not up to us to determine what is right or wrong; that "they" can do what they wish to us. Maybe it's senioritis, but we feel differently now.

Several controversial issues have been presented from the student point of view in the pages of this newspaper. There have been complaints about inconsistency in chapel requirements, ½ hours for vacation cuts, and pink slips. Each article has made its point without hedging, but to no avail.

We do not ask for an immediate condescension to all student whims and fancies; to do so would be pretty childish. HOWEVER, there seems to be some value in that over-worked term communication.

There is much talk about the Maryville College family, student-faculty relationships, etc. At this time, though, it is little more than talk. Our own family experience has been one of two-way discussion and sharing of ideas, a sharing that should be projected to the MC family way of life as well.

It is a frustrating and futile feeling to think that what we say is completely ignored by those to whom the comments are directed. We think sometimes that we're important only because we pay the bills and attend classes. But we LIVE here too. We can't go home at 5 o'clock in the afternoon to another world; our entire life is involved with the college.

Most of us are here because we want to be, and we love it. Especially during the Christmas season are we conscious of the value of a small Christian college, as we participate in the "Messiah," listen to the chimes from the town church, see the dogwood decorated with colored lights, and hear the language classes haltingly sing the familiar carols in French and German. But we have to make some changes too—or at least talk about it.

MARYVILLE – 600-500 B.C.

A certain timid old man had a dream in which his only son, who was strong and loved to hunt, was killed by a lion. Fearing that this dream would come true, he built a very beautiful room onto his house where he kept and guarded his son. For the boy's delight he painted all the kinds of animals on the wall including the lion. Seeing these, the son became sadder. Standing near the lion, he said, "O most evil wild beast, I am imprisoned in this room because of you and because of the false dream of my father." He then attacked the wall with his hands, wishing to blind the lion. He wounded his fingers with splinters, and a fever fell upon him. Not much later, he died. Thus the lion killed the son — and all the cunning of the father was to no avail.

The First Christmas

A star
Over a stable,
Sending its light
O'er the earth;
A host of angels
Singing
And praising the God
Who has sent a child —
His son —
Into the world,
Singing a welcome
And a reassurance
To shepherds,
To wise men,
To passers-by;
Inside,
A mother
With a newborn babe
Cradled in a hay-filled manger,
The radiance of God
Surrounding his tiny frame;
This is the tenderness —
With its joys and blessings —
Of a special beginning —
The first Christmas.

—Martha Edington

Can You Pass This Christmas Quiz?

You decorate your home with holly and sneak kisses under the mistletoe . . . take for granted that Christmas was always celebrated on December 25 . . . and even if you're past believing in Santa Claus, expect to see him drawn and painted as a jolly, bearded old elf. But did you ever stop to think of why you do these things!

1. How about your Christmas decorations: Know why we kiss under the mistletoe . . . from which country the poinsettia came . . . how the cherry tree figures in Yule lore?

Kissing under the mistletoe is said to have begun with the ancient Romans, who viewed the plant as a symbol of peace. Enemies, meeting under the mistletoe, were supposed to embrace and declare a truce. The poinsettia, another holiday bloom, comes from Mexico. Joel Poinsett, first American Minister to Mexico, brought it here in 1836. The cherry tree, according to the well-known "Cherry Tree Carol," bent its boughs so that the Virgin Mary could pluck its fruit.

2. Which settlers brought Santa Claus to the New World, and which three men created today's popular image of Santa Claus? Can you name his real-life prototype?

The Dutch brought San Nicolaas (Sinter Klaas for short) to the New World; later his name became Americanized to Santa Claus. Author Washington Irving first described Santa as riding through the skies in a reindeer-drawn sleigh. Clement C. Moore described Santa as fat and jolly, with a snowy beard, in his famous poem "A Visit from St. Nicholas." Cartoonist Thomas Nast drew him that way. Santa's prototype, the real St. Nicholas, was a 4th century Turkish bishop who became a legend in his own lifetime for his generosity and his love of children.

3. How did the Christmas toast and wassail bowl begin? Both were started in the same gesture by the daughter of an early Germanic chieftain on a campaign in Britain. Offering a garlanded bowl of wine to her father's princely host, she said "Waas-heil," or "Here's to you." The prince responded gallantly and they were soon married.

But it wasn't until the 17th century that people called a toast a toast. The term derived from a quaint English custom of floating a piece of toast in the drink to improve its flavor.

4. Christmas dates are the subject of this one: Who fixed the date of Christmas as December 25? In what century was Christmas first declared a legal holiday? Which Americans made it a crime to celebrate Christmas? When is Epiphany, and how does it fit into the Christmas calendar?

Pope Julius fixed Christmas at December 25, about the year 349 A.D. Two years later, after agreement on this date had been reached among church officials (some had favored fixing the Savior's birthday in January or March), Julius decreed that Christmas should thenceforth be celebrated on December 25. In the 6th century A.D. — the year 543, to be exact — Christmas was made a legal holiday in Rome. But 100 years before that, the Roman government had required all theaters to close on Christmas Day. The Puritans, in 1659, passed a Massachusets law making it a penal offense to celebrate Christmas! As for Epiphany, it occurs on January 6, and marks three events in the life of Jesus: His baptism, the visit of the Wise Men to Bethlehem, and the miracle at Cana.

"... In Mysterious Ways."

by Robert Harner

Eternity stretched and knotted; the world turned upside-down, then inside-out. The time machine rocked to a halt on Asian sand.

"We've made it!" exulted the dark-haired scientist as he slipped from his padded seat. His blond partner followed his example and then bent toward a porthole.

"Well," said the blond man, "I don't see any dinosaurs, so we can't be far too off."

The dark-haired one reached for a switch. "We better get this thing off the ground."

The other moved to help him, laughing half-humorously, "I would certainly hate to travel over all these centuries to see the birth of Christ only to be killed by some wandering band of Bedouins."

Somewhere in the bowels of the great vehicle, machinery groaned. With a whine of straining engines, the huge time-traveller lifted from the sand and rose slowly into the air. After a time it reached a height just within range of the human eye and ceased to rise.

As black fingers of night touched the portholes, the dark-haired scientist began to manipulate his instruments.

"I do wish," he said, "that there was an easier way to calculate which time we are in than to check it astronomically."

His partner did not answer, and for a few minutes the only sounds in the cockpit were the whirr of a computer and the whine of machinery. Then the blond man roused from his reverie and looked questioningly at his partner.

"Do you think we should be doing this? I mean, to travel in a time machine back to 4 B.C. in order to see the birth of Christ is beginning to seem like a little too daring an adventure to me. The thought occurs to me that perhaps God doesn't want us to do this."

The other man glanced up from his work. "You forget that we're in the past now; all of this had already happened. We've actually done this previously, centuries before our births. I happen to believe that God really does work in mysterious ways; in some way that we probably wouldn't understand, our trip works into God's ultimate plan. Don't worry; just be happy that we have this wonderful opportunity.

"I suppose you're right."

A buzzer rasped, and a red light blinked.

"The computer agrees with my calculations," said the dark-haired one. "We're in the right time."

Suddenly there was with the angel a multitude of the heavenly host praising God and saying glory to God in the highest and on earth peace good will toward men

And in despair I bowed my head
there is no peace on earth I said for hate is strong and mocks the song of peace

They have healed the hurt of the daughter of my people slightly saying peace peace when there is no peace

Peace on earth good will to men

San Francisco war is over peace on earth good will

We must learn to get along with the other fellow if the human race is to survive
you see we must survive

Budapest Cochinos Bay Stanleyville Berlin peace among the nations of the world

Then there was Vietnam

And Selma Watts Los Angeles
Berkeley INTELLECT
lets have a revolution lets get involved

God is dead
there are no simple answers

there is no right or wrong only acts of love

And still a Vietnam
all men are brothers
peace on earth good will to men

There is no peace on earth I said
there is no hope in man

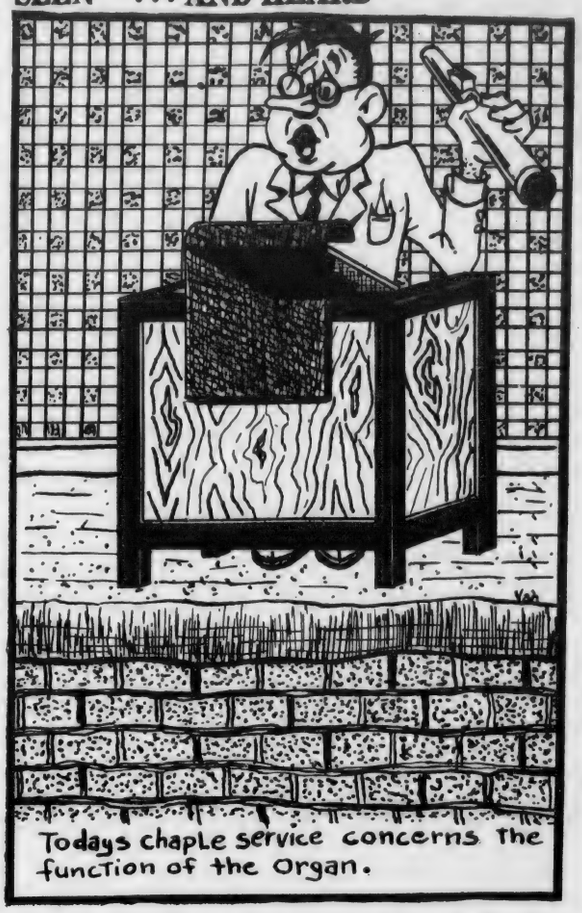
I'll Be Home For Christmas

by June Rostan



Christmas vacation finds the Maryville College freshmen returning home for the holiday season. For many of us the holiday vacation is our first visit home since we joined the "college set." Many have been eagerly awaiting the arrival of December 18th since September 13th.

Even though our eagerness has often been the source of harassment from upperclassmen, we suspect that our superiors are just as anxious to return home as we are. They just don't display their eagerness by numbering sheets of toilet paper and tearing one off for each completed day, marking off the days on a calendar, or even resorting to the strategy of two freshmen boys who count the number of vitamins to be consumed until Christmas vacation.

We anticipate the joys of sleeping 'til noon, staying out past ten-thirty, riding in cars (without a pink slip), seeing friends, being untraditional, and playing "college Joe." Yet, we wonder if our hometown friends have changed. We secretly fear that everything won't be the same. We dread the endless courteous questions, "How is college? Do you like it at . . . What is the name of that school you're going to? Oh, yes, Maravul!" to which we are expected to reply, "Oh, I just LOVE it at Maryville!" which becomes disgusting even if we do like it.

We will be expected to rant and rave about the wonderfully exciting college life. Exciting??? We will certainly appreciate the conveniences of home, such as bathtubs, homecooked meals, mattresses that don't sag, and mornings without the "Anvil Chorus" played by a distraught radiator. We wonder though if we will feel like strangers in our own homes when we realize that our families and old high schools are operating successfully without us. We may even be relieved to return to the ecstasy of eight o'clock chapels, classes, and social life at dear old Maryville College, in order to escape the torture of rest, relaxation, and peaceful hearts.

SEEN . . . AND HEARD

We don't have fairies anymore — the friars have taken over . . A right taut domestic situation . . . There's always a bunch like that — you know where Dante put those people . . . Anderson bell tower — a bird? . . . I'm just waiting for one of those concrete beams to catch on fire . . . What are you majoring in anyway — fundamentalism? . . . He won all eight sack lunches . . . Coke in cans? . . .It would take more than Moses to get the cut system changed . . .

In Autumn, Rain

In autumn, rain prickles down, quietly, stealthily, shrouding the earth in a bittersweet aura of emotion-emotion that shimmers like a mirage on the desert.
emotion that intensifies and blares into bright color among the center branches of a garnet tree.
emotion that calms and fades into grey mist around the outer branches of that same garnet tree.

In autumn, rain is not a wetness; it is a dampness that saturates the air completely as heartache or happiness saturates man-man whose heart aches with emptiness.
man whose mind despairs withe every failure.
man whose body tingles with the pain of seldom known happiness.

In autumn, rain is the emotion of men and the emotion of nature-nature that bathes hell and heaven in the same stream.
nature that chills body and electrifies spirit.
nature that sends the wind to play a jazz concert among misty treetops.

Scots Elect Webb and Story Grid Captains

At a meeting of the football team Tuesday, December 14, junior stalwarts Don Story and Sonny Webb were elected co-captains of the 1966 Maryville College football squad. Story, who played his high school ball at Walland, is a 6'1", 190 pound center and linebacker. He suffered a severe knee injury in the Homecoming game with Guilford and missed the latter part of this year's campaign, but is expected to be in top condition following an operation this spring. Webb, a 6'0", 185 pound end from Bristol, played both offense and defense for the Scots this season.

The members of the squad are working out on their own during the off-season while meeting twice a week for team recreation and conditioning this month. Coach Tomlinson will have the team in shape for spring practice in February. This is the first time in many years a Maryville football team has donned their pads in the spring. According to the tentative schedule, this year's practice will be climaxed by an intrasquad scrimmage.

Maryville's new co-captains are hard-working, talented, popular ballplayers who will be relied on heavily to lead the Scots back up the ladder to the top of small college football next year.

A rose . . . is a rose . . . is a Rose . . . tip your hat . . . let 'em cheer . . . his eyes are closed fans . . . swig your beer . . . the Porkies salute her . . . lo, how a Rose . . . we like these kind of halftime shows

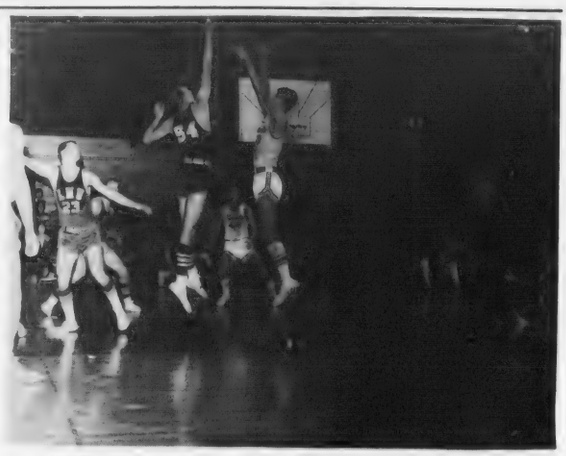
LMU Skunks Scots 90-67

Saturday evening December 4, the Maryville Scots dropped their home opener, 90-67, to Lincoln Memorial University.

Alexander Leads Scots

The LMU Railsplitters, led by Senior guard Jessie Herrel (24) and Freshman center Jim Tilley (15), piled up a 36-26 half-time advantage. Dave Alexander (21) and Les Dunson (12) led the scoring for the Scots.

MC Starters Foul Out



With Maryville's whole starting team out on fouls, LMU put the game on ice in the closing minutes of play. Foul shots proved a decisive factor as LMU picked up 46 points at the charity strip.

McGowen Missed

The Scots visibly missed Captain Denny McGowen throughout the game. McGowen sustained a knee injury in the season's opener last week and is not expected to play until after the holidays.

Maryville 0-2

The Scots are now 0-2 on the season. The team plays Berry College at home Monday night.

Les Dunson puts two points on ice for Maryville. Big Les got twelve this time, ten the next. Three more years? He'll really come around. A little weight — an even sharper eye? Look out.

Ball goes up . . . I've got it . . . Ugh! . . . tipped to a teammate . . . did my job. Dave Maxwell strains in vain even though he gets the tip. The Scots have lost, but not for lack of hustle.

Roundballers Blow Lead to Bryan

McGowen Out Til January

After jumping to a 16-point lead in the first ten minutes of play, the Maryville Scots seemed to fold in the second half and fell to Bryan College by a score of 69-65. Down four points at half time, Bryan staged an impressive comeback, in spite of a decided height disadvantage.

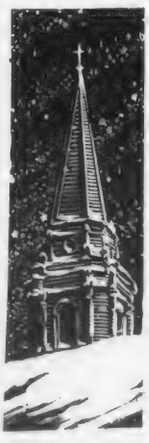
At times, the Scots looked very impressive in executing their free-lance offense, but they could not muster a sustained effort. Bryan, on the other hand, managed to play a consistent, if not fundamentally sound, game.

Even more disasterous than the psychological effect of losing the opener, was the loss of captain Denny McGowan, who was injured early in the second half. McGowan sustained a knee injury which required surgery and will keep him out of the lineup until after the Christmas break.

Bryan was led offensively by center John McInturff with 21 points, 17 of them coming in the second half. McGowan scored 17 points for the Scots before his injury occurred with twelve minutes yet to play.

Scots Succumb to Berry for Third Straight Loss

The Scots dropped their third straight game Monday night as the fans saw Berry College pull away in the second half to win by 19 points 68-49.



The first half was close all the way to the buzzer. At the end of the first quarter the score stood at 16-16. At the end of the half the score was 27-23 in favor of Berry. Berry came back an inspired five as the Scots cooled down too much during the intermission. At the end of the third quarter the Scots were still in fighting distance, down by only 8 points.

The gap slowly widened until it reached a maximum of 20 points with 2 minutes left.

Dave Alexander was the high scorer for the Scots, hitting 6 field goals and 2 free throws for a total of 14 points. Les Dunson was next with 10 and Darrell Maietta followed with 9. Benny Brynner was the high-point man of the evening, sinking 11 field goals and 5 free throws for 27 points for the winning Berry team. Jim Hinton was second for Berry with 12 points, Benny Donahue had 11.

Don your longjohns . . . the cold can hang. McGowan and McCampbell don't give a dang . . . Look thoughtful Denny . . . Joyful Hugh . . . don't look now your nose is blue . . . the captain and his first mate survey the storm at sea . . . the captain looks with confidence . . . the first mate wants to flee . . . who cares . . . you're only seniors and athletes at the same time once.

Matmen Lose to ASTC

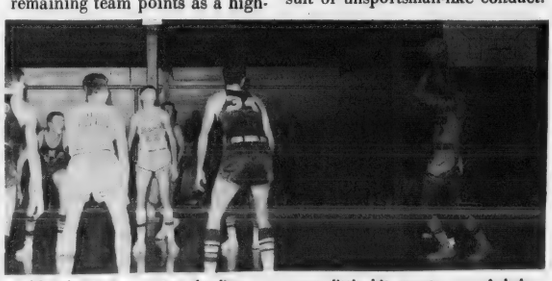
The Wrestling team, meeting its most formidable opponent of the season, Appalachian State, only managed to score team points in two individual matches as the Scots went down to defeat in their second meet.

Ron Pritts was a bright spot for Maryville as he grappled to a 5-2 decision over his opponent, in the 130 lb. class. Bob Nicholas scored the remaining points as he wrestled to his second tie of the season in a match that wound up in a stalemate 2-2. The remaining bouts went:

123 lb. Henderson	4-8
130 lb. Pritts	5-2
137 lb. Reis	pinned
145 lb. Patton	2-5
152 lb. Nicholas	2-2
160 lb. Stevenson	pinned
167 lb. Snitzer	pinned
177 lb. Gilmore	pinned
unlmt O'brian	pinned

So ready your fingers are even tense . . . concentrate . . . watch . . . listen . . . watch the ref . . . move quicker than he does . . . now John!

Pritts Shines in Grappler's Loss



Last Saturday's match was highlighted when Ron Pritts pinned his opponent in the second period to set the Scots ahead of Eastern Kentucky 10-0 after the first two bouts. Kentucky, however came right back and defeated the Scots in overall points 29-9*.

While the wrestling team is presently plagued with injuries during the roughest part of their season, a full squad will be on the mat for the College's first victory of the year against Carson Newman.

John Henderson's man missed weight (123 lbs.) but John wrestled him with the weight advantage and defeated him by a score of 6-3. Dependable as ever Ron Pritts, pinned his man for the remaining team points as a highlight in the match for the Scots It should also be mentioned in this article that the penalizing of the Maryville team and expelling of a team member was a misinterpretation of the rules on part of the referee, and that the embarrassment of that wrestler could have been avoided if the referee had consulted his rule book before making his call of unsportsman-like conduct.

123 lbs. Henderson	(forfeit)
130 lbs. Pritts	(pin-5:02)
137 lbs. Reis	(pinnned)
145 lbs. Stevenson	(2-6)
152 lbs. Nicholas	(9-13)
160 lbs. Patton	(pinned)
167 lbs. Snitzer	(4-13)
177 lbs. Gilmore	(pinned)
unlimt. O'Brian	(pinned)

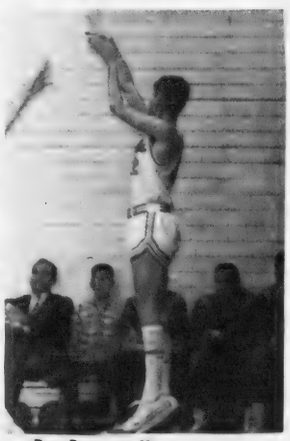
* one point was deducted from the Maryville team score as a result of unsportsman-like conduct.

Muscles taut . . . toe the line . . . every little bit counts . . . A-h-h.

Win Column Empty After Five; Payne Gets 22 in Defeat

The Maryville Scots sorely missed the services of their injured captain Denny McGowan, as they dropped their fifth straight game in an exciting contest with West Georgia College 61-57. Sophomore guard Don Payne led the Scots attack with 22 points in the scorebook.

After trailing 36-29 at halftime, Maryville pulled to within one point of the victors on three occasions. Freshman center Les Dunson tallied 14 points for the Scot cause. Steadily improving in each outing, the Scots need to improve their shooting eye as they hit only 29% from the floor. A healthy 67% shooting total from the free throw line was one of the bright spots in the defeat.



Maryville's passing was sharp and they ran their plays smoother than in previous showings. However, several costly floor mistakes gave the West Georgia five valuable points.

The statistics:

West Georgia (61): F-Jackson 17, Murphy 5; C-Richardson 4; G-Christophere 13, Crayton 10. Subs-Farmer 2, Adams 7, Jennings 3.

Maryville (57): F-Alexander 2, Maietta 4; C-Dunson 14; G-Payne 22, Llewellyn 8. Sub-Meyer 7.

Payne Scores!

Don Payne stuffs away two more points of his 22 against West Georgia. Payne's ball handling and play making is something to behold. Consistency is a virtue much desired in sports circles. Go boy.

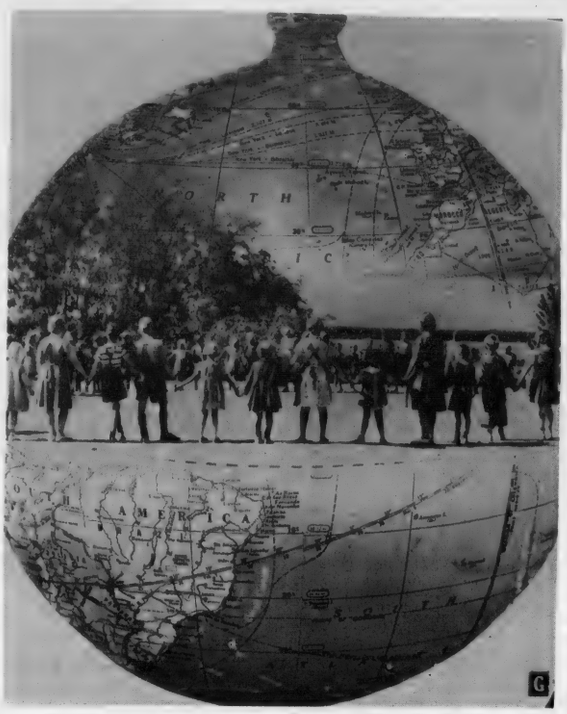
Jobs Open for Archaeology Digs

Here is a novel and exacting way to spend next summer in Europe! Last summer students from 36 colleges in 21 states exercised mind and muscle, mostly to their immense satisfaction, on archaeology "digs" in England.

The offer still goes for 1966 You may help to reveal the secrets of a Roman villa, an iron-age hill fort or the structure of a medieval town or Anglo-Saxon cathedral before they disappear, perhaps for ever. Expanding housing programs, city center redevelopment and new highway projects in Britain to-day have opened up many new possibilities for archaeological investigation.

You may help in this important work, earn credits, make international friends and receive valuable training in archaeology, by joining a program sponsored by the Association for Cultural Exchange, the British non-profit organization.

Volunteers first join a three week seminar for training in British archaeology and excavation techniques at Westminster College, Oxford. They then split up into small groups for three or more weeks "digging" on an archaeological site. Total cost of the program is 675 dollars, including round-trip air transportation from New York. Part scholarships are available to suitable students with a "B" plus average.



Write now for further details to: Ian A. Lowson, Association for Cultural Exchange, 539 West 112th Street, New York. Closing Application date is expected to be 1 January, 1966.

Christmas Around The World

Skiing down a mountain with a lighted torch in your hand . . . strewing hay on the floor of your home . . . knocking on neighbors' doors in a symbolic pilgrimage — these are some of the ways you might find yourself celebrating Christmas in other parts of the world.

In token of Christ's birth in a manger, Poles spread hay on the floor and Lithuanians have straw under the tablecloth at their festive Christmas Eve meal. The colorful Mexican posada or pilgrimage dramatizes the search which led Mary and Joseph to the stable. For each of the nine nights before Christmas, a couple dressed as Mary and Joseph goes from house to house. Only at the last house are they — and the parade of neighbors which is now following them — invited in for supper.

Singing as they go

An even more novel procession may be seen in the mountains of Austria. Wood carvers in the little town of Oberammergau meet on Christmas Eve and ski down the mountain slopes with flaming torches in their hands, singing as they go!

The prettiest—Lucia

Just about every country which celebrates Christmas has its unique bit of seasonal folklore or ritual. In Sweden, it's the feast of St. Lucia on December 13, ushering in the Christmas season. Each community chooses a lovely Lucia Queen to represent the young girl martyred for her religion centuries before in ancient Rome. In families with daughters, the prettiest plays the role of Lucia. Her "privilege": to wait on everyone else for the day!

Befana ate delinquents

But even the standard holiday features — Christmas dinner, Christmas presents and Yuletide decorations — have picturesque local variations. Not only does Santa have numerous aliases (he's Julenissen in Denmark, Pere Noel in France, the Abbot of Unreason in Scotland), but in Italy he is a she. Italian kids place their trust in Befana, an old woman on a broomstick who brings gifts to good children and ashes to bad ones. (In older versions of the legend, she ate the juvenile delinquents).

Americans are probably the champion gift-givers, spending more than $27 billion for Christmas presents in a recent year!

December 26—Boxing Day

But the bearded gent — and his counterparts in other countries — are kept busy in many lands, they must make two trips a season. The French exchange gifts on New Year's Day, but the impatient young fry are visited by Pere Noel on Christmas Eve. While waiting for Befana to come across on January 6, Italian kids and their elders draw small gifts on Christmas Eve from a jar called "the urn of fate." And leave it to the systematic British to establish December 26 as Boxing Day. On this pugilistic-sounding occasion, servants and tradespeople are remembered with boxes of money!

The date of the big Christmas dinner also varies around the world; many countries have it on Christmas Eve, before or after midnight services. Our traditional Christmas turkey does not appear on many menus. The French reveillon, a feast which occurs after midnight mass, is apt to feature oysters and sausages; in the French province of Brittany, buckwheat cakes with sour cream are served. The Norwegian called lutfisk. At a Polish Christmas Eve dinner, the number of courses is fixed at seven, nine or Christmas dinner features a fish eleven; a Lithuanian Christmas feast must include twelve courses, one for each of the twelve disciples!

Eat well on Christmas Eve

During the Christmas season, Germans and Rumanians bake long, thin cakes that symbolize the Christ Child wrapped in swaddling clothes. In the Ukrainian part of Russia, cattle are given the first taste of the Christmas supper, because animals were the first to behold Christ. In parts of rural Germany, this is carried one step further — cattle and their owners both fast the day before Christmas, and eat well on Christmas Eve!

Oranges instead of tinsel

"Deck the halls with boughs of holly" is a traditional refrain in English and American homes, but in Spain and Italy, householders decorate with flowers instead of evergreens at Christmas time. The Christmas tree, popular throughout the United States and Northern Europe, is relatively rare in Southern Europe; the creche, or manger scene, usually replaces it. In Sicily, many families use Christmas trees, but they decorate them with apples and oranges instead of tinsel!

This carries out an old tradition that all the trees bore fruit when Christ was born.

In England and France, the Yule log is favored; in some districts of England, whole families go to the forest to select their Yule log. Pear, olive and applewood are considered best, and tradition says that the log must be large enough to last until New Year's Day.

Perhaps the most unusual Christmas tradition of all is the one still adhered to by some Swiss romantics. These folk advise a boy or girl to visit nine different fountains and take three sips from each at the time the bells are ringing for midnight services on Christmas Eve. After this odd rite has been completed, the future husband or wife will be found standing at the door of the church and a regular courtship will begin — if the spell has worked.

Us, we'll take mistletoe.

The Way of Faith

by Dr. Esther C. Swenson

What is a teacher? The answers to this question are as varied and numerous as are the persons who answer to the title "Teacher." Even so, it would probably be generally agreed upon that one who teaches ought to have a high degree of competence in his subject matter, an ever-expanding grasp of its internal movement and external relations, and an ever renewed attempt to purify the processes of communication. Notwithstanding these excellent requirements one can still ask if there is not more to being a teacher than this, and one possible way of trying to discover whether or not this is so is to look at two men who have been given a revered place in history as "teachers." The first of these is Socrates; the second is Jesus of Nazareth.

Jesus committed to teaching

Granting that is is difficult to discover in any pure form that which constitutes Socrates as a teacher, one can still point to certain characteristics which are discoverable in the Platonized Socrates. The first of these is: Commitment to that which is greater than any mere earthly being. Socrates was a spirit-filled man; he himself referred to his "demon," the godly voice which he heard at the oracle and to which he owed obedience. There is no evidence that Socrates wandered in the market-place, chatting here and arguing there, because he wanted to, nor even because he had the talent of such activity. He did not embark upon his "career" because it would bring him status or respect, nor because he couldn't think of anything else to do. Socrates was a teacher because a god had spoken to him and called him, not to teaching-in-general but to a very specific task of human encounter. In like manner, Jesus of Nazareth entered upon his vocation of teaching, healing, and preaching because of his commitment to that which was greater than he, in this instance, God the Father of Abraham and David. It was not that he "wanted" to.

SHOT DOWN

I am a Man

Dusk settles.

Work comes to an end.
Strange work.
My Work.
Some ask why.
"Fool, more comes from other tasks!"

Why?
I cannot explain.
I turn to walk into the dying day.

Why?

Dirt, sweat cover my brow.
Slowly one step follows the other.
Why?
Do they need to know? Could they understand?
I pause.

Where is the sweat on their brows?
Where are their crying muscles?
They have a sweet fragrance.

No, they cannot perceive.
I turn.
I walk.

With each step my aching body cries out,
"I am a man."

How could they ever understand?

A Talk With Mr. Ramger

by Jean Micheals and Martha Edington

Some time ago our own Mr. Robert Ramger, well-known biology teacher, was asked by the Echo to submit an article describing his research conducted at Vassar College during the summers of 1963 and 1964. Knowing Mr. Ramger and his busy schedule, though, we decided it would be easier for him and more fun for us to take pen in hand and corner him for an interview. This we did with what, we think, are some interesting and amusing results.

Oh, really?

Needless to say, our first question was, "Just what did you study at Vassar?"

"Radiation effects on protozoa," from Mr. Ramger was followed by a small "oh," from us, which caused him to wonder if perhaps he had missed out on some sort of opportunity.

DNA duplication

Actually, Mr. Ramger and another M. C. grad, Dr. Donald Williams, who teaches at Vassar, associates through the Atomic Energy Commission, studied the effect ultraviolet radiation has on Spathidium, a type of protozoa most sensitive to radiation. In studying the life cycle and DNA synthesis in Spathidium, they found that the protozoa was not sensitive to radiation when its genes were duplicating. From months of all types of experiments on the DNA synthesis in this type of protozoa, there was found to be a close correlation between sensitivity to U. V. radiation and the duplication of DNA in a cell

She spoiled Mr. Ramger

"Can you tell us anything else you did during the weeks of research in 1964?" we wanted to know.

"Well, I lived with Miss Conklin for two months," Mr. Ramger confidentially replied.

"You what?" we gasped, intensely alert, pens poised, ready for anything.

What we weren't quite ready for (although knowing Mr. Ramger, we should have been) was that Miss Conklin was a 68 year-old retired professor of physiology who had rented a room of her house to Mr. Ramger while he carried on his research at Vassar. Miss Conklin was apparently also the motherly type, for she rather shamefully spoiled Mr. Ramger by pampering him for two months.

I had to get it myself

"Each morning when she'd hear me get up, she started breakfast, and by the time I came downstairs, she always had my orange juice and the New York Times beside my plate. I ate lunch at the lab, but nights when I came back, she'd ask if I wanted supper first or if I wanted to nap . . . I guess she spoiled me, because when I came home and told my wife to have my orange juice and a copy of the Knoxville Journal beside my plate, she told me to get it myself." (sigh).

After the summer of 1963 and the two months of research in 1964 at Vassar, Mr. Ramger went on to the University of Minnosota where he spent a year in classes at a teacher's institute sponsored by the National Science Institute. Here he studied radiation genetics more extensively.

When asked to comment on big university versus small college life, he said that, of course, it depends on the individual, but that for him, he was glad he had done his undergraduate work at Maryville, and that at a university of about 30,000 students he just couldn't see taking his life in his hands every time the bell rang.

A Hurt Too Deep For Tears

A hurt too deep for tears —
It makes your head pound,
Your whole body throb with
An aching, lonely desperation.

If you could just cry —
Perhaps then the tears could wash away

This feeling . . .
But you can't cry;
No matter how miserable you are,
No matter how much you want to,
No matter how hard you try —
You just can't cry.

And so, you're trapped —
Trapped by your own foolishness,
Your own pride and vanity;
Caught between reason on one hand
And feelings on the other.

You wish that you had never Heard of him —
Yet, at the same time,
You want him back again.

Reason tells you that
You don't like his type —
But you're confused and Saddened, because —
Something else, somewhere deep inside,
Tells you that you do.

"Then let's be on our way to Bethlehem," exulted the other, reaching for the controls.

There was a screech of air, and a large jet engine exploded into life. The monstrous time machine began to move slowly through the upper atmosphere, westward toward Bethlehem. The blond man glanced briefly through the rear porthole at the roaring flame of the jet's afterburner but then turned his attention forward again.

The two men flew on, eagerly anticipating a glimpse of the Saviour of the World; they flew on, gazing at the approaching horizon and failing to notice, on the ground behind them, three men on camels diligently following the radiant glow of their afterburner.

nor for status, prestige, money, or other motivation. He simply announced and hoped that all would understand: "Know ye not that I must be about my Father's business."

Socrates paralleled with Christ

A second characteristic held in common by these two great teachers is the refusal to give direct and dogmatic answers and pronouncements. In Socrates this is demonstrated by his "irony," the essence of which is that he knows only one thing, namely, that he does not know. He does not represent himself as a fount of all wisdom and knowledge; he confronts his fellow-men as one who does not know, who does not have answers, who cannot dispense wisdom. He does not "pronounce," since the only thing of which he is sure is that he does not know. The same kind of refusal is discovered in Jesus of Nazareth's mode of teaching in that he speaks in parables, in figures, in ways that made one of his witnesses, Mark, refer over and over again to the failure of the disciples to understand. He responded to questions with questions or with stories rather than with direct answer.

Both the ironic Socrates and the "indirect" Jesus reveal another trait essential to their teaching. Neither ever let certain crystallized beliefs stand in the way of his encountering each real human being in his humanness, his nakedness, his hiddenness and his revealedness. Each thrust through all that might stand between himself and his "students" in order that he might involve himself in the very personness of the one he faced. Depth was to speak to depth, spirit to spirit, person to person or there was no teaching, no matter what intellectualized statements might be being uttered and formed.

Man called to be himself

A consequence of Socratic irony and of Jesus' "indirect approach" is that of the teacher acting as a midwife. Socrates openly referred to himself in this way. Instead of telling man the truth, Socrates tried to bring into birth in the one with whom he was involved a spirit of searching and inquiry. Out of such a living moment, each man might move toward becoming the truth rather than latching on to it in second-hand fashion. "Know thyself" is the only Socratic imperative as a teacher, and one can understand this as "Become thyself." Jesus also worked as a midwife. There is every indication that he accepted, in his teaching, that which Paul later expresses so clearly in the first chapter of Romans, namely, that man as a creature knows all that is necessary for him to know . . . that no man is indeed God the Lord. And so, as a midwife, by stories and figures of speech. he expected each one to come and see for himself that he was indeed a creature of God. Jesus called each man to become this himself.

Union between student & faculty

It would appear to me that a teacher must certainly be one who is the best in his or her respective field. The church college above all others must seek best. Not to do so would be to give the lie to the faith of the church that the scriptures witness that in Jesus Christ the full life of the mind in the service of neighbor is declared by God to be good. But it would also appear to me that for those of us whose roots are in the joining of a Greek heritage with a Christian heritage that a teacher must be one who has these further characteristic to his person as a teacher: committment to that which is greater than any created being, irony and the refusal to dispense answers, the art of drawing a person into his own life of search for truth and reality, and refusal to permit any beliefs or any intellectual language to stand as a barrier between him and those he encounters. There is not to be an unbridgeable gap between teacher and student, not is there to be amalgamation. There is to be the union of communion.

Teaching is the way of faith

But all this reveals one further characteristic of the teacher, namely, vulnerability, With this we do not mean inadequacy or weakness. We mean the responsibility which comes with committment, irony, midwifery, communion. Socrates, the teacher, exposed himself to the full wrath of those who cannot tolerate the uneasy, ever-moving freedom of searching, seeking inquiry, and the right of each man to come to his own truth. The charge was the corruption of morals; the judgment was the hemlock. Jesus of Nazareth opened himself to the full wrath of those who cannot tolerate the moving living into truth. The charge was immorality, the breaking of the law; and the judgment was the cross. To try to enter into teaching as Socrates and Jesus of Nazareth did is to open oneself to risk, it is to walk through the door into the room of vulnerability. The charge is always immorality and the judgment is always some form of death. Is it not in this way that the way of teaching is also the way of faith?

(By way of footnote, lest my critics charge to impale me for what I have not said rather than entering into what I have tried to say, my putting together of Socrates and Jesus of Nazareth as teachers says, as yet, nothing to detract from the Christian affirm — that in Christ God was reconciling the world to himself.)

Dr. Bloy Leads Music Seminar

by Mary Rucker

On Thursday night, December 3, a group of students and faculty assembled in Room 104 of the Fine Arts Center. The occasion — the first Seminar on Twentieth Century Music, sponsored by Tau Kappa Chi, the honorary music society of Maryville College.

The seminar, led by Dr. Bloy, was entitled "Contemporary Trends in Liturgical Music." Dr. Bloy was in top form as he presented the discussion, and shortly the students around the table began to relax and enjoy the evening. There was something unusual about being in a group which included faculty members, talking with them about a subject which normally might require classroom stiffness and note-taking "because this might be on the exam."

Music is a true art

To begin with, Dr. Bloy defined his use of the term "liturgical" music as that which was composed specifically for use in the church, rather than performance in concert. In judging what is "good" church music, one may refer to a papal encyclical of Pope Pius X, written in 1903, which has been of primary influence in the twentieth century. The Pope directed that music in the church should clothe the liturgical text — not overpower it. Not only should music have a functional part of the services, but it must also be a true art, sung or played (but not on piano or drums!) to the glory of God.

Field open for composers

Selections of contemporary liturgical music were discussed according to these and other terms, but it was decided that possibly in the final analysis, there are certain qualities in good church music that one can only sense without theoretical explanation. At any rate, in this period of transition in church music, the field is wide open for new composers, and there all kinds of texts just "lying around waiting to be used."

May His message of peace and good will fill every heart at this Christmas season. And may your heart and home be filled with all the many blessings of the Yuletide.

U. P. Church Needs Workers

About a thousand college-age and older volunteers are needed for both short-term and one- and two-year assignments here and abroad under the auspices of the United Presbyterian Church, U.S.A.

Projects from China to N.J.

Most of the volunteers are sought for two- and three-month stints this summer in rural and urban poverty areas of the United States from Alaska to Puerto Rico. A smaller number will take part in summer "pick and shovel" work camps in Europe, the Middle East, Africa, Asia, and South America.

About 15 vacancies exist for those who can give a year or more of their lives to help tutor young Chinese reaching the U. S. West Coast from Hong Kong and Taiwan; to do club and recreation work in St. Louis; to assist with community development projects in Kentucky and California, and to help develop community activities in a Newark, N. J., housing project.

831 workers last year

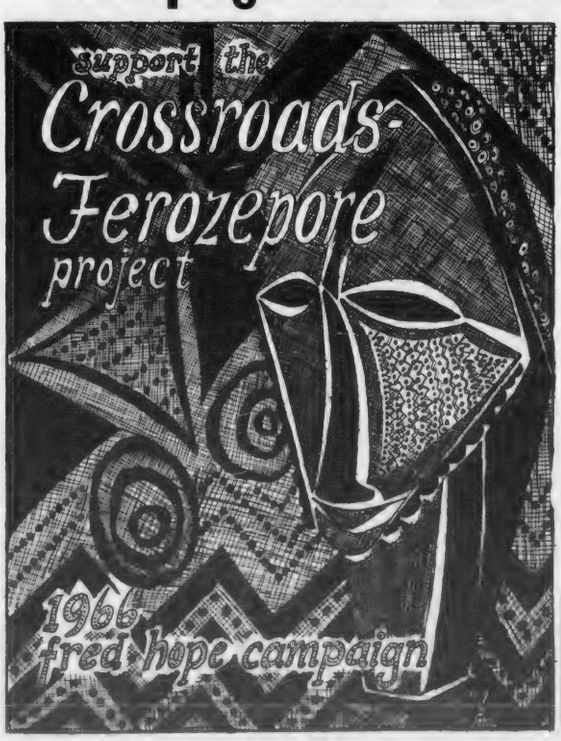
Summertime work will include remedial education and enrichment projects in culturally deprived areas, work with block clubs, church-sponsored anti-poverty projects, civil rights programs, day camps, and vacation church schools. Swimming instructors, life-savers, library assistants, recreation leaders, teachers, doctors, nurses, laboratory technicians, nursing aides and maintenance workers are among those needed.

Last year 831 students and others signed up for work in the church's domestic voluntary work corps. In most cases they worked as interracial teams or in situations that broke racial, cultural, or language barriers.

Scholarship help available

A number of students who speak Spanish are on call for work in Miami with Cuban refugees and in Chicago, New York, San Francisco, and other cities with sizeable Spanish-speaking populations.

Many projects to which volunteers will be assigned are ecumenically planned and sponsored. Included are work in California migrant camps, in the Church-Community Action Program of The Greater Portland (Ore.) Council of Churches, and in an inter-church urban ministry in Buffalo, N. Y.



Volunteers are expected to pay their own transportation costs to and from their assignments. Scholarship help is available, but limited. Applicants need not be United Presbyterian.

Art Classes Held for the Public

Art classes for both children and adults, including teenagers, have started at Maryville College. The adult classes which began February 2 and meet every Wednesday night from 7:30 to 9:30, are being taught by Mr. Swenson. They are for oil painting and other media. The classes for children from 5 to 8 years old started on February 4 and will meet every Friday from 3:30 to 4:30. They are taught by Miss Mueller and include work in painting, drawing and clay modeling.

Campaign Goal Set at $3,000

The Crossroads-Ferozepore Project (the Fred Hope Campaign for 1966) has been set for February 1 through March 10. Part of the funds raised through the project will be used to help send at least two Maryville students on a work-study seminar this coming summer under Crossroads Africa; part will also be used in the work of the Frances Newton Hospital in Ferozepore, India. This strategic hospital has recently been involved in the Kashmir crisis, and is directed by Dr. Dorothy Ferris, a Maryville alumna.

In order to realize the campaign goal of $3,000 (two times that collected last year), all organizations and societies are urged to sponsor projects for this purpose — and individuals in the college community are especially urged to become familiar with the project and to contribute to this goal.

The Highland Echo wishes to extend its sympathy to the family of Mr. Lonnie Dotson on the death of their son in Vietnam. Mr. Dotson is a member of the College's maintenance staff.

EDITORIAL OUTLOOK

Once again this year we are being approached to give money to the Fred Hope Fund. Always before we've been turned off by the very name. But now, for some reason, it suddenly seems like a good opportunity to give to a worthwhile project. Every student seems financially able to spend hundreds of dollars a year on cokes, cigarettes, pizza, and the like. Yet when a thing comes up like this Fund, we think that we are being imposed upon if asked to contribute something. And the goal of $3000 will never be met if only a select group of campus inhabitants decides to participate. Maybe we could even give more than just the extra, loose change sitting around.

It is not often that we are given the chance to do something of value. So why pass it up this time?

It was fascination

by Beth Mahler

On Friday evening, January 28, Dr. James A. Bloy, organist, presented the second faculty recital of the year. The program, consisting entirely of the music of Johann Sebastian Bach, was surprisingly varied. The Concerto No. 2 in A Minor was a fascinating opening piece. Dr. Bloy's technical facility and his feeling for the spirit of Bach was evident here. The chorales, no less difficult, represent the deeply religious aspect of Bach's work, and were full of symbolism not obvious to one unfamiliar with the Baroque style of music. Recognizing this, Dr. Bloy sought to bridge the gap by explaining the chorales and some of the musical motives. The Dorian Toccata was perhaps the most striking number of the evening and the most familiar, judging from the response of the audience. The Pastorale was yet another phase of Bach's style — his lyrical and almost romantic melodies against a simple, yet subtle accompaniment. To this reviewer, however, the crowning point of the recital was the final number, the Prelude and Fugue in C Major. Not having been previously acquainted with the work, I was struck by the rugged power in this composition, and the spirit and feeling with which it was performed captivated one from beginning to end. The enthusiastic response of the sizable audience testified to the success of the program and performance.

Mud Pies

Book review by Sherri Proffitt

If you enjoy running through a field of dasies on a sunny afternoon, or ice skating on a frozen pond at 2:00 a.m., or sitting by a brook listening to the song of the rocks, you might also enjoy reading Mud Pies and Other Recipes by Marjorie Winslow. The author describes the book as being "an outdoor cookbook." She continues "Not many supermarkets are as well stocked as a forest or a sand-dune or a backyard. The sea makes a nice sink and so does a puddle at the end of a hose. Recipes (all tested by the author's children) are included for such delicacies as Tossed Leaves, Bark Sandwich, Daisy Dip, and Honeysuckle Wine. Very young homemakers are instructed to take pains in preparation and serve with a flourish. All dolls who love the sweet feel of seaweed on the tongue and the crunch of pine needles will be welcome guests." If a kitchen is available, you might try one of these recipes:

MUD PUDDLE SOUP

Find a mud puddle after a rainstorm and seat your dolls around it. Serve.

ROAST ROCKS

Place 6 medium-size rocks in an oven and roast until hard on the outside but still rare inside. This takes about as long as chasing a butterfly. Roast rocks tend to be difficult to slice, so serve each doll a whole rock. Serves 6.

QUICKSANDWICH

This filling is hard to find, hazardous to collect and therefore a rare delicacy. Spread between two small skimming stones. Eat quickly.

MUMS '61

Shread several small or one large chrysanthemum into a watering can half filled with hose water. Set in the sun to distill. The longer this beverage is allowed to stand, the mellower it becomes. Strain through the watering can into punch cups.

Mud Pies and Other Recipes is published by The Macmillan Company. Take $2.50 with you if you go shopping for it.

Notice to all students taking Sociology 306—the library will feature books on Marriage and the Family on the February bulletinboard.

I never looked for anything but what surprised me when I found it.
Goldenrod in clover
Butter
Mouse dirt
in the cellar.
Burrs on foxes.
Water, in a valley
down a gulley on a cheek.

I was ne'er surprised by anything but looked until it found me gagged and bound me danced around me and departed.

Stunned and numb to lie beneath the bat cries, tasting shadows
-innuendoeshints of shadow makers.

Beyond meanderings of men
I am.

Men who hope in other men and writings
Long for comings
Dream of landings from a distant star.

I look to here and the paths of trout
The tracks of winging gulls
Five fingered starfish sleeping and the empty hulls of snails gone home to God.

No, I never looked for anything
but what surprised me when I found it at my feet-which long ago have learned to wander, pause awhile in silent wonder and move off again in search — in endless search.

D.R.P.

He seeth, and he doeth know it in an instant —
The temple of his God.
He seeth, and he doeth know men's imperfection
From the beginning in once-untainted garden.
He entereth, quiet terror just awaked,
Nor seeking martyrdom nor fleeing it, flieth forth,
Scattereth the money-changers
In clatter of coin and flurry of loosed dove-wing.
His anger kindleth against them,
And casting out those who buy and bargain and barter,
He speaketh saying,
"Ye make of the house of prayer a den of thieves!"
All crowd in thick disorder towards the door,
Their escape,
He followeth in their wake,
His mission done, his justice executed.
The high priest doeth confront him in the street,
"Thou callest thyself a Christian, my young man?
Be thou as Christ was — kind, loving, meek.
May God forgive thee, brother."

Next to Myself I Like B.V.D.'s Best

(APS) Eve started it all with a few fig leaves. Then prehistoric man went one step further and, whether out of modesty or simply to keep warm, fashioned garments from animal skins. When he discovered that two layers were warmer than one, the history of underwear began. From that time to today, the story of underwear is filled with little-known and interesting fashions and facts.

13-inch waste in underwear

Can you imagine, for instance, wearing wooden underwear? Probably not, but it was everyday attire for fashionable women of the 16th Century when Catherine de Medici decreed a 13-inch waist for the ladies of the French court.

The only way women of the time could achieve the desired wasp-waisted effect was to wear stiff wooden stays. And some even went so far as to wear undergarments made of iron!

A women's were usually visible

According to information supplied by researchers at the Underwear Institute, the Norman knights introduced the word chemise to describe a shirt worn by men or a long smock worn by women.

The garments worn by the Norman knights were embroidered around the neck and wrists A women's chemise was basically the same as a man's except that it was ankle length and full. The collar and cuffs of the chemise were usually visible outside the other garments and so were often elaborately embroidered, sometimes with gold thread if a man could afford it.

Queen refuses clergyman

The most common materials used during the 11th through the 13th Centuries were linen, hemp and silk textiles. In order to boost the lace industry, the rulers of Venice passed an edict in 1542, which forbade the use of gold and colored silks in embroidery on undergarments among other clothing items. So collars and cuffs were soon trimmed in lace.

And in Elizabethan England, it was ruled that no man below the rank of knight could wear pleated shirts with silk, gold or silver threads.

But while many of Queen Elizabeth's subjects may have been fretting over this new law, one William Lee, a clergyman, was busy working on an invention which would someday help to revolutionize the undergarment industry. In 1589, Lee invented the first knittting machine; however, the queen refused him a patent, because she feared it would put too many people, who knitted by hand, out of work.

Great strides taken in underwear

The underwear industry as we know it, today in the United States, actually had its start three centuries later during the Civil War, when underclothes for the armies had to be produced in large quantities. Builders of power-driven, circular-knitting machines had stepped up production during the War to meet increased demands. An abundance of machinery to produce it and a growing population to clothe combined to give the knit underwear industry the impetus for the great strides of the past century.

More people wearing underwear than ever before

A popular undergarment of the 19th Century — the union suit — is often erroneously associated with the Civil War. Actually, the name has no patriotic connection but instead refers to the fact that the suit is a one-piece, or 'united' garment. Shirt and short type underwear was popularized during W.W. I and, by 1918, was generally accepted throughout the country.

Knit underwear production has increased many fold since 1860. The records for that year show total production of 500,216 dozens. Compare this with the 1964 production figures of 82,520,000 dozens. Since this figure includes only knit cotton and wool garments, the total would be much greater if synthetics were included.

Gemini put "fly" in undewear

What does the future hold in store for underwear fashions? If the present trend continues, undergarments will be briefer in style, but purchased in greater quantity. The continuing discovery of new fibers and fabrics will also have an effect on appearance and style. Underwear manufacturers have already entered into what may become one of tomorrow's major areas of concern — space underwear. The Gemini space suit consists of five layers, the first of which is a white, cotton-knit undergarment made to withstand constant wear. With the advent of long-duration flights, comfort and fit are more important than ever. For earth-bound man as well, comfort and fit are likely to remain uppermost considerations in the selection of undergarments.

New Aid to Copying

The library has gained a new machine which "Copies Anything." The 10c Vico II Copier copies anything from letters, photos, articles and books to maps and notes.

The Vico II copies with white lettering on a black background. It is a self-service machine for the students' use. Material being copied does not pass through the machine.

The Vico-Matic copier can be used whenever the library is open. It is located behind the check-out desk, and should be in working order in the very near future.

MY COUSIN'S

Gala Doubleheader Slated for Tonight's Program

Scots Fourth in Mat Tourney

The Maryville College wrestling team, seriously hampered by an incomplete squad, entered the Chattanooga Invitational Wrestling Tournament held January 14 and 15 and emerged with fourth place honors. Forfeits in the 177 pound class and the 191 pound class set the Scot grapplers at a disadvantage from the outset. The conflict between final exams and the weekend tournament deprived Maryville of its 130 pounder, Ron Pritts, and the squad's freshman members, which proved to be a definite handicap. The remaining representation faired well.

In the first round of the tournament, held Friday night, the Scots were pitted against the University of Chattanooga team. The opening match of the evening proved advantageous to the Orange and Garnet cause as Andy Ruhlin decisioned Sam Dunn 4-0 in the 115 pound class. Next John Henderson, completing in the 123 pound slot, captured a point win over Allen Zeigler by a 6-2 margin. Tom Wylie carried the Maryville torch in the 130 pound spot and pinned his opponent in 1:21 in the first period. Ralph Johnson also pinned U.C's 137 pound contender in 4:46.

Scot Luck Changes

The Scot luck shifted after 137 pounds and the remaining Maryville grapplers were defeated. Steve Hodson, 145 pound class, suffered an 8-3 loss; Rob Nicholas touched down in 6:02 in a hard fought match; and George Patton lost 3-0 in the 160 pound division. Dan Gilmore and Pat O'Bryan were also pinned.

Finals Less Bright

Saturday morning brought the second round and the chance for a title sweep of the first four weight classes. As the final matches progressed, Maryville's hopes for crowns dwindled as Andy Ruhlin succombed to Telfair Parker of Sewanee in 4:42. Ruhlin was awarded second place in his tournament division. John Henderson went down 9-2 to pounders. At 130, Tom Wylie Sewanee's Baker in the 123 fell victim to Pulrie of Milligan and was pinned in 6:03.

Johnson Gets Crown

Once defeated Ralph Johnson showed his Sec champion form and emerged king of the 137 pounders, decisioning his opponent 6-0. The remaining Scots had only moderate success, as Rob Nicholas took third place in the 152 pound class, and Pat O'Bryan also captured third place in the heavyweight division defeating his man 4-3. George Patton lost 4-2 and Steve Hodson and Dan Gilmore were both pinned. The Scots face Sewanee tonight in the Alumni athletic plant immediately following the basketball game.

Grapplers Get Year's First Win

On December 16th, the wrestling team presented Maryville College with a Christmas present that was long overdue and gratefully received . . . the first athletic victory of this academic year. Throughout an impressive performance by the lightweight and middleweight divisions of our team, just revenge was paid to our arch-rivals Carson Newman, for their fall football success. The only word which might describe the performances by the first five weight classes adequately is "speedy," because, thanks to four pins in five matches, the over-all match was certainly very speedy.

The contest opened with formidable John Henderson facing Carson Newman's Gary Kennedy in the 123-pound division. After taking his opponent down with a underarm sweep, John came close to pinning him, but he waited until early in the second period to finish the job to put the Maryville grapplers ahead 5-0.

One of the finest wrestlers on the squad, Ron Pritts, followed in the 130 pound class. Ron put his man away in the first period as the Scots jumped to a 10-0 lead.

Back from a three week layoff because of broken fingers, team captain Ralph Johnson upped the score to 15-0 with a third period pin after running his match score to 15-2.

Tom Wylie, a latecomer to this season's roster, supplied a pleasant surprise as well as necessary points in his 6-2 decision over his opponent. Hard work coupled with proficient takedowns overshadowed the fact that Wylie's opponent had a ten-pound weight advantage. This match left the scoreboard tally at Maryville 18-Carson Newman 0.

In the 152-pound class, Rob Nicholas joined the ranks of the "pin corps" and upped the score 23-0. Nicholas, normally a cautious wrestler, put forth maximum effort and showed his ability more than in previous matches. His pin came in the second period.

In the next two weight divisions, 160 and 167, Dick Stevenson and George Patton fought hard, but lost 4-0 and 6-0 respectively as they faced sizable weight advantages. The score climbed to 26-6 in favor of the home matmen.

In the 177-pound class, freshman George Schnitzer used his legs to overcome a weight disadvantage and emerged a winner in his tight 2-0 match. This match is definitely the best Schnitzer has looked all year and besides being perhaps the most exciting of the evening, clinched the victory for Maryville.

In the last two classes, Dan Gilmore, 191 pound class, and Pat O'Bryan, heavyweight, were pinned by their opponents leaving the final score 26-16 in favor of Maryville.

It is easier to suffer in silence if you are sure someone is watching. Soon autumn comes, and the ripe ruddy fruit, Is gathered: the glad season will not stay . . .

Roundballers Remain Ranine

A highly talented Shorter College basketball team encountered a surprising amount of opposition but still managed to handily defeat Maryville by a score of 79-53.

Utilizing a tenacious defense, Shorter jumped out in front in the opening minutes, but the Scots came back to within a few points on several occasions during the first half. The 15 point first half advantage was too much for the Scots to overcome.

Maietta Leads Scots

Earl Driggers led the winners with 19 points and all but two Shorter roundballers put points on the score board. Darrell Maietta tallied 13 for Maryville and Les Dunson added 12 to the losing cause.

In spite of the score, the Scots played what was perhaps their best game of the campaign, but, as usual, they suffered from a distinct height disadvantage and lack of aggressive rebounding.

After an excellent showing the night before, the Scot team collapsed offensively and defensively and allowed Berry College to race to a 10 point lead in the opening moments. Maryville committed a multitude of floor mistakes and numerous other errors, both mental and physical.

Berry Substitutes Romp

Substitutes played most of the game for Berry and all players on the BC squad accounted for at least 2 points. Danny Price led the winners with 22 points. No Scot figured in double figures. High man for the Scots was the now defunct Dave Alexander who "poured through" 9 points during the ordeal.

The Scots sport a record unmarred by victory. They take on Mars Hill on the home court tonight at 7 p.m. in the field house.

Wrestlers Whop YMCA

Coach J. A. Davis' wrestlers picked up their second and third victories at the hands of the Knoxville YMCA by defeating them 33-7 and 23-11.

Ron Pritts and George Schnitzer highlighted the two back to back victories for the Scots as both competitors pinned their opponent in the first match and decisioned them in the return bout.

In other matches, Rob Nicholas defeated the Knoxville captain Joe O'Donell in the second match after having held him to a tie in their first go around. Pat O'Bryan, Maryville heavyweight battled to a tie in the second engagement against Knoxville's 260 pound Dave Long.

ECHO TO BECOME WEEKLY

The Highland Echo staff, in a special meeting held on February 8, voted to change the bi-weekly status of the newspaper in favor of a weekly basis. Explaining new developments in administration-student communication, the editor expressed the desire that the Echo become more vitally involved in ways not available through a bi-weekly system.

To facilitate the handling of material, all organizations and individuals are asked to submit copy by Friday, nine days before the publication of each issue, whenever possible.

Student Body Told of M. C. Developments

The Salzburg Marionette Theater of Salzburg, Austria, will appear in the next Artist Series program to be presented in the Wilson Chapel, February 24, at 8:15 p.m. In addition to this evening performance of Mozart's "The Magic Flute," the company may be seen at a matinee in the afternoon at 3:30 when they will do Tschaikowsky's "Nutcracker Suite."

by John Mulholland

Saturday morning one week ago, after our traditional stream of announcements by Dean McClelland, Hugh McCampbell stepped to the podium. Something new was in the air. Maryville College broke tradition and set a new precedent — communication with the Student Body on matters concerning the life of our college and planning for the program here. Introducing President Copeland and the Dean of Students, Dr. Fuhr, Hugh said in a few words the meaning of this history making session: "In an effort to initiate communication between faculty and administration and student body, Dr. Copeland and Dr. Fuhr are here to explain some developments at Maryville."

Firm aided in plans

Dr. Copeland brought the student body up to date as to the many developments concerning the discussion of changes in the curriculum. First, he mentioned the Board of Directors and their involvement in studying the academic life of Maryville. A self-study directed by the Southern Association of Colleges Accrediting Agency was sponsored by the Board. Another study by a private firm contributed to the Board's study.

Other schools studied

Second, information concerning the newly-constituted committee of the faculty, the Consultative Committee, composed of heads of various departments and other faculty members, was conveyed. While studying the program at Maryville, the committee is also studying other college programs for new directions toward an improved curriculum.

Heads consider curriculum

Third, mention was made of the study given by the head of each department as to what he or she felt should be changed in the curriculum within that discipline in line with what each

Phi Mu Alpha Installed Feb. 5

A chapter of the Phi Mu Alpha Sinfonia music fraternity was installed at Maryville College in ceremonies at the Fine Arts Center on Saturday, February 5. Fifteen Maryville College students and three members of the faculty were initiated into the new chapter in ceremonies conducted by the Theta Omicron Chapter of the University of Tennessee.

The Xi-Rho Chapter at Maryville College presented a recital during the ceremonies, and following the recital an informal reception was held in the Lounge of the Fine Arts Center. About 50 persons were present, including the members of the new chapter and guests.

The pledges were formally inducted after the reception, which was followed by a dinner at which officers of the new organization were installed. The officers are Hugh Livingston, President; James Breckenridge, Vice President; Thomas S. Dickson, Treasurer; Charles W. Meeker, Jr., Secretary; William J. Rumsey, Historian; Michael A. Shaver, Warden; Victor R. Schoen, Executive Alumni Secretary; and Dr. Harry H. Harter, Faculty Advisor.

Charter members besides the officers are Thomas N. Allen, Edwin J. Best, Jr., Russell J. Bright, Thomas S. Dickson, Frederick C. Doscher, Joseph W. Henry, Thomas M. Llewellyn, Hugh S. McCampbell, John A. Myers, David L. Seeley, Geoffrey R. M. Skrinar, Dr. James A. Bloy, Robert W. McKaskell, and Lou S. Mize.

Members of other chapters of Phi Mu Alpha who are already at Maryville College are the President of the new chapter, Mr. Livingston, Robert J. Bonham, Dr. Harter, John A. Roberts, and Mr. Schoen.

The fraternity will meet twice a month, and is planning an active program for the remainder of the school year.

Lenten Service Offered by UCCF

On February 23 this year, the Lenten season begins with the observance of Ash Wednesday. In an effort to make Lent more meaningful for the Christian community at Maryville College, the U.C.C.F. commission on worship is sponsoring an Ash Wednesday service of prayer and scripture in the Little Chapel at 9:30 P.M.

The order of worship is adapted from the Episcopalian Book of Common Prayer and the Presbyterian Book of Common Worship. The service itself is largely penitential in character in keeping with the emphasis of the Lenten season. The richness of the tradition of this service of worship combined with the high amount of congregational response required should make this worship experience a proper and fitting beginning for the Christian observance of Lent here at Maryville College.

Maryville Band Honors Lincoln

The Maryville College Highlander Band under the direction of John A. Roberts presented a concert in the Chapel February 12 at 8:15 p.m. Featured on the program was Aaron Copeland's "Lincoln Portrait" with narration by Harold Laster in observance of the birthday of Abraham Lincoln.

Other music on the program included the Overture to "Italian in Algiers" by Rossini, and the playing of Clifton Williams' "The Sinfonians" commemorating the formation of a new chapter at Maryville College of Phi Mu Alpha Sinfornia.

Allan Fields On Admission Staff

Mr. Allan R. Fields of Presque Isle, Maine, who completed his undergraduate work at Maryville College at the end of the first semester and will receive his diploma at the commencement in June, has joined the College Admissions staff for a period of temporary work. Mr. Fields plans to enter General Theological Seminary, New York, to begin his seminary training for the Episcopal ministry next September.

During the interim he will be working in the College student recruitment program, according to Colonel Taylor, the Director of Admissions. After a period of indoctrination, Mr. Fields will begin a series of visits to high schools in the State of Florida. During this period he will contact approximately 75 high schools, talking with guidance personnel and high school students.

EDITORIAL OUTLOOK

Maryville College – Out of the Past into the Future?

Editorials are hard to do, especially when the writer is excited, because there is always the frustration that the written word is not nearly so forceful as that spoken. But, we've got things to say today that we have wanted to be able to say for a long time.

The Echo, in a series of articles last semester, complained and complained about administrative policy, lack of communication, etc. We asked direct questions and received no answers. We were told by some to keep hammering; by others to lay off. It is with the utmost satisfaction that we are able to report at this time that the questions have been heard, answers have been given, and measures are being taken to end the atmosphere of mistrust, guarded silence, and rebellion in which we lived for the first half of this year.

In the pages of this paper are evidences of the above. Dr. Copeland and Dean Fuhr, in a precedent-setting talk, have told us the present status of the demerit system and curricular reform. We now know ever so much more than we did before. But this is just the beginning. No longer will we be kept in the dark about things of vital concern to the campus community; no longer will we be able to charge that "they" don't care about us — because they do . . . and are ready to listen to all reasonable suggestions and complaints.

Maybe this is a pie in the sky and maybe it isn't. Who knows? Yet, for some reason, the indications that all of this is on the level are so encouraging that we find it hard to be our pessimistic old self. Because, you see, everyone and anyone who has anything to say about the kind of school they want will be given the opportunity to say it — and to the right people, the people who can do something about it.

So, fine — that takes care of Maryville College. What about that other thing out there that's called the world? We cannot get so wrapped up in ourselves that we scarcely realize that other things are happening. To this end a committee has been formed to make us aware of that world. Lectures, art exhibits, parties, dinners, discussions are in the offing. We can't, however, expect to participate in all of these things and still be about our real business of academic success. But the opportunity will be offered, and every student who is really concerned about himself and his place in the twentieth century has an obligation to get involved in some of this stuff — enough so that he knows as never before that life is "really real" and that it is good.

Kierkegaard said something once about the necessity for finding out what it is that we have to do and then going ahead to do it if it's right, without much thought to possible success or failure. Or maybe that was Davy Crockett.

Letters to the Editor

Dear Editor:

As the Echo is our one source of campus-wide communication, I deem it appropriate to express here a sincere thanks to Dr. Swenson for her program given in the Lantern on the Playboy Philosophy.

First, this frank, mature discussion of the problems and meaning of sex and the sexual relationship was an encouraging step towards a new campus-wide dialogue on those issues of immediate import today. We commend this openness, only to cry out against that which would hide anything under an unrealistic pietism and puritanism.

Second, we would commend Dr. Swenson for her enlightening and novel (at least to this body) evaluation of the Playboy Philosophy. Our only wish would be to see Hugh Hefner on our campus in a debate with Dr. Swenson and other faculty members and students in an open forum.

Third, we would note the lack of faculty members at this program and make a plea for their participation in student-sponsored activities and programs of this nature, wishing to hear their voices in open debate as dialogue occurs in this academic community.

With this excellent program in mind, we encourage the U.C.C.F. to continue the good work.

John C. Mulholland

Dear Editor:

Last Sunday, the guest speaker at Vespers called the criminal dictator Ho Chi Minh, "the George Washington of North Vietnam."

How can anybody offend the memory of one who preached freedom and justice for all, by comparing him with the freedom-hating dictator who has brought about the war and the exile of thousands of his own people?

I guess we have to realize that people like this man, ignoring the facts as they do, must simply be allowed to speak their piece, while we of the majority ignore their illogical arguments and thank God that the Administration understands the situation and will continue to safeguard freedom throughout the world.

Sincerely,
Oswaldo A. Lopez

Izak ?

A very old rumor that MC students are merely playing games has reached the administration. And Maryville College, not to be outdone, has come up with a game of its own, modeled on "Monopoly," called "Runaround."

In this game, each of the players (usually about 800) receives 1000 rules to start, and then each chooses a piece (bored marker) — either a small worn hymnal, a furry master key, or an orange and garnet diaper. The order of players is fixed by their respective RCQ's (Religion Capacity Quotient): Everyone with an RCQ of twenty minutes or more goes first; the rest of the order is determined by rolling the dice. Unlike "Monopoly," however, "Runaround" uses a circular board, which gives the impression of never getting anywhere. The purpose of the game — and it is usually played to the tune of "Never on Sunday" or "I Want to Hold Your Hand" — is to wade around the board with as few Experiences as possible and arrive at Stop with more Hours than Chapel Cuts.

Detailed rules for the "Runaround" are frankly stated in "Cues for the Co-Led," but these principles will suffice: 1) Mobilization of the pieces by means other than dice rolling is forbidden — unless it hertz; 2) No one may roll his dice outside the Circle (after 7:15, 7:00 on Sundays); 3) PDA (Public Display of Ariginality) in interpretations of instructions is prohibited.

Like "Monopoly," at strategic points along the board are found various Experiences, such as the Dean's Office, Free Chapel Cut (every 128 spaces), Free Chapel (every space), and No-Chance. Getting caught at No-Chance means that the player must draw a pink slip from the No-Chance pile. These slips have riddles on them—"Will I go to hell if I drink?" or "Is my room my room " or "Why can't the Blue Laws be modified?" etc. — which the player must answer . . . simply by reading the rest of the slip — "Yes," "No," "Because it's never been done before," etc. Should the player happen to think he disagrees with the answer given, he might resort to Reason, a black-market pile available only at extra cost, with a possible penalty of a trip to the Dean's Office. (Every other one of the No-Chance slips, though the players don't know it, makes this commandment: "Go directly to the Dean's Office; do not cut Chapel; do not collect yourself.")

Another Experience is Community Jest. A player involved here must draw a card (if the participant is female, she must first obtain Card Permission) and proclaim the Good News seven times while kneeling in the shadow of Anderson Tower. Included are such pronouncements as "Registrar's error in your favor — penalty of seven half-hours;" "Get out of Dean's Office free;" "Carnegie Hall burns — administration discovers need for fire alarms (pick up your free bucket in the special studies office);" and "Your appeal is legitimate — a committee has been set up to consider it indefinitely."

In addition to these Experiences, some trivial traps have been strategically planted to trip up the unwary. Females, for instance — necessity notwithstanding — may not light on the

by Dr. E. Fay Campbell

The thoughtful American citizen finds himself in a strange confusion. He knows that he is the citizen of the most powerful nation on earth. But he tries to analyze what the term powerful means. He sees that it means military strength and financial resources. But does it also mean moral power? Does the world look to us for great ideals, direction to freedom, concern for the weak, understanding of the peoples who are just escaping the old colonial society? The answer seems to me to be obvious. We are not respected for our great dreams. We are feared because of our military power. Is it possible that our young people are content now to train themselves to manage a highly industrialized and mechanized economy? Is this the main role of many educational institutions? What is happening to us? Have we lost our National Purpose? At the time of our revolution we had wonderful dreams. How can we seize the initiative and lead the world toward justice and democracy? Have we lost the initiative? If so, some one else will take it. What can we do here at Maryville College about this?

1) Try to understand. The American white man must take his place along side of all the other peoples in the world. His wealth and color will do him no good. They are becoming liabilities very fast. We must now become members of the Human Race.
2) Try to study. The Liberal Arts College and the Liberal Arts faculties of the Universities must take the lead. They must produce men and women who understand the world. Without the knowledge of History and Philosophy and the meaning of science — not simply its application — we shall perish. Technology is not enough. If only we can presuade American young people to apply their brains to the basic disciplines! This is our greatest single problem. The numbers who do this may be relatively few, but they can lead us if they

I don't have the right to make you anything.

But I have the privilege and responsibility to know you, and that requires the delicate operation of giving you things that I love. If you accept, you are accepting pain — the hurt of being altered. If my presentation is clumsy and repulsive it is no less than the selfishness of giving so that I might claim you.

Please refuse me if I should ever suffer you to endure the pain of a change — except that I might love you more — not for pleasing me, but for being you — a value that I have only just begun to appreciate, and an experience of which I am deserving only by the grace of God.

Psalm 39

"Lord, let me know my end, and what is the measure of my days:
let me know how fleeting my life is!
Behold thou hast made my days
a few handbreaths, and my lifetime is as nothing in thy sight.
Surely every man stands as a mere breath!
Surely man goes about as a shadow!
. . . man heaps up, and knows not who will gather!
. . . Hear my prayer, O Lord,
For I am thy passing guest,
a sojourner, like all my fathers.
Look away from me, that I may know gladness
before I depart and be no more!"

Yea, a small, sad lump of wonder.
On the point of forever
I dance a lingering step with Death.
For the sake of maybe
I walk beside you.
Love me.
I am but brother to dust,
I dance on the point of forever
a lingering step.

a dream, a story. O Thou who dost not slumber, teach us to number our years before they fail.

On a Soul's Encounter with Death to Dave Powell, in gratitude

Prelude

Forgive me, then,
our encounter,
for the touching of our souls brought a kiss not yet forgotten.

1.

I have flown,
a pollen to no flower.
The winds blow me
where I will
Into the quiet of my solitude.
I know only one place cut off from yours from pain self-contained all-in-all yet nothing.
I have been past you yet seen you not for I am not yet lonely.
"Dance a lingering step with Death"?
The awful clay of me knows not its before, its after.
In meadows I flee

APPROACH

by Everett Dean Martin

"An educated person is not merely one who can do something, whether it is giving a lecture on the poetry of Horace, running a train, trying a lawsuit, or repairing the plumbing. He is also one who knows the significance of what he does, and he is one who cannot and will not do certain things. He has acquired a set of values. . . . He knows why he behaves as he does. He has learned what to prefer, for he has lived in the presence of things that are preferable. . . He has learned enough about human life on this planet to see his behavior in the light of a body of experience and the relation of his actions to situations as a whole. . . .

". . . Education is the pursuit of that which gives self-mastery. It is an interest which is never exhausted, but grows always broader and richer. It consists not in learning tricks but in developing ourselves. It is a victory won in some secret chamber of the mind which gradually transforms the whole personality and reveals itself as an indefinable quality in every word and act. It is a spiritual awakening; and if this awakening does not come, a person is not being educated however much he knows. . . .

"Make education the aim and meaning of living, and all becomes different. Experience has a new center of gravity. Facts fall into new and more significant perspective. Objects, distinctions, relationships, qualities, are seen which before passed unnoticed. And as personality does not exist in a vacuum but in the relationships established between organism and environment, no improvement of it can fail to make itself felt in the quality of one's work. Animal learning may give one the means to make a living; liberal education gives living a meaning."

LOOK At the World

by Bill Erwin

The world in which we are now living is in a revolutionary state. New countries are rapidly emerging in Africa; college students are leading revolts in Latin America; millions are starving in Asia. What does the American college student think of all these events, or does he think about them?

Sad as it may be, college students in the United States seem to know very little about what is happening in the world. Neither do they seem to see any relationship between their own lives and the lives of Asians, Africans or Latin Americans. But can the American student, or for that matter any student, ignore the world any longer? The obvious answer is no.

During the next four months of school, there will be many ways through which the attention of our campus will be directed toward the outside world. Book seminars, guest lecturers, art shows, library displays, news articles, Lantern specials, chapel services will emphasize the ancient and the contemporary, the timeless and the revolutionary of Asia, Africa and Latin America.

On March 1, a seminar on "Modern China" will center around the discussion of the current Chinese situation as presented on one of the Asian Studies tapes from our library. These tapes have been recorded by the leading scholars of our nation.

March 5 will be a very special night in the Lantern with an entire evening devoted to the Oriental culture. A meal of Oriental food will be prepared by our students from Thailand and will be followed by a program of dancing by two Thai girls and the presentation of Oriental music.

Programs of this nature will emphasize for us the world and what it means to us. Possibly during this period, our student body will become unique on the American scene in gaining an awareness of the world.

The game necessarily progresses rather slowly, usually taking about four years. The outcome can be tragic or blissful: Those Unfortunates who do not complete the game must struggle with ugly Reality; those Obedients who do finish live happily ever after.

3) Try to meet people. A wonderful old friend of mine, once the mayor of a great Western city, used to tell us students to drift downtown and sit on the curb with the men who were loafing on the street. He would say that this is one place to get an education. Read the books, study and you can, and then just loaf with the loafers on a Saturday afternoon. Get to know as well as you can as many under priviledged people—young and old—as you can.

It is a startling discovery, but it seems to me that one must face the fact that the United States of America is in grave danger of becoming the most static culture in our world. We are trying to stand still or even retreat into the 19th Century. We do not seem to rejoice in the fact that we are living in a great revolutionary period when all human institutions must change or die. The surest way to fail to count in our world is to try to stand still. That is what far too many Americans are trying to do. We can not stand still. We shall be pushed aside and left wandering alone not knowing the joy of great creative change.

American Airlines offers Youth Fare

High school and college students throughout the nation are signing up for travel at half fare on American Airlines.

The far-reaching new American Youth Plan, approved recently by the Civil Aeronautics Board, was to become effective Jan. 27.

Key to nationwide, half-fare travel for anyone from age 12 to 22 is the Youth Fare Identification Card. The cards are available at $3 each from American's ticket offices from coast to coast, representatives on hundreds of college campuses, some travel agencies and from a special mail-order center at the airline's New York headquarters.

The nation's two largest hotel chains—the Sheraton and the Hilton—have announced they are backing the plan and will give card holders special rates and privileges under a wide variety of conditions.

Any holder of an identification card can purchase, on a standby basis, a ticket for travel anywhere on American Airlines' domestic system. Qualification for the card is simple; any document which offers legal proof of age, and three dollars, are all that's needed. The card may be purchased by mail, and validation will be made at the American Airlines installation the card holder uses to make his first trip. Validation, of course, calls for proof of age.

As part of the plan, American Airlines is producing a 64-page booklet, to be distributed free, entitled "Go Go American," which explains the plan and perhaps equally important, gives the card holder a look at the country from the teenage point of view—or, where the action is. In addition, the book has up to $200 worth of discount coupons for amusement parks, restaurants, etc., around the nation.

Marion Sadler, president of American, in announcing American's drive for card sales, said: "The CAB's action, as we see it, is confirmation of our own belief that the young people of this country are ready to travel by air, if the price is right for them. And that's what our Youth Plan is all about: we want to get the young people flying and we want to make it easy for them. And from our point of view, young people converted to air travel are our future customers."

Sadler pointed out that the American Youth Plan also is a direct contribution to President Johnson's "Discover America" program, offering 33,000,000 young Americans a chance to see their country at the lowest travel rates ever offered. At the same time, the plan is available to any foreign youngster between 12 and 22 and this, Sadler said, could add heavily to the list of overseas visitors this year.

The Youth Fare plan will not be in effect on a few days of the year when heavy passenger loads will cut the availability of seats for standbys. These would include, in 1966, April 7 (Thursday before Easter Sunday); Nov. 23 and 27 (Wednesday before and Sunday after Thanksgiving Day), and Dec. 15 through 21.

I Could Have Dunced All Night

(adapted from The Holcad, Westminster College, New Wilmington, Pennsylvania)

7:00 Back from dinner, brush teenth, sharpen pencils, locate books and notes, announce to everyone on the hall, "Tonight I am going to study!" Settle down at the desk (with, naturally, a good study lamp and proper posture) for a long, winter's night.
7:10 Roommate bursts into room crying. A fight with her boyfriend, it seems.
7:11 Begin long condolence speech on the fickleness of all men and the advisability of throwing oneself into study to forget all about the beastly creatures until one emerges, fat and forty-five, as a near-sighted spinster with a Ph.D. in sanskrit. Roommate, who had stopped crying for a moment, begins sobbing hysterically.
7:30 Run for wet towels for hysterical roommate.
7:32 Roommate receives a buzzer. Caller in the lounge.
7:32½ Operation Renovation goes into immediate effect to repair crying damage on roommate.
7:50 Roommate descends in majestic indifference to lounge.
7:55 Settle down to study.
7:56 Hunger strikes!
9:00 Return from coffee break at the 49'er. Roommate still out.
10:45 Finish skimming last 6 weeks of back history reading.
11:00 Roommate bursts into room joyful. All is well. Let's hear it for love!
11:45 Complete long congratulations speech to roommate on the many virtues of her dearly beloved.
11:50 Coffee Break.
12:35 Finish heated lecture to girl down the hall on the necessity of keeping up in one's studies.
12:40 Go to take shower. Lights all out in showerroom. Nothing but cold water. Soap in the yes. Yecchhh.
1:15 Finish first aid on injured toe. Attempt to convince roommate it needs a leg splint and long weeks of recuperation in the hospital, thereby forcing you, against your will, to miss finals.
1:17 Roommate is ungraciously sleeping.
1:20 Begin writing 10-page term paper due at 8:00 this morning.
2:45 Coffee Break to celebrate finishing introductory paragraph.
3:00 Sudden domestic inspiration. Clean entire room. Polish furniture. Wake roommate after accidentally dropping mop across her bed.
3:31 Back to paper.
4:00 Listen to chimes. Contemplate developing measles to explain late term paper.
4:02 Discard measles. Contemplate coma.
4:04 Discard coma. Contemplate suicide.
4:06 Cowardice. Back to paper.
4:08 Dscard idea of finishing rough draft. Genius does not need preparation. Begin typing paper.
5:45 Begin to see hallucinations. Was that the ghost of Christmas past? (passed without doing any homework, obviously). Coffee Break!
6:05 Still typing.
6:15 Notice sky beginning to lighten. Notice head beginning to lighten.
6:16 Back to typing.
7:25 Continue typing paper in semi-mesmeric state. Develop original style of footnoting and bibliography.
7:55 Finish paper.
7:56 Roommate wakes up cheerfully. "Good morning!"
7:57 Exit, in direction of Anderson Hall, bearing treasure.

Athletic Forecast: Fair & Winner

Scots Score Win One

The drought ended for the Maryville five as they pulled out an impressive 75-62 victory over Johnson Bible College on the home hardwood.

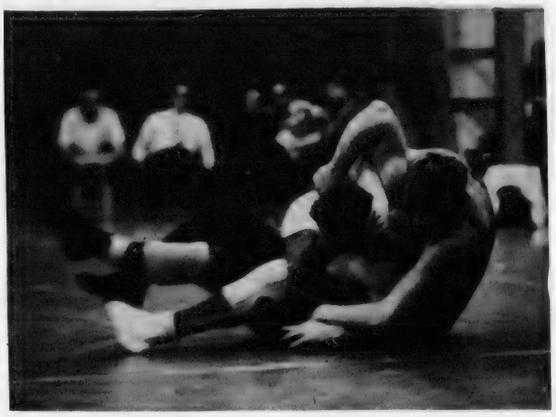
The Scots had lost twelve straight before winning once. However, they have shown a vast improvement over showings at the first of the year and provided an exciting evening in their last home showing.

The outlook for the rest of the season is brighter now that the ice on the win column is broken. New blood in the lineup in Bill Padgett and Darrell Stoker has improved the hopes for a more successful season. Padgett led the Scot scorers with 17 points against Johnson Bible College. Jack Llewellyn pumped through 13 points in the contest.

Freshman center Les Dunson turned in a much more aggressive performance as he grabbed several rebounds. Padgett had 13 rebounds to add to the cause.

With a win under their belt, Coach Boydson Baird's squad should go into the remaining games with bolstered confidence and renewed vigor. More fans should come out and support the team at the games—the cheerleaders are pretty and believe it or not, the Scots do play good basketball—and will win with support from the student body.

Bulletin: "Due to a Significant lack of enthusiasm among the students and athletes, Carson-Newman College deems it expedient to its overall purpose as an institution of higher learning to discontinue its wrestling program. Three hours before the Maryville match? We call it chicken.



B-ballers Bombard Bryan

Maryville scored its second straight home win with an impressive 92-66 victory over Bryan College. Sharpshooting Bill Padgett led the Scots for the third straight game with 45 points.

After playing comparatively slopppy basketball the first half, Maryville still took a 39-29 lead into the dressing room at the intermission. The Scots outscored Bryan in the second half 53-37 and improved greatly in the second tenure.

Maryville's coach Boydson Baird substituuted freely as ten Scot roundballers got into the scoring column. John Hancher scored 12, with Les Dunson getting 11. The other contributors to the winning cause were: Stoker 8, Raby 6, McGowan 5, Whitson 2, and Llewellyn, Rumford, and Maxwell all tallied one.

The Scots have improved greatly since early season.

Freshman George Schnitzer is shown entangling his opponent from Emory. Schnitzer pinned his man in the first period in the Scots 38-6 victory.

Matmen Mash Emory

The Scots took all but two matches against the Emory University wrestling team to chalk up their most impressive win so far by a 38-6 margin.

The Scots' first competitor, 123-pounder John Henderson, pinned his man with a bar and chancery in 2:29. The rest of the bouts carried John's aggressive determination to the end of the match.

Pritts won by forfeit at 130 and Tom Wiley was defeated 2-0 at the 137 pound slot. Maryville's captain Ralph Johnson got the Scots back in the groove as he pinned his opponent in the second period.

Bob Nicholas, wrestling at 152 pounds registered the quickest fall of the evening as he put his man away in 1:38. It took George Schnitzer exactly twice as long to put his match on ice as his opponent touched down in 2:56.

George Patton at 167 pounds decisioned his man on riding time to give the Scots three more points. Scott Wood returned to the Maryville lineup after an injury and lost by decision for the Scots second defeat of the evening. Dan Gilmore decisioned his opponent 2-0 and Pat O'Brian climaxed the match with a 2:30 pin in the unlimited division.

The Scots finish their dual meet season tonight SEC champions Auburn here.

Whew! Women's intramurals sure has a busy calendar for the month of February. Right now we are actively engaged in basketball with the over-all score standing at 4-4. Following quickly on the heels of basketball are badminton singles and doubles and tumbling. Sign-up days for both of these sports are February 22-24, and actual play will begin March 1. Some of the events which will be included in the tumbling program are trampolining, horizontal bars, parallel bars and rope activities. You don't have to be an expert to participate.

Something new has been added to our program this year which we are pretty excited about. For the first time a Women's All-Star Basketball game will be played here at Maryville. The Chi Beta and Theta All-Stars will play under the lights of the alumni gym with special cheerleaders and original halftime entertainment. So come on out and support the society of your choice and mark on your calendars:

GIRLS' ALL-STAR
BASKETBALL GAME
FRIDAY — FEBRUARY 25
7 P.M. — ALUMNI GYM

P.S. A belated congratulations to the Chi Beta All-Star Volleyball Team who won the Volleyball All-Star Game last December 17.

As one of the more active athletes on campus, football captain Jim Pryor is shown in his recent voice recital-revival given Monday, February 14 in Pearsons. Mr. Pryor included in his repetoire his rendition of "Dixie" among other campus favorites. His message of the day concerned sin and the afterlife. If pressured by the student body and administration, Mr. Pryor could probably be persuaded to deliver his sermon in chapel as a part of February Meetings.

Rally Falls Short
Lions Dump Scots

The Mars Hill Lions, supported by two bus loads of students who journeyed over the mountains to support their team, staved off a determined Scot five the entire second to inflict loss number twelve on the luckless Maryville squad.

Behind 46-25 at halftime, the Scots staged a comeback the second half and at one time were within four points of the victors. But the sharpshooting quintet from across the Smokies remained on the top at the final horn 74-65.

During the contest, Mars Hill connected from the floor for two points 55% of the time, while Maryville only tallied 40%—a respectable percentage for any team. The Scots outrebounded the Lions 41 to 39.

Except for two minutes near the end of the first half when Mars Hill surged ahead by 21 points, the boys played one of the best games of the year on the home court.

Second semester transfer Bill Padgett and Jack Llewllyn led the Scots with 19 points each. Sophomore Don Payne added 9, while Denny McGowan and Les Dunson chalked up 6 each for the cause.

considered the purpose of this liberal arts and science college to be.

Some noteworthy sidelights should be mentioned. We took special interest in the applause given by the students for the mention of the 3- or 4-day class week, while a single applause issued forth from a faculty member for an 8-day week (thank you for convicting us, Dr. Young). We noted the impetuous applause to the possibility of 100% Ph.D.'s in a faculty, yet we caution against this and remind those in authority that a Ph.D. doesn't make a good professor or a great scholar, and it is for these qualities that the students are calling.

One of the most important things that Dr. Copeland had to say concerning the trend of college education today is an increased emphasis on the student in his study and search for knowledge. Our own tradition in Independent Study was mentioned proudly, but again we wish to remind all before we get too comfortable that the really great colleges today are emphasizing independent study from the freshman year on in every field, in addition to one's major.

Discipline explained

Dr. Fuhr followed Dr. Copeland, giving an excellent background for what has now become the new discipline system here at Maryville, having addressed himself to the Discipline Committee that the Demerit System was out of date here at Maryville, Dr. Fuhr received a response from this student-faculty committee which drew up a proposal whereby each student is dealt with individually as a mature college student in discipline cases and that appropriate action be taken without the issuing of demerits, passed this on to the Executive Council and was approved for implementation the second semester, beginning January, 1966.

Dialogue follows

Following these enlightening monologues, an opportunity for dialogue was made. Some of the thoughtful remarks follow: "Will the change in curriculum mean a change in the core requirements for a distinction between the B.S. and B.A. degrees?

Dr. Copeland: "Possibly! We don't know, for we are still working on that and other possibilities. It is being considered."

"What is disciplinary probation?"

Dr. Fuhr: "Well, it could mean suspension from social activities and a letter home to the parents telling of the warning to the student, among others, I suppose."

"Are students to be told of impending changes or will they descend on us like a cloud?"

Dr. Copeland: "Students will be informed as much as possible as to new procedures, but some decisions will come unsuspectingly as they are in the province only of the administration and the Board of directors."

"Are the entrance and performance requirements for both students and faculty to be increased in the future?"

Dr. Copeland answered with a literary, suitable answer while Dr. McClelland made the more concise reply with an emphatic shake of his head, indicating "Yes!".

"Are incoming freshmen being told of the upheaval going on here at Maryville?"

Dr. Copeland, after questioning whether "upheaval" was the appropriate word to use he went on to say:

"No college is worth its salt unless there is an upheaval going on at all times concerning academic matters."

What does this mean to all of us who attend this institution of higher learning and to those in our midst who consider themselves to be students? This means that as communication continues, as we hope it will, we have a great responsibility to continue dialogue worthy of a really great academic institution. Instead of griping about the food (all the time), talking about the weather (talk for bus drivers), wasting our time (something to be done in high school), releasing our tensions and inhibitions (all the time), we need to be pursuing the real task before us — determining what it really means to be a student in our world today as we search for knowledge, truth, and a vital living education.

Aid Given to Blount Countians

Recently Dr. Copeland has announced a new program of $100 scholarships to be awarded to every high school graduate of Blount County upon acceptance at Maryville College. This opportunity is in addition to other grants given to Blount Countians through Kind Scholarships, four year scholarships, and aid to the children of teachers and ministers.

Along with these scholarships, the top-ranking senior in any area high school in Blount, Knox, Monroe, Sevier, and Loudon Counties will be given another chance for financial aid. In this plan, scholarships amounting to half of the tuition fee are available for the freshman year at Maryville College.

Also, the Higher Education Act of 1965 makes possible federal loans, grants, and other assistance to Maryville College students. Maryville's participation in this program will increase the possibility of financial help for more students.

Respected opinion has to speak up once in a while or it ceases to be respectable.

Tour Plans Set

The third annual Alumni Tour will visit Holland, West Germany, Austria, Italy, France, and England, stopping at Amsterdam, Cologne, Heidleberg, Innsbruck, Venice, Florence, Munich, Rome, Paris and London. This 21-day tour will depart on July 20 from New York at 7:30 EDT. The tour will return August 10 at 4:15.

The price for the tour will be between $848 to $898 depending upon the number in the group. This includes first-class twin bedroom, with bath, tourist-class air fare on KLM, all breakfasts and dinners, some lunches, most tips and taxes and baggage handling. The ground transportation will be furnished by Blue Cars Ldt, with a full-time experienced Courier.

Air space and accommodations have been reserved. All that is needed to reserve a place is payment of a $100 deposit—checks payable to Maryville College — received before March 1, 1966. However, depending on available space, deposits will be accepted after March 1. An immunization card indicating a small-pox vaccination and a passport are also required.

The local agent for the tour is AAA World Wide Travel Service in Knoxville. After payment of the deposit, this agency will communicate directly with the individual taking the tour.

Isaac Anderson Society Begins With 62

On December 31, the end of the year began with 62 charter members enrolled in the Isaac Anderson Society. To obtain charter membership status, a Letter of Hope and Intent was signed by the new members signifying their willingness to further the name and aims of Maryville College through personal contact. As a second requirement, $7,000 was pledged by each individual to be paid in his lifetime. Several Blount County firms were recognized through business and corporate memberships.

The monetary obligation was fulfilled through various means as individuals made their donations in forms of cash, securities, property, and life insurance. Gift Annuity Agreements and Life Income Agreements were other methods of contributing.

In developing the Society, arrangements were made so that those of modest as well as ample means could gain immediate membership. Regarding this program, younger graduates are eligible for life insurance plans which require an annual gift of less than $100.

Each charter member will receive an individual plaque and membership card. Since the initial activities of the Society will not be held until the 1966-1967 college year, first reports will go out later this year to the organization.

The February Meetings leaders strain to hear a question shouted by Pete Park from the back of the Chapel at one of the evening discussions. The panel considered such topics as the twentieth-century Church, the place of Christ, the Christian college and its position in the world, and compulsory chapel services. Members of the panel from left to right are Dr. Little, main speaker, Mrs. Keil, Rev. Hunter, Rev. Watson, and Rev. Miller.

City Seal Contest In Maryville

The City of Maryville does not have a city seal, as many cities do. The City Commission feels that it should have one, though, and is sponsoring a contest for an appropriate design. The winner will receive a $50 award from the City plus enjoy the distinction of being the designer of the first official seal ever adopted by the City of Maryville.

New Law Placement Service

College seniors who are planning to go on to law school no longer have to guess which schools would be best for them.

A unique new organization, Law School Placement Service (LSPS), will guide individual students to the law schools most closely suited to their needs through the use of modern computers.

In its first year, LSPS has earned the support of more than 90 of the nation's top law schools. The program has also won the endorsement of educators and professional organizations alike.

Competition is increasingly keen for admittance to law school. The number of openings in first-year classes has remained fairly constant but the post-war "baby-boom" and the American desire for advanced education are flooding admissions offices with applications.

The participating law schools will provide LSPS with data about their entrance requirements, including the most frequently-reported LSAT scores and undergraduate averages in the first-year class.

In addition to his scores, the student will give LSPS his preferences as to financial restrictions and geographical location. LSPS will scientifically guide the student to appropriate schools.

Application forms will be available from campus pre-legal advisors by the end of January. Or students may write directly to: Law School Placement Service, Box 2052, West Hartford, Conn.

$1,500 Grant Received

Maryville College has again been selected as one of the privately financed colleges in the United States to receive an unrestricted grant under the Texaco Inc. Aid-to-Education Program, it was announced today by Dr. Joseph J. Copeland, President of the College.

The $1,500 grant, awarded for the 1965-66 academic year, is the second such grant awarded to Maryville College by Texaco. A check was presented to President Copeland by Frank McNutt of Maryville, President of McNutt Oil Co.

Maryville College is among more than 250 United States colleges and universities included in Texaco's educational support program. In addition to providing direct grants to 150 privately financed schools, the program includes scholarship and fellowship assistance to 90 other educational institutions, both private and tax supported.

Heating System Installed

The heating system of the college is presently being converted from coal to gas. Included in this changeover are a new boiler with 40,000 lbs. pressure and the conversion of the old boiler from coal to gas. Steam lines to the new dormitories are also being laid. All new installations will be more than sufficient to heat the new dormitories.

The new heating system will use gas when the work is completed with oil as an alternative in case of any interruption in the gas line. The use of gas as fuel has many more advantages than does coal: only one operator will be required; it will be much cleaner—it should save on cleaning and painting expense; and, most important, will be the increased efficiency of the boilers. The heating system will be able to supply heat to all the buildings on campus, even in the

As a community—academic, Christian, or whatever—we have just been through what could well prove to be one of the most significant weeks of the year. We have heard a man who spoke to us about theology, relevant theology; a man who did not try to present a "cool" image by descending to the so-called "student depths"; a man who was convincing in his argument that the love of God is for all men; a man who told us that, through our love for others and our reconciliation with them, we can become reconciled to this God, if we so choose. And we have been confronted by other leaders who challenged our questions, made us define our terms, and did not pretend to answer the unanswerable.

But this significant time can die a quiet, apathetic death, and it most certainly will, if we as a college — all of us in the same boat together — do not continue to follow the example set for us so well in the six days now past. We must carry on the Great Debate without outside stimulation; we must always question others as to their basic premises. But, most vital of all, we must discover that we are to challenge ourselves in order to find "what it is that moves us — before we can move the world."

Not Sousa—Susga

by Hank Seitz

The Maryville College Student Government has just joined SUSGA — the Southern Universities Student Government Association.

This organization aims at promoting more effective student governments, encouraging greater co-operation and idea exchange among member colleges and universities in attempting to share common problems. Membership includes colleges and universities throughout the southeast.

SUSGA exists for service purposed; no attempt is made to represent or supervise member schools.

An annual SUSGA conference is held as a student government workshop. Speakers and panelists stimulate discussion on campus activities. Maryville College hopes to send a delegation to this year's conference in Jacksonville, Florida.

SUSGA maintains a student government file to furnish information to members on request. The SUSGAGRAM is published periodically as an informative newsletter.

An entertainment service sometimes can arrange for an artist to tour member schools at reduced rates.

Up the Down Staircase

INTRASCHOOL COMMUNICATION

From: Karen Keen, Room 316
To: Bel Kaufman, Room 304
Dear Miss Kaufman,

When I began Up the Down Staircase, I wasn't at all sure I was going to like it. I kept waiting for you to proceed beyond the memoranda, intraschool communications, letters, and various forms of communication used in a New York high school to the real meat of the book, the real writing. Some three hours later, I had finished the book without finding any real writing; however, I had discovered there was plenty of meat to be had anyway.

The life of a school teacher is not easy, especially in a big city school system, but you, Miss Kaufman, showed that at times it is almost impossible. Your heroine, Miss Silvia Barrett, fresh from graduate school, armed with Education 114 and "The Psychology of the Adolescent," overflowing with desire to imbue young minds with a love of literature, certainly proved that.

Miss Barrett walked into Calvin Coolidge High School and smack into the reality of too few desks, too few books, too few classrooms, too many students, too much paper work, professional jealousy, civic indifference, under-achievers, apple-polishers, class comedians, and student suicides. Her first impulse was to turn and walk right back out, and I agreed completely, even when the rewards of the job were considered.

There was the Puerto Rican boy who gained self-confidence by acting the part of a judge in a classroom drama; there was the sullen, homely, fat girl who began to lose weight and take an interest in living; there was the get-well card from the super-slow class; but most of all, there was this feeling, this desire to awaken even the meanest love for learning.

Looking at the situation in a school from the point of view of a teacher rather than a student was a shock. I doubt that many people will be enticed into the teaching profession by your book, Miss Kaufman, but that's all right. I don't believe that is exactly what you had in mind when you wrote it.

There used to be a dapple mare that grazed there in the summer —
Browsed on grass and fine horse-thoughts while the waking woods grew warmer.
And all about and 'round about the forest days grew longer.

I passed through going home sometimes and maybe she was there
And maybe not, but her sweet horse-grass would stir in the laughing air.
And all about and 'round about,
the woods and the wind were there.

We liked to share a nod or two
—the dapple mare and I,
To stand in green and waving grass beneath the white cloud sky,
And thank the gods of summertime for the warm winds passing by.

I cannot ask you wait . . .
There is a point where love asks too much . . .
Where eyes try too hard to see glow and warmth . . .
And other eyes are capable only of dry tears.

No need for the grief or the pain of longing now —
These belong to another story already told —
Or perhaps to another play
yet to be performed

I cannot know why my name was not Posted beside yours in the cast.
All I know that I am not arrived yet — here where you are.

Perhaps some late afternoon I shall arrive
And catch you unaware by the living room
Fire
And we will sit down in the twilight of
That room
In the lazy shawl of late-day mist about
The furniture
And talk of the trip so far and the play.

Then again —
My arrival may well be too late . . .
There may be only the low glowing fire
And the empty couch to welcome me there.

No . . .
I cannot ask you wait . . .
I might never come at all.

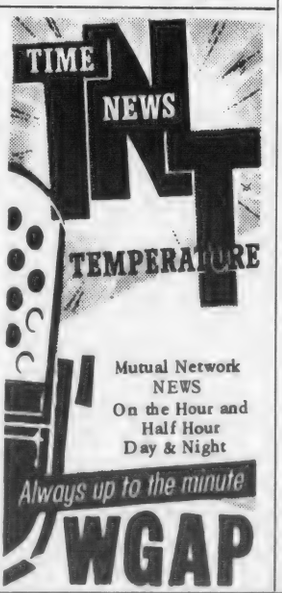
It's the Nature of the Beast

by Ann LeFurgey



Two MC biology majors recently scored in the 99% bracket on the advanced biology section of the Graduate Record Examination: this meaning that, in a comparison of students from Antioch College, College of New Rochelle, Lehigh University, Mehlinberg College, St. Louis University, State University of Iowa, Tulane University, University of Buffalo, University of Detroit, University of Miami, and Vanderbilt University, 99% made lower on the 820-point exam than did first semester graduate Marianne Jefferson and senior Ollie Williams. With all scores of participating seniors ranging between 82%-99%, the biology department is justifiably proud of its accomplishments in teaching and its students' accomplishments in learning.

My turtle just laid eggs!

But this department refuses to rest upon the laurels of past achievements and student honors and will begin on March 4 a series of lectures in natural history designed especially to enable people to enjoy the outdoors and to appreciate the art of conservation. Dr. A. Randolph Shields, department chief, said the course arose from public demand, a public who calls to ask, "What kind of flower is the white one I found on the trail behind the mill at Cades Cove?" and "My turtle just laid eggs!??" He hopes it will fulfill this indirect expression of desire to learn more about nature.

Field trips too

Originally planned as an informal course for approximately thirty people, the lectures will now be given in several sections, for ninety nature enthusiasts have already signed up, including high schoolers, retired business and professional men, as well as entire families. No age limit is set, nor is there a charge for the eight to ten lectures which will be followed by Saturday field trips in late April and early May.

The Quest

by John Mulholand

Each student and faculty member has a responsibility. Slowly, ever so slowly, some of us upperclassmen are being shocked out of our doldrums or are finally coming to realize our responsibility as students to challenge, question, and disagree with our professors, seeking Truth with an open mind and never being satisfied with a half truth. Professors, though, have yet to learn their full capability and responsibility to challenge us; to challenge our rote acceptance of notes, to challenge our apathy, to stir and stimulate a desire for further individual, unassigned reading or study. Neither of us, student or faculty member, has realized his capacity and in not doing so has allowed the other to become stagnant, instead of a living, vital, important, valuable instrument in developing for this day and age. When we students are being only tape recorders — tell us, challenge us, question our interest, motive, and willingness to be a student. Be Socratic, be a thorn in the flesh, be a burr under the saddle. Sooner or later, the harvest will be reaped and new unimaginable horizons will be seen.

Let us make sure that Truth is put into the field to be grappled with. Maybe if this is done more often, we as an academic community will together begin to acknowledge The Truth and not just our individual and provincial attitudes towards it. Let us never think we have all the answers, but being constantly willing to be questioned, search together and learn. Let us not be likened to the contemporaries of Socrates, who put him to death for his disruption of the status quo, his constant questions and challenges, his ceaseless quest for Truth.

Staring, no light,
Inky depths of thick velvet

The world, sipping tea, and now would kill,

for you have seen,
seen deeper than you ought,
further than allowed.
Senses, sensing, have betrayed,

Erase pain of iron,
ripping you?
Protective, devoted pack,
once loving,
Now ever-fled.
Alone, what is left?
What done?
Undone?

Me?"
And winds tore the signposts, roads disappeared into oblivion.

Ages since,
questions unanswered.

touches the womb,
causes friends to flee.

The New Garden of Eden

by Dr. Esther C. Swenson

How does a man prove that he is a man? In a culture where rapid change is institutionalized and the ways of human existing become shadowy and vague, this query haunts many of our young men. Hugh Hefner, more than most of the other spokesmen for our society, speaks out loud and clear on this subject. To most of us, the name "Hefner" means "sex." But a thorough study of his point of view reveals that sex is not the key which unlocks his philosophy even if it is the key hole. Rather, Hefner is concerned to speak to the young men between the ages of eighteen and thirty, men who are in one of the major identity crises of their lives, giving to them an image of the good life which they might attain. This vision of Hefner's is couched in an odd mixture of secularized Puritan and anti-Puritan concepts. It is to a quick look at this general structure of "Hefnerism" that we would like to turn.

Playboy status reward of work

The Playboy philosophy begins its view of man with the notion that man must work. There is no room for laziness in the good life of a real man. Like the Puritans of old, Hefner sees man's professional life as the place in which he works out in fear and trembling his salvation. Each man must come to recognize his capacities and in diligence and with perspiration seek ever the infinite development of his capabilities. He must climb slowly but surely the Jacob's ladder of success in his vocation. These two great Puritan values of WORK and ACHIEVEMENT are the same upon which Hefner begins his attempt to show what a man is. But whereas the Puritan believed in these values for the sake of a man's "proving his election by God" and insuring his ultimate joy in heaven, Hefner deludes us by an almost Old Testament notion of the fulness of the earthly life. The reward of work and success in responsible matters is that, of achieving the status of "playboy."

Aims to enjoy the fullness of life

And just what is a "playboy?" He is not a "wastrel," a "ne'er-do-well," or a "fashionable bum" as so many of us might think. He is "sharp-minded" and responsible. But he has achieved a particular view of life. "He must see life not as a vale of tears, but as a happy time; he must take joy in his work, without regarding it as the end and all of living; he must be an alert man, an aware man, a man of taste, a man sensitive to pleasure, a man who — without acquiring the stigma of the voluptuary or dilettante — can live life to the hilt" ("Playboy Philosophy," Part I). The reward of the hard-working, responsible, achieving, succeeding twentieth-century man is to reap the harvest of the fulness of life and to live in the Garden of Eden surrounded with the best of foods, hidden in the best of clothes, and always enjoying with his Playmates games of hide and seek.

One cannot help but ask if the values of work and achievement are as unambiguously good in a competitive society as Mr. Hefner believes. Are the men who enter into these activities so pure of heart that they can refrain from falling into bondage to them? Does "joy" come as the whipped-cream of life, or is it the deep and ever-moving source of its wholeness? One cannot also help but notice that the man of whom Mr. Hefner speaks, the Playboy, is not one who seems to take much notice of his draft card, the horrors of Vietnam, the unhappy plight of the Negroes in Watts, the poverty-stricken people of automated Appalachia. He is to know of these situations; he is to speak intelligently of them; but he is not to be involved, to dirty his hands, or to take too seriously the millions of people of this earth for whom "heaven" is forever a matter of some far distant, out of sight, out of reach reality.

Distortion of totality

Many of us regard the story of Adam and Eve as legend or saga—an interesting but unreal tale. Is not Mr. Hefner's account of Adam, though not legendary, even more unreal, because it distorts the wonder-ful though ambiguous and awe-ful though often shocking totality of man's life in a global world.

And, at last, one can ask, "Can a man ever prove himself?"

most severe weather.

The complete installation of the heating system will be finished sometime this summer, being ready for the fall semester next year. But for the foreseeable future, either boiler will be able to heat the campus with the other boiler serving as a standby. The new boiler has been tested and can be used now in case of an emergency, but its installation is not complete.

The total cost for improving the heating system is approximately $175,000.

Theta president, Jan Rose, and her Gatlinburg date, a Sig sixty years ago.

Sig And Theta On The Move

Alpha Sigma and Theta Epsilon are on the move, setting the pace.

Friday night, February 11, several Sigs entered the Student Center carrying packages. After a crowd gathered, George Derbyshire and Hugh McCampbell, Sig presidents of first and second-semesters respectively, presented Mrs. Buchanan with a large box of Valentine candy and a certificate proclaiming her "the All-Time Honorary Sweetheart of Alpha Sigma, for her neverending cheerfulness, amiable personality, and kindness to the entire student body

The following night, some hundred and fifty people enjoyed a spectacular Sig Sweetheart Presentation Dance. The decorations were highlighted by the music of the Sig Blue Shades and an impressive aluminum-covered platform at the top of which was a large red heart and the sweetheart throne. The cupids and escorts were presented as follows: Barb Fitch, escorted by Ollie Williams; Kathy Hinger, escorted by Steve Dorner; Peggy Malone, escorted by Paul Millin; Jan Rose, escorted by Ralph McCampbell; and Ginny Wells, escorted by Ernie Greeno. Following the presentation of the Sig Man of the Year Award to Hugh McCampbell by last year's recipient, Mr. Jerry Stewart, Hugh crowned Barbara Fitch Sig Sweetheart for the Year '65-'66.

Gatlinburg Weekend

Saturday night witnessed one of the coolest activities ever undertaken, sponsored, and successfully carried out by any organization here at Maryville. Sig and Theta rented one of the nicest lodges around Gatlinburg, Bell's Wa-Floy Retreat, which is owned and operated by a former student at Maryville, and vice president of Alpha Sigma in 1906, Mr. W. A. Bell, who had decorated the interior of the main room with orange and garnet crepe paper. Chaperoned by Mr. and Mrs. Ramger and Dr. and Mrs. Young, to whom we are most grateful, 86 Sigs and Thetas roasted hot dogs and marshmallows over a big fireplace fire, sang folk songs, played cards, and danced to the music of their own Sig Blue Shades until 2:00 a.m., when we went our separate ways to pleasantly furnished quarters upstairs, and in the motel and cottage. The next morning, the smell of eggs and bacon awakened many who weren't already up cooking and milling around.

After thoroughly cleaning up the dishes and lodge, we returned to campus, finally, after one of the best week-ends ever.

The "Butchers" Hardwood Mets?

Intramural basketball is extremely important to many people on this campus. The "Butchers," an Alpha Sigma team in the B-league are no exreption. Led by team captain Paul Millin, the members of this squad have screened all the prospective athletes on campus since September and have come up with quite a combination.

The objective of this group of superior athletes is not victory—heaven hope not: Joe Dawson, Carl Gehman, A. J. Fort, Ralph McCampbell, Hugh McCampbell, John Forgety, Paul Millin, and Frank Eggers have fun. In a total of two games, the "Butchers" have piled up forty points! They have lost 56-21 and 53-19 in close contests.

The object of every game is to see to it that every member of the squad gets at least one point, and thus far each game has been a complete success. Fans marvel at the ball handling skills of back court wizards Joe Dawson and Frank Eggers, backed up by such stalwarts as Hugh McCampbell and John Forgety.

The turnout at these games has been remarkable. Sports lovers from across the land journey to see these magicians perform. Maryville College students can also join the march. Come out to see the "Butchers" live up to their names as they murder the game and split your sides in pitiful laughter.

Auburn Edges Matmen

Maryville threw a scare into the defending SEC champions as the Scots had Auburn University defeated until the last two bouts when the Tigers registered pins against Wood and O'Bryan, in the 191 and unlimited classes. Winning four out of the first five weight classes, the grapplers jumped to an early 12-3 lead when Auburn began making their bid for a comeback.

The highlight of the match was in the 123 pound class as John Henderson defeated exchampion Bob Factora by a score of 6-2. John moved in for a takedown in the closing minutes of the first period and took the lead. Riding his opponent the entire second period John picked up two more points riding time and then reversed Factora in the last period to secure his victory. Ron Pritts defeated his opponent 4-1 and secured for himself the number one spot for the upcoming tournament at Sewanee. Tom Wiley wrestled a good match against the defending SEC champion Rich Umbach but was defeatel 7-2. Captain Ralph Johnson edged out James Mask 2-1, while Bob Nicholas wrestled another win for the Scots against John Toyso. In one of the more exciting matches George Schnitzer wrestled Larry Schutenbach but was nipped in the last period 3-2. In the remaining matches Patton was decisioned by Dyer 7-0, Gilmore pinned by Chimento, Wood pinned by Atchinson, and O'Bryan pinned by Miller.

This weekend the Scots are wrestling in the SEC tournament at The University of the South, Sewanee, the finals will be held this evening at 7:30 P.M.

Padgett Gets 45 In Scot Romp

The M.C. roundballers came through with what was perhaps their best effort of the season last Monday night, as they downed a visiting Bryan team by the score of 92 — 65.

Unaccustomed as they were to not suffering from a marked height disadvantage, the Scots managed to perform admirably under such novel circumstanres. Backboard superiority, coupled with lots of hustle enabled Maryville to dominate play during both halves.

Once again, talented Bill Padgatt led all scorers with 45 points, and boosted his scoring average to 23 points per game. Jon Hanscher added 12 points.

The Scots, now 2-14, showed signs of definite improvement, especially in ball-handling (only 10 turnovers), and shooting (55%).

Physical Education Majors Plan Trip

This weekend, February 26-28, four women physical education majors will accompany Mrs. Largen and Mrs. Davis to the 1966 Health, Physical Education and Recreation Southern District Convention at Louisville, Kentucky. Seniors Linda Gresham and Elen Lankenau with Sophomores Kathy Bishop and Denise Meurey will make the trip.

Some of the highlights of the convention will be physical educators speaking on such topics as "Values of Outdoor Activities." and "Professional Competence of College Physical Education Majors."

There will also be panel discussions on Elementary and Secondary School Physical Education. In between the discussion sessions and guest speakers are plans for several luncheons, a banquet, and a general fun night.

Cumberland 118, M.C. 85

Cumberland College, of Williamsburg, Ky., raced to a 10 point lead in the opening minutes and were never really threatened as they coasted to an easy victory over the Scots. The Indians front line, which stands 6'9", 6'6", and 6'6", completely dominated both the offensive and defensive boards.

Even in defeat, the Scots showed more signs of steady improvement and played excellent basketball, but unfortunately they were decidedly out-manned.

Bill Padgett led all scorers with 35, while Denny McGowan and Jack Llewellyn added 13 and 11 respectively.

Mrs. Edgar Buchanan, barmaid of the Student Center, eyeing the spoils she received after being proclaimed the All-Time Honorary Sweetheart of Alpha Sigma. The Student Center was also presented with a certificate rating it Grade A by the society.

A Tainted Report of Your Student Council in Meeting

compiled by Doug Gamble

Tuesday, March 1

7:10 p.m. At Hu's request, Ken asked God to be with us.

7:11 p.m. Mrs. Fuhr arrived—?

Treasurer's Report — Council seems destined to debt. Remember The Womenfolk? . . . Sorry, Fred.

Social Committee (Jenny) — It may be possible for SC to sponser a Computer Dance this spring. Maybe there really is somebody cool enough for you at MC. Interested? Say so. We won't plan any further till you do.

Pep (Rich and Tex) — SUSGA is sponsoring a 4-day Cheerleading Clinic in August. Lessons in Crowd Stimulation. Individual lessons available.

Programs (Doug) — It seems safe to say that MC will have at least one, and probably two, popular programs next year. Only one more committee to go. More later. Ideas?

Publicity (Ken) — Thanx to Nancy Gillingham for the SC poster.

WSGA (Louise) — Sunday—in the Lantern—UT's Dean of Women will talk about Campus Women. A part of the series.

MSC (Terry) — Work on the Carnegie fire alarm system—with its glass boxes (?) and heat feelers—will begin immediately—they say. Seems we get to do without paint in Carnegie next decade to pay for it. The Dining Hall sure looks pretty. A similiar system will be installed in Pearsons next summer. They say.

OLD BUSINESS

The Frosh are working well on next year's Orientation Program. An eye for an eye . . . Council does feel that such a program, well-executed, coupled with the new dorm environment can be a help.

NEW BUSINESS

It's about Jenny's interest in the Men's Lounges. Bill? Terry explained a recent MSC anti-pigpen measure designed to keep the Carnegie smoker decent. They took away the TV. Really, now, must we penalize Academic Pursuit for Health?

It was suggested that if the smoker, clean, were decent, the initiative for Better Aim would be greater. Jenny wants to make curtains. Maybe some money -oops- could be found to bring the Upperclass Standard of Living within smelling distance of the new Frosh Quarters?

Tarwater wants mahogany inlaid Coke machines and French Provincial furniture. What did Dean Fuhr say his hobby is?

Frank suggested Coed Dorms. "What motivates YOU?"

We finished with a discussion of the merits of no demerits. Should each case be treated as individual (which it is), or should Sin A be punished by Solution A come hell or high water? You tell us. Things ALWAYS CAN CHANGE — if we are constructive. SUGGESTION: Maybe we could make some effort to find out some facts and reasons before we expound at

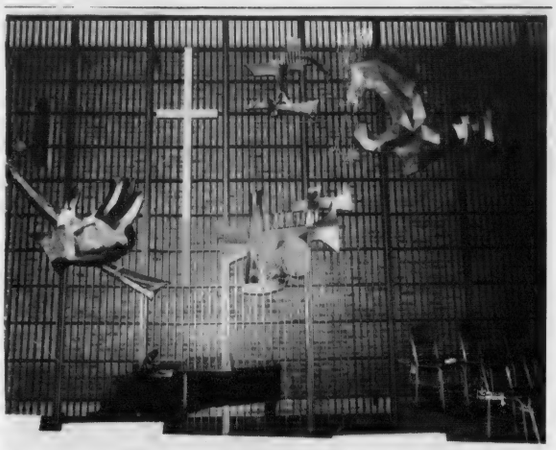
Debate Team Results Given

Four Maryville College coeds, all Maryville residents and members of the College Debate Team, were finalists in individual events at a recent debate at Spring Hill College in Mobile, Alabama. Twenty-two colleges and universities including the University of Alabama, University of Arizona, Emory, Vanderbilt, the University of Florida, and Notre Dame were represented in the competition.

The four, Sherry Proffitt, Wanda Hannah, Penny Proffitt, and Alica Barton, were among eight who represented the college at the debate. Sherry Proffitt was a finalist in After Dinner Speaking, Miss Hannah in Persuasive Speaking, Senior Division; Penny Proffitt in After Dinner Speaking and Miss Barton in Persuasive Speaking, Junior Division.

Penny Proffitt and Miss Barton tied with three other affirmative teams for second place in the Debate Junior Division.



Luckily for the team, Mobile was celebrating Mardi Gras at the same time the tournament was held, so they saw the parades and festivities. The last night in Mobile, Dr. Walker drove her team thirty miles to see the Gulf of Mexico by starlight. But as they say, all work and no play . . .

This week-end the team is debating at Lenoir Rhyne College at Hickory, North Carolina.

Expenditure Survey Conducted

Shown above is the paper sculpture constructed by a group of art majors that hung in the Chapel during February Meetings. Designed by Sara Parker and Ingrid Hellmer, this composition was intended to include the cross already present in the Chapel, rather than exclude it. Meaning was to be found in the two hand figures, while the remainder was geometrical design.

Maryville College students, in the course of the college year in Maryville, spend about $300,000 in the community, a recent survey conducted under the direction of A. E. Hileman, Chairman of the Department of Economics at the College, has revealed. The study was made by Mr. Hileman's Principles of Marketing class.

$292,320 spent by students

Aimed at finding out how much money Maryville College students spend while they are at school and what they buy with it, the program involved a survey of 134 of the 812 students registered last semester. Those questioned were classified as junior and senior men and women living both on the campus and off the campus, and freshman and sophomore men and women living both on the campus and off the campus.

As a result of the survey, and after weighting and averaging the data obtained, it was calculated that the average student spends $360 over the nine-month school year on items which are unrelated to his school needs. For a student body of 812 this means a total of $292,320 for student spending.

Many items in expenditures

In breaking down the survey to find out what students buy with their money, it was discovered that transportation is the largest single item, accounting for from 20 to 24 per cent of the total expenditures. Clothing was next, accounting for 13 to 17 per cent, closely followed by tobacco, candy, and beverages at 10 to 14 per cent.

Other major items of expenditure checked in the survey include food, entertainment, laundry and dry cleaning, repairs to personal belongings, medical expenses, toilet articles and cosmetics, and school supplies other than books.

Science building future expense

Student spending is in addition to institutional spending which amounts to about $1,500,000 in the current budget for salaries and maintenance and operation. In addition to the current budget, capital expenditures of well over $2,000,000 are currently being made by the College in the construction of three new dormitories and the installation of a new boiler in the heating plant. Additional capital expenditures planned in the near future include a new science building at a cost estimated at over $1,250,000.

$20,000 Given for Science Building

The final payment of $20,000 of a $100,000 grant by the Alcoa Foundation to Maryville College has been presented to President Copeland by Norman Lane, Manager of Tennessee Operations for the Aluminum Company of America. The funds will be used by the College for a new science building which is now being designed.

The building, expected to cost over $1,250,000, is part of the College's Sesquicentennial Development Program and will replace the present Fayerweather Science Hall, built in 1898.

"The Alcoa Foundation grant, announced in February, 1962, is a large part of the total cost of the completely equipped new building," President Copeland pointed out. "We deeply appreciate this grant which aids so materially in providing a new facility to help Maryville College strengthen its science program in today's technological world. We appreciate the confidence in the future of Maryville which is expressed in the grant."

Also helping toward the cost of the new building is the approval of a $355,000 government grant under the Higher Education Facilities Act of 1965 and the funds from the successful Maryville College Development Fund campaign last year.

The design of the new building is the result of a detailed study by the consulting firm of Taylor, Lieberfeld, and Heldman, which studied Maryville's science program for the past ten years and projected the needs for ten years into the future. The site for the new building has not yet been decided; three areas of the campus are now under study.

Gemini 4 Film to be Presented by Circle K

This afternoon at 1:00 p.m. Circle K will present the historic "walk in space" of Astronaut Edward White in a color film. The 30-minute Gemini Four production is free, but donations to the Crossroads-Ferozepore project will be collected.

Representative John J. Duncan introduces the film of the space exploration, saying that at "some future date, when we honor early space flights, none will be more significant than the flight of Four. None risked more; none contributed more than the first men to open their protective metal cocoon and step into that vast unknown called 'space.' "

Meeker To Give Senior Recital

Charles Meeker, an applied piano major, will present his senior recital Thursday night, March 10, at 8:15 in the Music Hall of the Fine Arts Center. Mr. Meeker comes from Roselle, New Jersey, and is the student of Sallie W. Schoen. He gave a junior recital last year and has recently played in competition at the Indiana University School of Music.

Compositions featured in his recital will be the Toccata and Fugue in G minor by Bach, Sonata No. 26, Op. 81a ("Les Adieux"), by Beethoven, and Sonata No. 3, Op. 46, by Dimitri Kabalevsky.

EDITORIAL OUTLOOK

We went to a UCCF meeting last Sunday. You know, that finky, Puritanical, no-action, Christian group that is so out of it that they've got nothing better to do than go to church and think about God and that bit about brotherhood.

We went and were told that it is impossible to walk the infintisimal line between love and hatred—the line of indifference. We were told that we have to either embrace life with our whole being or reject life and accept its death. We heard a new song: "A mighty fortress is our church—A bulwark never failing, Cha, cha, cha," followed by another smash hit, "He was a flop at thirty-three . . . He could have been successful, But instead of climbing 'up,' He climbed a cross!"

We went and listened and hurt and left . . . to go back to the place where nothing really matters; where school is a game you play because it's expected; where change would be nice, but, after all, we'll-only-be-here-for-three-more-months-so-who-cares; where love and thought and commitment is something for the future; where nothing really matters . . . except maybe stopped-up showers, food or lack of same, car permission, sore stomachs, bruised knees . . . where nothing really matters.

We Heard and Were Glad

November's reactions to "Emphasis: Vietnam" have been received from men in the service here and abroad.

In a letter to Hazel Myers, who participated in the Student Council sponsored Christmas card drive, Specialist Fourth Class Bobby Bell stated that he was glad to know that there were people in the States who support the policy of the Federal administration. The 22-year old native of North Carolina said that knowing this raised his morale and kept him "from thinking of those that demonstrate and protest against the war in Vietnam." He felt that men will always fight for what they believe.

Army Private Joe Casino of Chicago who wrote to the Students and Faculty expressed similar sentiments. At the time, he was camped near Saigon and the Viet Cong were "right across the river." He was aware that he was 10,000 miles from home and yet only yards from possible death. Knowing that there were people who backed his reasons for being there made his Christmas brighter.

A former Maryville College student now stationed at Custer Air Force Base, Battle Creek, Michigan, read of the Echo's forum on Vietnam and expressed favorable comments about it. Airman Third Class David Pettit in his letter told how much he enjoyed reading about the College's supporting position: "In June when I leave for Vietnam, I will always remember that Maryville is behind me. What this country needs is more people who believe as you people at Maryville do."

These three letters are only examples of appreciative correspondence received as a result of efforts which on our part were small indeed.

SO WHAT!!

by Bill Erwin

The world? Humanity? What does a Christian—even an American Christian—have to do with the mass of humanity populating our contemporary world? Dr. Campbell, during the Vesper Service, and the UCChristianF, in its dramatic presentation "So What!", attempted to deal with this question. What "in the world" are we going to do about the world?

"So What!" combined the "beat" poetry of Lawrence Ferlinghetti, musical numbers from the play "For Heaven's Sake," and numerous quotations from the student body of Maryville College in an attempt to focus our attention on the apathy of our campus. Was it not necessary first to ask why we have so childishly ignored the needs of our own campus before we attempted to deal with our active, responsible, Christian participation in the world?

Ferlinghetti expresses the existential reality; he deals with the everyday world of people and things. "Dog," "I Am Wait-

Focus on Asia

by June Rostan

Many M.C. students are probably unaware that Maryville, along with the University of Chattanooga, Knoxville College, and Birmingham Southern, has participated in an Asian Studies Program since 1963. The program, under the sponsorship of the Ford Foundation, was described by Maryville's delegates for this academic year, Dr. Phillip Griffin and Mr. Arthur Bushing.

The two carefully explained that they were not the only two faculty members to study under this program, but that Dr. Arthur Ainsworth and Mr. Victor Schoen represented M.C. the first year and Dr. Arda Walker and Dr. Carolyn Blair followed them. The program consists of ten weekend sessions per academic year and concentrates on a different area of Asia each of the three years. The first year the group studied China and Japan; the second year focused on the Middle East; and this year India is the study topic.

Many aspects discussed

The weekend sessions, under the direction of Dr. Jane Harbaugh of the University of Chattanooga, include a public lecture on Friday night, followed by two three-hour seminars on Saturday. Lecturers and seminar leaders are well-known specialists in various fields of Asian study; in this case, natives of India or Westerners who have spent long amounts of time in India. Each year there is a different consultant who is a specialist in the Asian area being studied. Consultants for the 1965-66 study of India are Dr. Lloyd Rudolph and Dr. Susanne Rudolph of the University of Chicago. The range of lecture and seminar topics covers the fields of political science, history, art, religion, sociology, philosophy, literature, culture, and economics in India.

Grants to colleges

The Ford Foundation has enabled the four participating colleges to reduce each participant's teaching load so that he will have more time for the tremendous amount of reading that must accompany the seminars. The Ford Foundation also finances the weekend sessions, contributes books to the participants, and gives a grant to each of the four colleges to buy books in the Asian studies field for their libraries.

The main purpose of the program is to give each faculty representative a fairly comprehensive picture of the Asian area. Mr. Bushing pointed out that it stresses "the need for faculty members to be informed in many areas," while Dr. Griffin stated that, "The program aids smaller schools in furthering teacher education, gives access to the same lecturers as large university centers, and makes this study possible for us to get without leaving for a semester or a year."

Small and Funny and Fine

This would of course be the wondrous Saltzburg Marionettes who brought a small world of beauty in sound, color, and action to the Maryville campus last February 24.

The afternoon's performance of "The Nutcracker Suite" brought OOhs and Ahs and squeals of laughter from the children and the young-at-heart who packed the chapel. Many of the children stared and chuckled at one bearded man in the audience (Dave Powell) whom they expected to be a puppet.

Mozart's "Magic Flute" came alive as the marionettes danced and capered through the evening production which also played to a large group. The music and the diction were as suberb as the skillful movements and fairyland costumes of the marionettes: a true bit of artistry from elegant Tamino to the hammy lion and the darling giraffe.

The puppeteers themselves were charming as they chatted in the dining room and even wheedled an unepected steak dinner! And I suspect one of the highlights of the evening was when "The Great White Austrian Father" stepped onstage for a bow after the performance.

THE FUTURISTS

Looking Toward A. D. 2000

Courtesy TIME Copyright Time, Inc. 1966

The U. S. has always been a country in love with the future. It readily accepted the fact that modern science established progress as a faith and the future as an earthly Eden. Yet recently, the American passion for the future has taken a new turn.

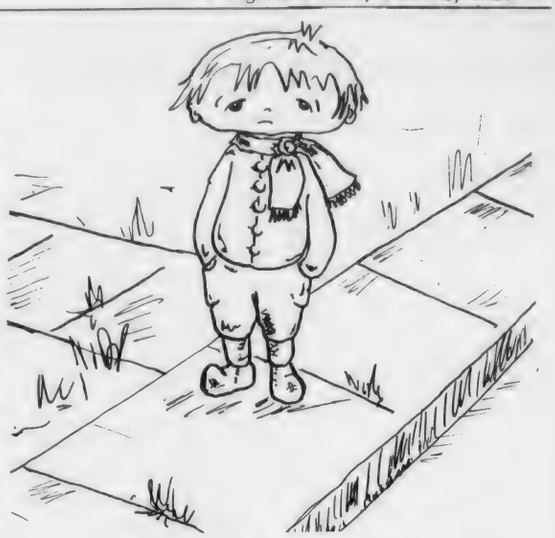
Technology has advanced more rapidly in the past 50 years than in the previous 5000. Men in business, government, education and science itself realize that they must look at least two decades ahead just to keep abreast, must learn to survive under totally different conditions.

New Skill and Time

The exploration of the future has become a sizeable business. The government and private companies are spending many millions of dollars on research for the future.

People & Weather

By A.D. 2000, the U. S. population will have risen to about 330 million and nine out of ten Americans will be living in supercities or their suburbs. But cities, like industry, will tend to decentralize; with instant communications, it will no longer be necessary for business enterprises to cluster together. Futurist Marshall McLuhan even foresees the possibility that many people will stay at home doing their work via countrywide telecommunication.



None of the forecasters seem to have any good solution to traffic problems, though they count on automated and possibly underground highways. Predictions are that both the wheel and the highway will be obsolete, giving way to hovercraft that ride on air. Planes carrying 1000 passengers and flying just under the speed of sound will be old hat. The new thing will be transport by ballistic rocket, capable of reaching any place on earth in 40 minutes. 82 scientists agreed that by 2000 A.D. a permanent lunar base will have been established and that men will have flown past Venus and landed on Mars.

The ocean will be even more radically transformed. Experts visualize fish herded and raised in offshore pens as cattle are today. Huge fields of kelp and other kinds of seaweed will be tended by undersea "farmers"-frogmen who will live for months at a time in submerged bunkhouses. The protein-rich underseas crop will probably be used to make some kind of dull-tasting cereal that eventually, however, could be regenerated chemically to taste like anything from steak to bourbon.

One of the more dramatic changes will be climate control. Scientists estimate that the entire electrical energy needs of the U. S. could be supplied by a dozen nuclear generating stations spotted around the country. If one such station were built on Mount Wilson above Los Angeles, the heat produced as a byproduct could be guided into the atmosphere, raising the inversion layer that hangs over the city to 19,000 feet, thus eliminating the smog.

Medicine is in a similar state of exhilarated anticipation. Already widely discussed today, artifical organs will be commonly available by the year 2000. An unexpected development in immunology will make possible the widespread transplanting of organs from either live donors or the recently dead. A pocket radar will scan a blind man's surroundings. Medical men foresee fetuses grown outside the uterus and human tissue grown to specification.

2. Each teacher will bring a bucket of water and a scuttle of coal for the day's classes.
3. Make your pens carefully. You may wittle nibs for the individual tastes of your children.
4. Men teachers may take one evening each week for courting purposes, or two evenings a week if they go to church regularly.
5. After 10 hours in school the teacher should spend the remaining time reading the Bible or other good books.
6. Women teachers who marry or engage in other unseemly conduct will be dismissed.
7. Any teacher who smokes, uses liquor in any form, frequents pool or public halls, or gets shaved in a barber shop will give good reason to suspect his worth, intentions, integrity and honesty.
8. The teacher who performs his labors faithfully and without fault for 5 years will be given an increase of 25 cents per week in his pay providing the Board of Education approves.
9. Each Teacher should lay aside from each pay a goodly sum of his earnings for his declining years so that he will not become a burden on society.

Scots Score High On Fruitless NC Jaunt

by Dave Maxwell

Although losing to Asheville Biltmore 97-83 and to Mars Hill 127-93. the Maryville Scots showed marked improvement. Staging second half comebacks both nights, the Scots played their best offensive games of the season in North Carolina last weekend against the Bulldogs and the Lions. However, the defensive play of the Scots sagged as they allowed both teams to run and drive at will. The opponents' fine shooting coupled with their decisive height advantage left the Scots with two more losses.

Before M.C. was able to get untracked. the A-B Bulldogs jumped to an early 50-33 halftime lead. Maryville closed to within 8 points in the second half. Before finally bowing 97-83. Bill Padgett continued his scoring rampage with 32 points. Jon Hancher added 12 and Captain Denny McGowen's point total was 11.

At Mars Hill, the Scots exploded for 93 points, but allowed the Lions to run away for 127 points. Good and Pickard led their team's scoring as they both tossed in 32 big ones. Bill Padgett countered with 26 points, but he received too little support from his teammates. Don Payne, playing one of his better games, socred 19 points while Denny McGowen supported them with 16.

Behind 67-50 at halftime, M.C. threw a scare into the Lions when the Scots inched to within 10 points halfway through the second half, but then collapsed allowing Mars Hill to increase its lead to 34 points.

Old-Timer Tilt Tonight

The Maryville Scots football team winds up an excellent spring practice tonight with a game under the lights against the Alumni. On the Alumni squad will be such Maryville stars of the past as Benny Monroe, and Ken Berry, both former Little All-Americans, Bill Owenby, Pete and Rex Stafford, Bill Cochran, and all of this year's seniors but Gary Dutton, who is still troubled by a knee injury suffered in this year's homecoming tilt.

In the Alumni backfield, along with Monroe and Berry, will be Donnie Phelps, Ronnie Lingenfelter, Mike White, and other past headliners.

This game is the climax to the first spring practice held during Coach Howard Tomlinson's tenure as head coach. Coach Tomlinson and the rest of the staff consider this practice to have been extremely beneficial to the football program here at Maryville. In the past three Saturday scrimmages, the hitting has been crisp and the spirit high.

For the Scots, Butch Crabtree will be at the helm directing the attack from the quarterback spot. In his backfield he will operate with Ray Eaton, Steve Dockery, and Alex Robins. According to many observers, this combination, coupled with Crabtree's passing to ends Sonny Webb and John McLaughlin, could surprise some people with an effective offensive punch.

The defense — Webb, Charles Berry, Joe Dawson, Steve Worrell, John Forgety, David Berry, up front; Carkhuff and Greeno and linebackers; and Dockery, McCampbell, and Eaton in the secondary, will be greatly outweighted. Their advantage is superior mobility and the hard-nosed aggressiveness which has characterized Maryville College football in the past.

Game time is 8 p.m. for what should prove to be one of the best games Honaker Field has witnessed all year.

Pritts Wins SEC Title

After taking the first day lead Auburn was upset in three key matches the following day which opened the way for Georgia Tech to win their first Southeastern Conference championship Feb. 26, at Sewanee University.

Pritts Is King

Ron Pritts carried away the honors for Maryville as he fought his way to the top of the 130 pounders in capturing his first conference title. After wrestling a consistently winning season for Maryville, and having only one point scored against him the entire season, Pritts entered the tournament seeded number one. Defeating Schink of Tampa in the first round, his second victim was Paul May of Georgia Tech whom he defeated 6-0 on his climb to the throne. In the finals, Pritts met Dan Gastineau of Milligan College who went down by a score 6-0 likewise. It was a brilliant display of control wrestling as Ron dominated his opponent for most of the match.

Henderson placed second

John Henderson was runner-up in the 123 pound class as he faced the incumbent and three time champion from Georgia Tech, Phil Greek, in the finals. The final score was 4-0. The majority of the remaining team was characterized by bad breaks but nevertheless placed in the middle of their respective weight classes. The final team standings was Georgia Tech., Milligan College, Auburn, Georgia, Chattanooga, Maryville, Tampa, Emory, and Tennessee.

The Scots finished with a 5-6 won-lost record for the campaign.

Sox 'n Sneakers

Anyone who was at the Women's All-Star Basketball Game last Friday night will have to admit that both Theta and Chi Beta played a tremendous game. The teams were evenly matched, paced a fast game and kept the fans on the edge of their seats as they fought to a 31-29 final score with Chi Beta the victor.

All the girls who played on the All-Star teams had participated in the girls' basketball intramural program and had been elected to the All-Star teams by the intramural teams. Chi Beta All-Stars were Sherry Moncier (captain), Maren Wright, Margaret Mann, Sara Mason, Janet Krause, Ellen Lankenau and substitutes Brenda Laippley, Beverly Minear, and Marge Stewart. Theta All-Stars were Denise Meurey (captain), Carole Brownlee, Jane Sloan, Linda Reifenkugel, Sandy Jamison, Betty Vincent and substitutes Noreen Bovis, Jean Ferguson, and Ginny Wells.

A special word should be said to all four societies for supporting the teams and providing cheerleaders to root us on.

ing," "No. 5", "No. 11" were the poems used in "So What!" to show the world as seen through the eyes of one man (and a dog). They combined with three songs from "For Heaven's Sake"—"He was a Flop at 33", "A Mighty Fortress Is Our Church," and "The Chained Couple"—to center upon the relevance of today's Christian Church. Perhaps the best material in "So What!" was that taken from our own campus. A few choice quotations of M.C. students were picked from a countless number of possibilities to show our own apathetic attitude. Too bad it was so easy to find so many good ones! The presentation was closed with a plea for our campus to use its ability to come up with ideas, concrete ideas, about the needs of our campus. The plea still stands.

Padgett Paces Scot Finale

Before one of the most enthusiastic, if not largest, crowds of the season, the Maryville Scots defeated Emory & Henry University, 76-72, in the season's final game.

After losing the opening tip, a seemingly outclassed Maryville team, led by the scoring of transfer star Bill Padgett (32), scrapped their way to 38-38 half-time tie. With the offense working sporadically and the defense as tenacious as ever, the second half proved to be as exciting as the first. In a game that saw the lead change frequently, the Scots finally clinched victory with nine seconds to go accompanied by the wild screaming and shouting of the fans.

Following Padgett in the scoring column were senior Captain Denny McGowen, playing the final game of his college career, with 15 points and an outstanding all-around performance; Jack Llewellyn, 10 points; Don Payne, 9 points; John Hancher, 5 points; Darryl Stoker, 3 points; and Les Dunson, 2 points.

Showing steady improvement throughout the season and losing only McGowen from this year's squad, the team can look forward to a much better won-lost record next season.

Debate Team Wins Top Awards

Defending champion Maryville College has continued domination of Lenoir Rhyne College's South Atlantic Forensic Tournament by winning the sweepstakes trophy for the fourth consecutive year.

Forty teams in tournament

Maryville took home the top award on the strength of its debating record. Its first-string negative team won first place among the negative debators, and its first string affirmative team earned third place in its division. Each team won five debates and lost one during the six rounds of debating. Forty teams participated in the tournament.

Millin and Sikes win awards

One member of the championship negative team, Paul Millin, also won the tournament's extemporaneous speaking contest to help Maryville sweep to victory. Both Millin and his colleague, Lee Sikes, won individual superior debate awards with Sikes coming in second in the individual debating competition.

Roanoke College of Virginia won second place in the over-all tournament competition.

Several 5-1 records taken

Although the Maryville negative team was tops in the tournament, it won the title by a nose. Six other negative teams matched the Maryville record of five wins and one loss, requiring tournament officials to pick Maryville on the basis of points earned. University of South Carolina took second-place honors in the division, and East Tennessee State College came in third. Other negative teams with 5-1 records were East Carolina College, Davidson College, Roanoke College and Belmont Abbey College.

Thai Ambassador to Visit College

Visiting our campus Tuesday, March 15, will be the Thai Ambassador to the United States, Mr. Sukich Nimmanheminda. His Excellency will speak at a convocation of the College at 9:40 that morning. His arrival is intended as part of the campus emphasis on the cultures and peoples of the world.

Mr. Nimmanheminda received his education in Bangkok and London, studying mathematics and engineering. He was associated for nine years with the Chulalongkorn University as lecturer and faculty member, culminating with his appointment as a Director-General in the Ministry of Education in 1942.

He began his career in politics with an appointment to the Senate in 1946, and served in various departments until 1959, when he became Ambassador to India. He was concurrently appointed Minister to Nepal, Minister to Afghanistan, and Minister to Ceylon. By Royal command His Excellency was appointed in 1963 the new Thai Ambassador to the United States. For his service he has been awarded several decorations by His Majesty the King of Thailand.

He will arrive in Maryville late Monday. It is hoped that students and faculty will take every opportunity during his visit to talk with him, in light of the present national interest in Southeast Asia.

Personal Library Contest Open

Each year the Book-of-the-Month Club and the Saturday Review give what is known as the Amy Loveman National Award for the best student library. This year, in order that Maryville College students may have a chance to enter this contest, our library is sponsoring a local contest for the student with the best personal library.

The winner of the national contest receives $1000. For the winner of our local contest the prize will be $10 worth of books of the winner's own choosing.

The rules for the contest are simple:

1. All Maryville College students are eligible.
2. The entrant must make a list of the books he wishes to enter; the minimum requirement is twenty-five books, and the maximum requirement is thirty-five. Paper-back books may be entered, and, since the deadline is April 4, books may be brought from home after spring vacation.
3. Each book must bear the entrant's name in ink or must have a book plate with the entrant's name.
4. The library may be any of three different kinds:
   A. a general collection,
   B. a subject collection,
   C. books by a single author.
5. The applicant must submit a list of the books he wishes to enter by April 4 with a paragraph stating his reasons for acquiring a personal library.
6. Students wishing to participate should sign up at Mrs. Best's desk in the library and see a copy of the rules.
7. Finalists will present their libraries (only the books listed) for examination to three local judges.

The local winner is eligible to enter the national contest, the deadline for which is April 19. For the national contest a minimum of thirty-five books must be submitted.

Plea to the World .. And the World's Reply

by Jim Gifford

The world's full of hatred and sorrow
And my mind is distraught as by pain
And I've pondered my death on the morrow
And I've pondered it time and again.

Why live in the scum and the sorrow
That surrounds all poor mortals each day
When death can be gained without horror —
It's just simply crossing the bay.

And yet, there's something that holds me
When I think about crossing the bay.
Fear seems to drop; it enfolds me,
For I know that the trip is one way.

Yet I'd buy my ticket tomorrow
If I knew for sure what she'd say
When they find my bones drained of their marrow
And my flesh falling off in decay.

Yes, I'd buy my ticket tomorrow
And I'd do it without thought of fear
If I knew that my death and its horror
Would evoke from her just one small tear.

A tear, yes, but not one of pity
For no one need pity me
For I'll be safe in God's city
And my mind and my soul will be free.

A tear caused by some strange emotion —
By an unfathomed love for me.
And she strengthens herself to devotion
To my mind and my soul, — but they're free.

And so, If I knew how she'd take it
If I just knew for sure that she'd cry
The trip — I would not have to make it;
There'd be no need to die.

* * * * * *

Shoot yourself, Jim my love
You'll not find me crying
A cup of hemlock take thee dear
And I'll not rue your dying.

These words of mine can not be kind
Yea, twill fill your heart with rancor
To know that when your ship sails out to sea
I'll help you hoist the anchor.

Editorially Speaking

by Ralph McCampbell

In the past week, Maryville College men have twice been the victims of attacks by town hoods — once downtown on the main street and once in the lobby of Carnegie Residence. Both were unprovoked and decidedly unfair. All the victims required medical treatment of some sort. The hoodluums used a chain, a billy club, and beer cans to do their work — six on three the first time and three on one the second.

This is an outrage. It is an outrage that no one came to aid the victims. It is an outrage that the administration has taken no stand. When asked if the school favored prosecution of the attackers, the now standard reply came that it would be taken under consideration. In other words, they don't care. They do care if someone gets thrown into the fish pond, or overcuts chapel, or doesn't clean up his room. They care about these — and others.

But should a student prosecute a gang of hoodlums that jumped him? They don't care. You are old enough to take care of yourself in matters like that. You're old enough — that's life. But, are you old enough to keep a neat room or have the responsibility of a car or be alone with a member of the opposite sex? That's life, too, it's been said.

If the administration of any institution has not the backbone or just plain old guts to protect and advise its students on important matters like this so that no further outrages occur; if it doesn't care that much, then it has no right to expect its students to comply with any regulation it lays down. There is an ancient adage somewhere that turn about is fair play. This, above all, should be taken under consideration.

I Think I Have a Liverwort!

by Sandy Haggart

Dr. Shields' natural history course began on Friday, March 4, with a lecture in the Theatre from seven to eight p.m. The course will last for eight weeks and will include lectures, labs and field trips, covering various aspects of plant and animal life, with special emphasis on life in this area. As Dr. Shields states the purpose of such a course is to discover the beauty present in all of nature.

Friday's lecture, taught with the aid of Dr. Shields' exceptional slides, included a brief survey of the plant kingdom and an introduction to the liverworts and mosses, starting with the question, "How do your tell a moss from a liverwort?"

The course is aimed mainly at townspeople and high school students, with Maryville College students seemingly a minority of two. The dates of future lectures are still to be determined and those participating will be notified.

THE FUTURISTS PART II

Bacterial and viral diseases will probably have been virtually wiped out. Cells have only a few secrets still hidden from probers, who are confident that before the year 2000 they will have found the secret that causes cancer.

Drug control of personality will be widely accepted. If a wife or husband seems to be unusually grouchy on a given evening, a spouse will be able to pop down to the corner drugstore, buy some anti-grouch pills, and slip them into the coffee. Or a lack-adaisical person could be dosed into a sense of ambition.

An even more momentous prospect is offered by DNA, the complicated molecule that contains the elements of heredity. Biologists think that before the century is out, they will have succeeded in changing the "information" contained in DNA. If so it will become possible eventually to control the shape or color of men to come; man will become the only animal that can direct his own evolution.

But even the most optimistic experts see no real sign that they can learn enough about the process of aging to dramatically prolong life beyond 70 to 80 years average.

Problem of leisure

By 2000, the machines will be producing so much that everyone in the U. S. will, in effect, be independently wealthy. With Government benefits, even non-working families will have, by one estimate, an annual income of $30,000-$40,000 (in 1966 dollars). How to use leisure meaningfully will be a major problem.

There are some who gloomily expect a society run by a small, elected elite, presiding over a mindless mulitude kept happy by drugs and circuses, much as in Huxley's Brave New World. But most futurists believe that work will still be the only way to gain responsibility and power.

Fear & Bliss

Social and political changes are far harder to forecast than technological ones. Futurists are earnestly considering all kinds of worries: the possible failure of underdeveloped countries to catch up with the dazzling future, the threat of war, the prospect of supergovernment. Some futurists believe that amid general plenty, politics will simply fade away. Others predict that an increasingly homogenized world culture—it has been called "the culture bomb"—will increase international amity.

Harvard's Emmanuel Mesthene, believes that for the first time since the golden age of Greece, Western man "has regained his nerve" and has come to believe, rightly, that he can accomplish anything. "My hunch," says Mesthene, "is that man may have finally expiated his original sin and might now aspire to bliss."

The chief message of the futurists is that man is not trapped in an absurd fate, but that he can and must choose his destiny—a technological reassertion of free will.

Ready?

by Jerry Weeks

"Many students never really discover what education is all about until their junior or senior year of college." Did this, or could this, possibly apply to you? This was the comment of Dr. E. Fay Campbell, the Chaplain of the College. This problem was one of the sources for his new book, Getting Ready for College. "I am convinced," says Dr. Campbell, "that neither the high school, the church, nor the home is adequately preparing students for college." Getting Ready for College is an attempt to have the family and the church prepare students for college. It is hoped that the book will become a basis for discussion among parents, the minister, and the student.

Dr. Campbell has been associated with college campuses all his life. He was involved in the Christian Student Movement at Yale University for twenty-five years. He has worked on numerous campuses during the last twenty years. He brings a wealth of knowledge and understanding together in his book. The college student, he says needs to be ready for the kind of world which the college provides with its freedoms and problems. It is hoped that when he is adequately prepared, he can better meet the demands made of him.

Dr. Campbell first began to collect ideas for the book about two years ago. He began to write it in September, 1964. Last summer it was published by the Westminster Press. At the same time he was beginning to collect

My adversaries taunt me saying to me all day long,
"Where is your God?"
Why are you sad, O my soul?
And why do you sigh before me? Psalm 42

Hear this, all your peoples, give ear, all your dwellers in the world,
Of lowly birth or high degree,
rich and poor alike.
My mouth shall speak wisdom,
and my heart shall proclaim insight.
I will incline my ear to a proverb, will breathe out my riddle on the lyre.

Psalm 49

Ours is a time to question, to disturb to listen to the riddle of our life not hiding
from the pain of uncertainty.

Listen now for the riddle as it comes to you.

Have you not heard of that madman who lit a lantern in the bright morning hours, ran to the market place, and cried incessantly, "I seek God! I seek God!" As many of those who do not believe in God were standing around just then, he provoked much laughter. Why, did he get lost? said one. Did he lose his way like a child? said another. Or is he hiding? Is he afraid of us? Has he gone on a voyage? or emigrated? Thus they yelled and laughed. The madman jumped into their midst and pierced them with his glances.

"Whither is God" he cried. "I shall tell you. We have killed him — you and I. All of us are his murderers. But how have we done this? How are we able to drink up the sea? Who gave us the sponge to wipe away the entire horizon? What did we do when we unchained this earth from its sun? Whither is it moving now? Whither are we moving now? Away from all suns? Are we not plunging continually? Backward, sideward, forward, in all directions? Is there any up or down left? Are we not straying as through an infinite nothing? Do we not feel the breath of empty space? Has it not become colder? Is not night and more night coming on all the while? Must not lanterns be lit in the morning? Do we not hear anything yet of the noise of the gravediggers who are burying God? Do we not smell anything yet of God's decomposition? Gods do decompose. God is dead. God remains dead. And we have killed him. How shall we, the murderers of all murderers, comfort ourselves? What was holiest and most powerful of all that the world has yet owned has bled to death under our knives. Who will wipe this blood off us? What water is there for us to clean ourselves? What festivals of atonement, what sacred games shall we have to invent? Is not the greatness of this deed too great for us? Must not we ourselves become gods simply to seem worthy of it? There has never been a greater deed; and whoever will be born after us—for the sake of this deed he will be part of a higher history than all history hitherto."

Here the madman fell silent and looked again at his listeners; and they too were silent and stared at him in astonishment. At last he threw his lantern on the ground, and it broke and went out. "I come too early," he said then; "my time has not come yet. This tremendous event is still on its way, still wandering—it has not yet reached the ears of man. Lightning and thunder require time even after they are done, before they can be seen and heard. This deed is more distant from them than the most distant stars—and yet they have done it themselves."

It has been related further that on that same day the madman entered divers churches and there sang his requiem aeternam deo. Led out and called to account, he is said to have replied each time, "What are these churches now if they are not the tombs and sepulchres of God?" FN, Frohliche Wissenschaft, 125

Where are we moving? What festivals of atonement, what sacred games shall we have to invent?

"It comes to this "what interests me is learning how to become a saint."

"But you don't believe in God."

"Exactly! Can one be a saint without God?—that's the problem, in fact the only problem, I'm up against today." AC La Peste, 231

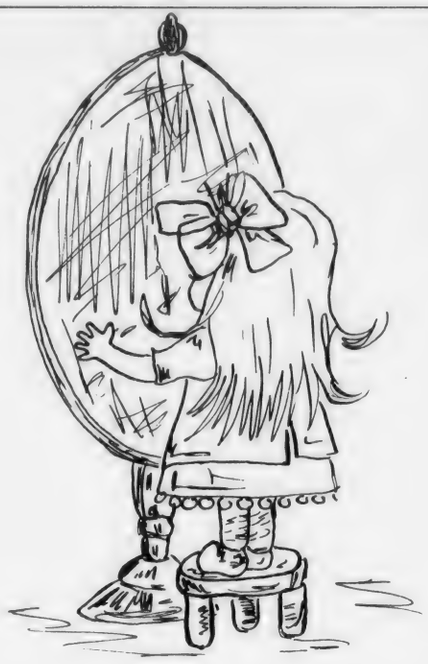
Alumni Stop Scots

Outlined against the blue-gray March sky, the Four Horsemen rode again. They bore little resemblance to the famed quartet of 1924, but rather a group of M.C. graduates—Phelps, Berry, McClanahan, and Monroe.



Last Saturday night, before a crowd that braved what seemed like sub-zero weather, the Alumni posted a 12-0 victory over the 1966 Scot footballers, in a climax to the spring practice session.

After winning the toss, and taking the opening kickoff back to their own 36-yard line, the Scots pushed 50 yeards downfield, before being stopped at the Alumni 14. Then, former Little All-American quarterback Benny Monroe took the Alumni on the offensive. In 10 plays, including two penalties and two fumbles. the old timers had ground into the end zone, climaxed by a TD pass from Monroe to Wilbur Ramsey. The kick by Monroe was wide, and the quarter ended 6-0.

Both defenses stiffened in the second period, and there was no scoring. At the end of the half, Jack Mullins intercepted two passes from Crabtree, both of which were nullified by penalties.

The only score of the second half came half-way through the third quarter when Monroe scored on a 9-yard keeper. The kick by Sonny Hughes was wide.

The improvement of the varsity over last year's dismal season was obvious from the sustained drives they made, almost every time they got the ball. Quarterbacks Butch Crabtree and Junior Maietta showed remarkable ability to move the team, and the running of Byram. Robbins. Dockery, and McCampbell, as well as the pass receiving of Captain Sonny Webb, indicates a good future for next season.

Baldwin to be Renovated

The administration announced today the plans for the renovation of Baldwin Hall, a traditional landmark of the Maryville College campus. Plans were drawn by the S. P. Ears Architecture Firm, and actual construction will be carried out by the C. Ollie Termitus Destruction Company.

Present plans call for enlarging the parlor, which has suffered greatly from the population explosion during the recent cold weather. Another improvement will be the installation of a new communication system throughout the dorm. The present one depends solely upon the sender's vocal strength and the receiver's possession of ESP.

Hot Water Coming

One feature, which will be particularly appreciated by any of the girls who stay out until closing time, will be the installation of additional showers. It is hoped these will assist in clearing up the evening traffic jams during the rush hours. Of course, the residents will have to be reoriented to the idea of hot water at night. It is feared that some of the co-eds, accustomed to ice water showers, may scald themselves in the new showers.

Drinking fountains, food machines, and exercise rooms will be installed on each floor. The exercise room will be located right next to the machines, so that the girls need not feel so guilty about buying that Coke instead of Tab — and those peanuts to bring out the flavor of the Coke.

Rooms Enlarged

The rooms, themselves, will undergo several improvements. The closets will be enlarged to accommodate the clothing of two modern coeds instead of the two nineteenth century coeds for which they were originally designed. After all, a girl needs room for her twenty-six blouses, fifteen wool skirts, ten school dresses, eight dressy dresses, three cocktail dresses and formals. And there must be room in the bottom of the closet for those thirty shoeboxes. More dresser space is also needed. It is impossible to even begin to keep the modern coed's cosmetics and hairpieces in the present

Victor R. Schoen, a former Theory instructor at Maryville College returns next fall after recuperating from a severe brain damage injury inflicted by an enraged soprano in one of his counterpoint classes this past March. Participating in the full-time curriculum again, he will teach, and head the Chinese Department.

In cooperation with the emphasis on Asia, the Maryville College Choir will direct its 1967 tour towards the East, including the countries of China, Thailand, Burma, Cambodia, Viet Nam, Laos, Japan, and hopefully India. Dr. Harter is taking special precautions against the Vietnamese accidently mistaking our choir for the United States Army Special Forces currently stationed in Viet Nam.

Thanks to the tremenduous response of the students toward Tsuyoshi Tsutsumi, the Japanese cellist to be featured on the forthcoming Artists Series, the 1966-1967 series will present an ancient Chinese orchestra featuring such unusual instruments as the sheng, t'sai hsiao, chu, ch-in, pien chung, and po fu.

The Art Department is making plans to exhibit the paintings and drawings of Miss Esther Swenson, the five-year-old daughter of Mr. William Swenson, Chairman of the department. Miss Swenson has recently received a scholarship for her future college education and $5,000 cash award from The East Tennessee Artists Association for the mural in her home bedroom. This creation will be removed from the residence and reassembled in the gallery of the Fine Arts Center.

Echo Selects Man and Woman of the Year

Pas. ıella Pulchritude

Harry Heman

The Highland Echo staff, in cooperation with the whole student body, has chosen a man and woman of the year. This is the first year that the Echo has undertaken this difficult selective process. The requirements for this honor are very strict and barely attainable. The persons who were selected achieved the following requirements for the all-around person.

1. A manuscript of independent studies had to be submitted and approved by the judges. A bid had to have been made by a publisher promising to publish it.
2. Both social events of the year had required attendance. Blue attendance slips signed by all 42 chaperons had to be submitted to the staff.
3. The religious requirement was a little less vigorous with a mere 4 year perfect attendance in chapel.
4. The person had to submit to a closely guarded grading system which was marked by the nearest of kin — the housemother. Here they were graded on amount of T.V. time, smoking etiquette, tooth brushing accuracy, and number of times dining hall was used instead of dining room.

The judges had a very laborious job but the chairman of the committee, Evelyn Ramger, announced that after much deliberation they selected Miss Passionella Pulchritude as woman of the year and Harry Heman as man of the year. The Highland Echo hopes to continue this tradition in the typical Maryville fashion — who knows, maybe your son or daughter will win!

The Debate Team to Hit Hawaii

Dr. Walker has just announced to the vice-president of Pie Krappa Delta that the debate team will take in two more tournaments this season instead of the one more planned. The University of Hawaii has invited the whole team to come to Honolulu for a week to debate with their team on the topic, Resolved: It is better to have loved and lost than never to have loved at all. Dr. Walker accepted the invitation and began rearranging the teams in boy-girl partners instead of the traditional (as of the last two tournaments) girl-girl and boy-boy teams.

The team has split into two camps on this important national topic: half of the team, the novices, claim that it is better to have loved and lost, and the older, wiser, more desperate varsity members claim that it is better to love, but to keep on loving. Dr. Walker refuses to comment.

The team is now very busy buying new bathing suits, surfboards, etc. for the trip. They will travel by car, but it will not be bad since the college has just bought two new Jaguars to travel in. They hope to win in Hawaii and complete the season undefeated, as they now stand.

Party Given by Junior Class

On Thursday, March 31, the senior class was entertained by the junior class with an independent studies party at Green Meadow Country Club. Don Story, president of the junior class, explained, "We tried to get the Senator's Club but unfortunately faculty club had previously reserved it.

Entertainment was provided by the Lloyd Residence Amazons' Vocalizing Aggregation, better known as the Voiceless Fricatives, accompanied by the Bartlett Barbarians, a new guitar and grin group on campus. Since it was impossible to march around the library, it was decided to march around the bar. Carole Brownlee was prevailed upon to render excerps from her independent study, Cooper's Sea Novels or subtitle: Naval Novels.

The party broke up at 1:15 A.M. thanks to the new 2:00 A.M. special permission for senior women. Paul Millin was the only casualty of the evening. He was last seen floating down Pistol Creek, buoyed up by an empty Schlitz can and one unidentified Maryville policeman.

ANNOUNCEMENT: Miss Judith Claire Siver, Maryville's only re-re-sophomore, is definitely scheduled for graduation in 1972.

Chemistry Department Purchases Oak Ridge

Dr. F. A. Griffitts, chairman of the Maryville Chemistry Department, has released the following announcement: Due to continued delay in building the new science building, he has personally purchased the Oak Ridge Laboratory (the owner is a good friend of his and gave him a price which he could not pass up — $62,000,000,000!!) This will, he further stated, keep the budget a little tight for at least a year, but once the go-go-a-helicopter commuter service is installed there will be little else needed for the department. The traditional ten minutes between classes will still stand — you know, what was good enough for grandfather . . .

Due to the size of the freshman class, Piedmont airlines has eagerly agreed to run a hop flight from Honaker Football Field to a to-be-installed landing strip at Oak Ridge. All students under 21 may fly with a youth fare card; no insurance available.

Editorially Speaking

This Week's Editor Is Ralph McCampbell

The following is a true story. I feel it is my duty to pass it on to the students of Maryville College.

Once upon a time in a small sheep-herder village long ago, a small boy was tending the village sheep on the outskirts of the cozy little town. He was a prankster and he had a rotten mind. Being a small boy who was a prankster with a rotten mind, he decided that it would be fun if he shouted, "Wolf, wolf," at the top of his voice. And he did. He shouted—and all of the fearless townspeople came scurrying out of their respective homes and abodes carrying sticks and other deadly weapons with which to drive away the menacing wolf. There was no wolf and the small rotten boy gleefully guffawed at the gullible group senselessly flailing the bushes in search of one. The peaceful villagers were furious and stomped their way back to their respective homes and abodes dragging behind them their sticks and other deadly weapons.

The next day the small rotten boy pulled the exact same nasty trick with the exact same nasty effect on the tranquil townspeople. An identical trick the following day exasperated even the sedate citizens of this small, fun-loving town as they dragged their sticks and other deadly weapons behind them to their respective homes and abodes for the last time.

The very next day, a wolf came to harass the herd and the small rotten boy shouted, "Wolf, wolf," at the very top of his voice to no avail. The experienced townsmen would not again fall prey to this small rotten prankster's folly. And it is a shame indeed, for all of the bleating sheep were eaten by the ravenous wolf. So ends the tale.

As one can readily perceive, it has a moral: don't raise sheep if you own a small rotten boy. Or—don't believe everything you hear. All we can say about this issue of the Echo is "Wolf, wolf," or, "April Fool." This does not mean that there is no April, as some, remembering the story may think, but rather, that nothing in this paper is true and that no offense is intended to anyone involved. We sincerely hope you enjoy it.

I Ain't Sayin

This reporter questioned some returning students as to their vacations and etc. Most of them had very little to say about etc. Those who finally broke down and talked had this to say to the question: "What did you do over vacation and etc?"

Greg Hallen: "I spent every cent I had; could you loan me five dollars?"

Sandy Briggs: "It rained the whole time we were in Nassau and I had to stay in bed all week."

Karen Keen: "The sun shone the whole time we were in Nassau and me and Siver swam all week."

Judy Siver: "Thash right. Don't let Briggsh give youwhile any no.?!!xx."

John Weiler: "Don't touch me."

Ed Greenwald: "Well first me and Bud spent a day walking to Nebraska before we caught a ride from some guy going straight through to British Columbia. We never had such an offer before so we couldn't pass it up. Later, when we got to New Orleans Bud was accosted by some broad in the French Quarter — it musta smarted. Two for five the card said. We never had such an offer before so we couldn't pass it up."

Doug Gamble: "I flew off to New York."

Mary Jane Finke: "I flew off the handle."

Vicki Madson: ". . . which wasn't too bad except for the other guy who couldn't even see to drive straight and when Sally said 'I'm getting out,' well I about flipped and then . . ."

Mel Loring: "You get away from me. You're nasty."

Orus Rupe: "I can't remember a thing, not a thing. Vacation was just one big dud."

Paul Millin: "I was in Florida. They're all a bunch of toads down there. All toads.

Bill Evaul: "I went home and got the shock of my life. My parents have been converted. Now I'm Jewish."

Van Pallis: "Look at this wonderful little woodsy scene I painted with berry juice on my belly button. Don't touch it; it's not dry yet."

Bo Hedges: "Look at this wonderful little belly button I painted on my woodsy scene."

Bill Erwin: "I went home by Jett."

Jenny Jett: "I went home by God."

space. Therefore, the desk will be removed and replaced with a large vanity table.

Ceiling heat will replace the radiators. Admittedly, it is going to be lonely at first. The silence will be frightening to the residents who formerly lived in the constant presence of George, the radiator. Each room will also have its own telephone. No more waiting in line on Sunday nights.

Automatic Beds Seen

New beds will be installed. These will contain massage units to cut down on tired, tense muscles. There will also be a control panel beside each bed to make the process of getting up in the morning a little easier. This panel will turn on the light, off the alarm, and give off the odor of fresh coffee, bacon and eggs. This may be a cruel trick to play on the poor student, but it has been found to be quite effective.

In case the student does find time to study, there will be a few study rooms provided. Not much time has been spent in planning these as it is felt that very little use will be made of them. After all, with all the other features found in this dorm, who could have time to study!

Several incidents have occurred recently around the construction sites here on campus to cause campus officials to wonder at the safety measures taken by the construction company.

Just yesterday President Joseph J. (Stud) Copeland was overheard saying, "The meals in the dining hall have been getting lousier every day. Who knows when it will all end?"

Questioned further on this subject J.J. continued: "Yes, several incidents have occurred recently around the construction sites here on campus to cause campus officials to wonder at the safety measures taken by the construction company."

Is There a W. C.?

Or Granny's was never like this!

An English lady, while visiting Switzerland, was looking for a room, and she asked the schoolmaster if he could recommend one. He took her to several rooms and when everything was settled, the lady retuned to her home to make final preparations to move. When she arrived home the thought occurred to her that she had not seen a W.C. (water closet: bathroom) around the place so she immediately wrote a note to the schoolmaster asking him if there was a W.C. around. The schoolmaster was a very poor student of English so he asked the Parrish Priest if he would help with the matter. Together they tried to discover the meaning of the letters W.C. The only solution they could find for the lettters was Wayside Chapel. The schoolmaster then wrote the following note to the English lady:

Dear Madam,

I take great pleasure in informing you that the W.C. is located nine miles from the house in the center of a beautiful grove of fine trees surrounded by lovely grounds. It is capable of holding 229 people and it is open Sundays and Thursdays only. As there is a great number of people expected during the summer months, I suggest that you come early, although there is usually plenty of standing room. This is an unfortunate situation, particularly if you are in the habit of going regularly.

You will no doubt be glad to hear that a good number bring their lunch and make a day of it. While others, who can afford to go by car, arrive just in time. I would especially recommend your ladyship to go on Thursday when there is an organ accompaniment. The accoustics are excellent, and even the most delicate sounds can be heard everywhere.

It may interest you to know that my daughter was married in the W.C. and it was there that she first met her husband. I can remember the rush there was for seats. There were ten people to a seat usually occupied by one. It was wonderful to see the expressions on their faces.

The newest attraction is a bell donated by a wealthy resident of the district. It rings everytime a person enters. A baxaar is to be held to provide plush seats for all since the people feel that is a long-felt need.

My wife is delicate so she can't attend regularly. It is almost a year since she went last. Naturally, it pains her very much not to be able to go more often. I shall be delighted to reserve the best seat for you, if you wish, where you will be seen by all. For children there is a special time and place so that they will not disturb the elders.

Hoping to have been of some service to you.

Sincerely yours,
The Schoolmaster

Fuhr Wins Masters

Tom Fuhr won the USPGA Master's golf tournament today with a four round total of 273, seven strokes ahead of his closest competitor, Calvin Knox. The winner received $25,000 top prize money, while Knox received $10,000.

The match was played at Withering Spoon Country Club, in Hershey, Pennsylvania, over an extremely long and difficult course.

The highlight of the tournament was Fuhr's hole-in-one, coming in the last round of competition. For aceing the 195 yd., par 3 14th, Fuhr received an extra $5,000 and a 1966 Cadillac convertible which he plans to trade for a smaller model because: "I want one that is easier to park."

Consistant putting seemed to be the key to Tom's success, as he three-putted only one green and on six occasions sunk putts of more than twenty-five feet. When asked to explain his unusual putting form, Fuhr replied: "I suppose I do all the things an excellent golfer does—feet firmly planted, head still and all that. But the key to my success is the way I hit the ball. I try to stay relaxed and let my hands do as little as possible. Only the weight of the putter propells the ball. It's the same way with driving. I let my clubs have all the authority. My game has improved tremendously while practicing on the college course."

The British Open is next on Fuhr's list. "I've always wanted to visit England since it's the birthplace of almost all American institutions. England even has a place in the hearts of students at Maryville College — I have heard General Braddock slept in Memorial Hall."

Stoker Inks Pro Pact

Darrell Stoker, a sophomore at Maryville College, today signed a contract to play professional basketball for the Harlem Globetrotters. The terms of the contract include a $50,000 bonus and bus fare to Hawaii where the team is currently on tour.

"Brillo" Pads Record Book

Stoker has played varsity basketball for two years at MC and has been a standout both years. "Brillo" as he is called by his teammates, holds several records, among which is the distinction of being the only man in MC history to miss 31 consecutive free throws in varsity competition.

This reporter was able to interview Mr. Stoker during a practice of the Magna Rodentia, a group for which he performs. When asked to comment on the signing, Stoker replied: "Um GOOD! Boy, this extra bread oughta' come in handy. I think I'll buy a new set of guitar strings 'cause I broke one recently. But the only trouble is I play so loud I can't tell which one's broke. If anything's left I'll contribute it to the project to raze the gym and convert that area into a practice field for the band (or at least a picnic area for music majors.)"

Stoker plans to join the Globetrotters sometime in June, after he graduates from Memorial Institute of Corruption and Rowdyness.

M.C. Raceway Opens

The newly completed one half mile Maryville College circular raceway was the scene of the "Townie 500" Saturday, March 5. Several MC undergraduates entered but only Louis Newman and his Sears & Roebuck skateboard qualified for the race.

I. M. Thugg of Maryville won the pole position in his 1965 Chrysler, "Chains & Clubs." His only comment concerning the race was: "In numbers there is strength."

The race started at 10 P.M. and Lou Newman, with the protection of 300 MC undergraduates, was several laps in the lead. But on the sixteenth lap Newman secumbed to fatigue and was forced into the pits after imagining that he had seen a rifle pointed directly between his eyes.

Thugg then took the lead and it looked as though no one would be able to overtake him until several late entries arrived. They were five squad cars from the M. P. D. which quickly caught up with the leader and went on to sweep the first five positions.

The winner, Sgt. Perciful Krupke, who drove squad car No. 3 was given top prize — a free balloon-test and permanent parking space in front of Anderson Hall.

Crippen, Baron, Win At Flats

Maryville College was made rightly proud today. It was announced that the popular proctor of the Men's Residence, Mr. Lee Crippen, won a first place with his Falcon at the First Annual Falconry Contest in Burdee Flats, Navada.

Mr. Crippen's Falcon, known as the Red Baron, gained the reputation as being the scourge of the airway when early in the contest he attacked a squirrel of the flying variety. This gave Mr. Crippen an early lead, for the object of the contest is to bag the largest variety of game in a specified time. Because of the aggressive nature of Mr. C's bird there were protests of "fowl play" and "Darn the Red Baron."

At the end of the day Mr. C's entry was tied with that of a Burdee Flats native, Colt Falstaff. The tie was broken when a playoff was held after dinner. The Red Baron was sorely pressed to find a game; when suddenly from out of the setting sun flew a lost and bewildered South American Condour. Dauntless, and with courage inherited from his master, the Red Baron attacked the big bird. The shocked Condour was harassed so heavily by the fearless Baron, that he flew into a Beer Sign and was promptly killed, thus giving Mr. C and the Baron their first championship. For those interested in statistics, the Red Baron became a single Ace with a total tally of:

4 Calling Birds
3 French hens
2 Turtle Doves
1 Partridge
1 squirrel (Flying variety)
1 South American Condour

All MC joins in saluting these two fine sports for a job well done.

7:09—Hugh asked Roy, who did, to do the honors.

7:09½—Attendance check showed guests Brownlee (obscenely clad), Dr. Campbell, and Dean and Dr. Fuhr. Mary Jo and Tex weren't with us.

COMMITTEE REPORTS:

Projects, Social—nothing. (Not to be interpreted as an indication of satisfaction with Spring's Opportunity.)

Elections—with luck, information concerning the upcoming load of elections will be in your mailbox. How about some serious thinking about qualifications?—many schools do.

WSGA, MSC—are resting.

Organizations—plans for further discussion of the results of the amazing realization that the "Societies" at Merrville are fascinatingly inefficient are underway. A whisper of the possibility of an expanded program of societies was overheard—yes—in The Tower's Trunk. Don't get excited—yet.

Academic—John reported on a meeting Tuesday of the leaders of the six groups of faculty and students who have been meeting since vacation to discuss The Mess. The plan is to expand and divide the present groups so as to allow as many members as possible of The Plight to express themselves constructively. This is a good opportunity to raise heard hell—so listen for the formation of the new groups. Some quite constructive ideas about the Salvation of Chapel have been heard and might receive reaction. This program is progressing very frankly. Even Brownlee is encouraged. Join in, if you think.

Programs—$4 Ferrante and Teicher tickets—the best in the Auditorium—are on sale—FOR $2—from Doug Gamble. We will charter buses. Thursday, April 14 at 8:15. See posters or Doug—some choice.

Orientation—next week's Echo will feature a complete report of the already-adopted recommendations of Craig's Anything's better than that Committtee. Dr. Fuhr was impressed: "Gosh, this is great! Gee, you really can read" . . . and drive and play and think—wailed a voice from—you guessed it—Below.

BUSINESS:

Dean Fuhr, working well from The Outline, revealed that MC is really going through with this foolish idea of letting the tenants rate IT. The College and University Environment Scales, a national independent student opinion rating system, is to be used this spring. Juniors and seniors will be allowed to Tell The Truth. It's a good chance, as

All students who are presently sophomores or juniors are eligible to run for the position of 1966-67 Highland Echo editor-in-chief. No previous experience on the newspaper is necessary. Any student interested in the position is asked to contact the present editor. Arrangements will then be made for the candidate to edit a trial issue of this year's Echo. If financial circumstances permit, the editor is given $50 per semester for his efforts. Other staff appointments are made by the new editor after the election, which is conducted by the present staff.

Circle K Inducts New Members

The last meeting of Circle K included its monthly program and the induction of new members. Rich Marshall, president of the club, outlined the club objectives and responsibilities to the new members. New members who were presented with pins included David Crawford, John Dowling, John Haynie, Scribner Messenger, and James Moore. Mr. Lloyd Thornton, Alcoa Training Manager, presented the program which concerned a brief analysis of his vocation.

On Thursday morning, March 10, it was announced that Circle K had donated $100 toward the Crossroads-Ferozepore Project. Circle K is particularly proud of this project because the funds were not taken from its treasury. Each member was given the name of a Maryville or Alcoa Kiwanian who wanted some work done. With this contact, each member went to work to make money for the project. We would like to take this opportunity to thank all of those who made the success of this undertaking possible.

Anyone who may have suggestions as to how the Circle K Club can be of service to the college community should feel free to contact any of its members. We are at Maryville to serve you.

In connection with its 50th anniversary, the Highland Echo is sponsoring a short story, poetry, and photography contest. Deadline for submitting material will be May 1. Entries will be judged by a faculty committee, consisting of Dr. Edwin Hunter, Dr. Carolyn Blair, Mrs. Jack Cate, and Mr. Duncan Bennett. Contestants should place each entry in an envelope with names on a separate piece of paper and give them to any member of the Echo staff. Short stories and poetry must be typed, double-spaced, on one side of the paper. Winning material will be published in the anniversary issue.

WSGA Changes Rules

Since the week before spring vacation, several changes made by WSGA concerning women residents have been in effect.

The main emphasis has been placed on a revision of the car permission system. The former system (i.e. permission slips given by the housemothers) was set up about five years ago by students, but it has since lost its relevancy and practicality. Thus the revised method centers on the sign-out card already in use—in other words, no more permission slips! This sign-out card now is used also to leave necessary information if riding in a car. It is not necessary, however, for a girl to sign out if riding within the Maryville-Alcoa limits during the day. Nothing is needed, therefore, for such things as student teaching, shopping, work at Home Avenue, etc.

Other changes include the opening of the parlors at certain times for slacks as well as other minor changes made by the house councils within individual dorms.

These revisions hopefully are more workable and more logical than formerly.

Peace Corps Discussed at Econ Meeting

Mr. Robert Vander Ohe, a former Peace Corps member, was the guest speaker at a seminar presented by the Economics and Business Department Thursday. Mr. Vander Ohe is now working on his Ph.D. in Economics at the University of Tennessee. In addition to his general discussion, the Problems of Economic Development, Mr. Vander Ohe told what the Peace Corps is trying to do to assist underdeveloped nations.

Copeland to Speak at Easter Sunrise Service

"That Amazing Morning" will be the topic for Maryville College President Dr. Joseph J. Copeland at the traditional Easter Sunrise Service in the College Amphitheatre Sunday morning. The service includes special music by the Maryville College Choir under the direction of Dr. Harry H. Harter, and a brass ensemble under the direction of John A. Roberts.

The service will start at 6:10 a.m., the hour of sunrise, when the 29th annual program will get under way in the natural woodland theatre in the College Woods. Dr. Copeland and Dr. E. Fay Campbell, the College Chaplain, will be in charge of the service.

Playing by the brass ensemble opens the Easter Sunday morning service. Brass chorales are played on the campus and along the way through the College Woods. The service opens with the Maryville College Choir singing "Christ Is Arisen." Other anthems by the Choir include "Wondrous Love," "Alleluia! The Strife Is O'er," "O Sons and Daughters," "The Lord Reigneth," "Christ the Lord Is Risen Today," and "Beautiful Savior." The service closes with the benediction and sevenfold amen sung by the Choir.

Scripture for the service is from Romans 6:8-11 and Colossians 3:1-4.

Dr. Campbell will preach at the Easter Vespers service at 7:30 p.m. Sunday in the Chapel on the campus.

Announcement:

The Spring Formal will be April 30 instead of May 7.

Fuhr Speaks to Council on Disciplinary Action

(The editor regrets that space does not allow for the complete text of Dean Fuhr's remarks, but it may be obtained from Student Council President Hugh McCampbell.)

At the regular meeting of Student Council on Tuesday, April 5, Dean Fuhr presented a paper entitled "Statement on Disciplinary Action." The following remarks are excerpted from that paper: "Note, to begin with, that the college accepts the possibility of failure in spite of its concern to redeem all individuals involved in disciplinary action since it is, by its very nature, an educational, not a clinical institution. The college does not have the personnel, the funds, or the procedures to make available to students the facilities in clinical psychology that would be needed . . .

Adjustments Needed

"Both the institution and the individual must be willing to make adjustments in the light of a complicated and troublesome matter. If either party to the settlement refuses to accept the limitations required by the other, there can be no effective action. The college has no right to expect all concessions to be made by the student, but, by the same token, the student cannot expect, without penalty, to disregard the limitations imposed upon him by the college. The student who chooses to avail himself of the privileges offered to him by the institutuion but does not choose to live by the regulations which govern its operation is asking an impossible bargain. He wants all the opportunities but none of the restrictions. Specifically, it is unrealistic to enroll at an institution which has regulations against drinking and then hope to escape penalty if the drinking takes place."

Board View Seen

After a brief discussion of apparent unequal justice in regard to disciplinary cases, Dean Fuhr continued by saying that "the inequities arise from the nature of the incidents involved, and of variables among the students. The disciplinary body charged with the investigation of the case frequently takes into consideration questions like these: Is this a first occurrence . . .? Is the student deliberately violating the regulations . . .? Has the student developed a consistent pattern of good behavior . . .?

"What many students do not realize is that nearly any disciplinary problem can be settled short of suspension if, on their own initiative, they will submit the issue to a counseling situation and do not wait to plead the right to a second chance after they are caught. The idea of a second chance implies that there is reasonable hope for renovation in character; it loses meaning when it is used as a device to avoid some penalty."

Dean Fuhr then cited examples to substantiate his premise that discipline action is often the way by which students are enabled to realize their mistakes and take steps to correct them. Suspension is not the end of the road but may rather be the catalyst needed by a particular individual.

"College policies may not always be wise," he went on to say, "and injustices and frustrations may at times result, but let us, in our more appreciative moments, be thankful that we are part of an institution where, for generations, men and women have shared deep convictions and lived by rigorous standards. In a world where values are so often mere extensions of the temporizing, emphemeral, individualistic concerns of men, we hold to the sometimes unpopular view that the lives of students are not necessarily best served when each gets to do precisely what he wants at the moment that he wants it. This is moral anarchy, and the college will have cheated its students educationally if it ever gives the impression that a do-as-you-please policy will work either here or anywhere."

Cars Distract Students

Restrictions in the use of automobiles was taken as a case in point. The "psychological impact upon the student's academic life" was stated as the more critical of the issues to be considered in this instance. ". . . Cars acquired chiefly for social and recreational purposes constitute major distractions. They almost inevitably prompt students to spend time on the road that they cannot afford away from their studies, and to seek outlets and satisfactions in activities scattered over a wide geographical area when it is more meaningful to their college experience if both their academic and extracurricular programs are centered on the campus." In spite of these comments, Dean Fuhr did express the hope that a more realistic program concerning cars can be arrived at in the near future. He concluded with the remark that "one of the great choices in this world is to decide whether to make life an exception to the rules, or, within the rules, to make an acceptable life."

Council reactions to the presentation can be found in column 1.

Last Artist Series Reviewed

by Robert McKaskell

The final recital presented by the Maryville College-Community Artist Series this year featured Tsuyoshi Tsutsumi, outstanding young cellist, and Leonora Suppan, pianist. One could rave about Mr. Tsutsumi's bowing technique, or his highly precise intonation, or the depth of interpretation evidenced in his Bach and Prokofieff, or one could criticize the relative weakness of the pianist (shown especially in the Mozart), but to what advantage? Those of us who attended Saturday's recital will long remember our experience with Mr. Tsutsumi's artistry; since few of those who did not attend realize what they missed, why direct comments to them? Mr. Schoen and his committee did a marvelous job of choosing this year's Artist Series programs. Those students (and, it might be added, faculty) who do not avail themselves of the opportunity to broaden their experience are to be pitied.

Scots Take Two from Hillsdale

MC opened its baseball season with back to back victories over visiting Hillsdale College from Hillsdale, Michigan.

The Scots had to scramble for their tallies. Sonny Webb got on an infield single, stole second and third, and raced home on a passed ball to tie the score at 1-1. In the seventh inning Steve Dorner singled to drive in what was to be the winning run as the Scots took a 2-1 decision.

The defensive play of the Scots came through on several occasions to prevent Hillsdale from scoring. But Jim Bachus was never in serious trouble as he went the route to notch up the Scots first win.

On the following day Sonny Hughes drove across two runs with a seventh-inning, bases—loaded single, giving MC a 5-4 victory over Hillsdale.

Hughes led Maryville at the plate with three singles in four trips. Left fielder John Maietta made a running catch of a towering drive in the eighth inning to prevent Hillsdale from cashing in on a two-on opportunity.

John Hancher and Jack Llewellyn were superb as they combined to allow only 5 hits and both came up with fine defensive plays.

The wins hiked the Scotties record to 2-0.

UT 8 - MC 3

Pitchers John Hammond and Mac Petty combined to twirl a nifty two-hitter as the University of Tennessee defeated MC by a score of 8-3.

Playing in disgusting weather and on a packed sand infield, the Scot defense suffered several lapses, both mental and physical, which allowed UT to score several unearned runs.

The only bright spots of the day were a single by freshman Dave Maxwell and a two-run homer by Norman "Sonny" Hughes.

TOMPKINS TO GIVE RECITAL

The Department of Fine Arts will present Sarah Tompkins, soprano, in her senior recital on Thursday, April 14, 1966, 8:15 p.m. in the Fine Arts Center Music Hall. Numbers on the program include works by Mozart, Strauss, Wolf, Puccini, and Rorem. Mary Rucker, junior piano major, will accompany Miss Tompkins.

FORWARD,

it seems to be highly regarded by Them. More encouraging signs?

The Dean's "Statement on Disciplinary Action" is summraized, as he read it, elsewhere in the Echo. At Its End, Roy asked about the theory behind the room inspections. Dr. Fuhr's request that Dr. Campbell respond led to what really did look like an honest to Goodness disagreement. 'Magine that!

Dr. Campbell's suggestion for a two-rule school will be omitted for fear of placing his reputation in jeopardy among Some. It was nice—see a council member for the smut.

A rather lively discussion of responsibility, in regard to cars, booze, privacy, etc. followed. We heard the "you don't wanna let a child cross the street alone" bit, spiced twice by the term "safeguards," so far undefined. The points, from all sides, were well taken. Dr. Fuhr seems quite willing to talk about most anything. Even cars. It seems that if we would present a "well-thought-out proposal concerning the improvement of the car situation," it would receive consideration. Wow, dears, where in this good earth have we heard this before?!

He did say, though,—I heard him—that he thinks that having no cars at all is unrealistic. Shall we try again?

Really don't think Eggers meant any harm with the bit about the lousy academic atmosphere here. Council agreed. Mrs. Fuhr didn't. What did you say Frank's average is?

"On the Twelfth Day of Tour -- We Collapsed"

by Jane Brenckman

Would you believe . . . Ten people in a Trailway's john?! Yes, it happened—in the home-on-wheels of this year's touring choir. The Trailway's john was the scene(?) of many riotous incidents throughout the twelve days. Because of its importance and acute necessity, Jim Breckenridge composed "Ode to a Trailway's John," which endured its premiere performance on Award Night while the choir was in Athens, Alabama. Performed by the Blue Haze, this composition received instant acclaim and was only challenged in popularity by the Girdlettes version of "Un*tweek*able You," one of the choir's favorite pastimes——er, songs.

Each day the choir met wonderful people, sang at FIVE or SIX high schools, and ate chicken, and ate chicken, and ate more chicken. There was fried chicken, chicken casserole, fried chicken, chicken salad, broiled chicken, and last, but never least, fried chicken. Due to these monotonous circumstances, it was fortunate that the choir did not have in its program a number that it had previously performed called "Two Wings." This could have been disastrous, as several of the choir members were already clucking and pecking at the ground. Fortunately the choir returned home before mass metamorphosis took place. Miss Ware welcomed us home by serving our favorite meal — CHICKEN, of course.

Although our bus trips were never unbearably long, our "nurse," Eileene Nightingale, was kept quite busy administering dramamine. Why was this necessary? Perhaps because the arrangement of our engagements forced us to zig-zag through Alabama and Tennessee, always passing through Huntsville, no matter where we were going. This made it convenient for us to stop often at Mildred's Luncheonette, our favorite restaurant and calisthenics ground. Here we were able to obtain a terrific bargain on delicious food — one ham and one cheese sandwich, an apple complete with worm and family, a coke, and a toothpick — all for the reasonable price of $1.25. As an additional service, Mildred allowed us to use her front yard to work off her filling and nourishing lunch by doing such exercises as the burpee, the jumping jack, and the Harry hustle.

Unfortunately, all good things must come to an end — even choir tour. But memories such as these will keep the tour of 1966 alive for a long time to come.

Honor Students Inducted

Five Maryville College honor students were inducted into Alpha Gamma Sigma, Maryville College honor society, in ceremonies in the Fine Arts Center Lounge Monday evening. They are Sandra Chittick, Bill Erwin, Karen Keen, Celia Tiffany, and Frank Eggers. A sixth student, Sandra Briggs, is also eligible for membership but could not be present for the ceremony.

The students will be honored at the annual recognition ceremony in the Chapel May 5 when Dr. Mildred Campbell, Maryville College graduate and history professor emeritus at Vassar College, will speak.

Shown above are five of the six Alpha Gamma Sigma new members who were installed April 12.

Is The Echo Broke?

What a bargain — one-hundred percent discount for students on each copy of The Echo. $2098.75 has been spent this year for printing it, which is an average of $161.50 for each edition and approximately $.19 per copy. The following is a summary of the Echo's financial position so far:

Expenses

Printing	$2098.75
Postage, supplies	83.63
Misc. (telephone, other)	342.03
	$2524.41

Resources

M. C. Treasurer's office	$1568.00
Advertising sales	remainder

It can be seen that the allowance covers around one-half the expense; the rest must be made in advertising sales.

Theatre to Present Three Shows

A second year of community summer theatre, plus a new Children's Theatre, has been added to the Maryville College summer program. A total of three shows are planned for the Summer Theatre project, and the Children's Theatre will provide a four-week workshop ended by the production of a play for and with children.

The Summer Theatre and Children's Theatre will be under the supervision of Thomas E. Jones, Director of the Maryville College Playhouse.

Opening the Summer Theatre program, probably at the end of June or early in July, will be a production of "The Boyfriend," a spoof on the 1920's. Two other plays will be selected by community people interested in the Summer Theatre program as actors or in any aspect of staging, costuming, or production.

The Children's Theatre, to be known as the "Jack and Jill Players," will provide a creative dramatic program for the many children in the community interested in theatre work. The many children who sought parts in the Maryville College Playhouse production of "The Sound of Music" indicate a widespread interest in children's threatre in Maryville.

Brahams Accepts Position at Willamette

Raymond I. "Brick" Brahams, Director of Development at Maryville since 1958, has accepted a position as Vice President for Development at Willamette University in Salem, Oregon which is effective August 1, 1966. His new position will include work for the college development program as well as public, church, and alumni relations.

Willamette, an affiliate of the Methodist Church, has an enrollment of 1,800 students who pursue degrees in the College of Liberal Arts and Sciences, the College of Music, or the College of Law.

Brahams, born in Laguna Beach, California, attended Occidental College in Los Angeles before his graduation from Maryville. He received his Master of Arts in history from the University of Colorado.

An active participant in church and civic affairs, "Brick" is also a member of Phi Alpha Theta, national honorary society, and Phi Gamma Mu, national social science honorary society.

While at Maryville he has headed the very successful $7,000,000 Sesquicentennial Development Program as well as performing fund-raising efforts, alumni relations, and public information.

He and his family are planning a vacation trip through Colorado while en route to his new position.

Students Panel to Express Religious Views

A special panel program entitled "A Variety of Religious Experiences" will be presented Monday, April 18, at 8:00 p.m. in The Lantern.

We are asking five students to give their personal responses to the religious background in which they have been reared, indicating the factors in their religious experiences which have proved most meaningful to them as individuals. Dee Snyder will speak about the Roman Catholic faith, Vimol Jotikasthira the Buddhist religion, Fred Abramoff the Jewish faith, Keith Renne the Bible Presbyterian Church, and David Powell to represent the individuals in our culture who are uncommitted.

The program is being sponsored by the UCCF with Dr. Tom Fuhr, Dean of Students, as the Moderator. Students and guests are invited.

A Student Opinion Poll: Teachers, Courses, And Grades

by John A. Kerr, Jr.

Questionnaires pertaining to the educational program here at Maryville were recently circulated among students of various majors. Twenty forms were distributed per class, and those people asked to fill them out were instructed to answer the questions conscientiously and according to their personal experience. Unfortunately not all the forms were returned, so this survey covers not quite 10% of the student body. Obviously we shall be dealing with generalizations, and although this can often be dangerous and misleading, certain trends and suggestions have appeared in the results which everyone involved in campus life, especially teachers, would do well to consider.

To begin with, it is almost a unanimous opinion of the students who took part in this survey that many teachers need to cultivate the art of lecturing. Specific objections varied widely, but the most common were the teacher's reading of notes, speaking in a monotone, and repeating himself needlessly. Concerning whether or not most teachers "know" their subject, it was the general consensus that they do; furthermore, it was felt that there are few cases of teachers being seriously uninformed in their field (although some students did list some professors who, they felt, are definitely deficient in knowledge of their subject.)

Students felt that a minority of teachers overstress the authority of the textbook; general agreement was that this hinders learning.

A multivoiced opinion was that some teachers' methods necessitate "memorizing" rather than "learning." Missing major concepts as a result of being bogged down with trivia seemed to be a common occurrence. Although opinions in this respect varied greatly according to the major field, students generally felt that teachers should emphasize relationships and trends instead of dwelling on minutiae. "Nine years from now who'll remember the shoeshine boy of King Alfred the Great, anyway?" questioned one student.

It is a general preference that classes be conducted on a combination lecture-discussion basis with plenty of opportunity for student involvement (remember that, students!)

Concerning grading, it was alarming to discover how many students declared their goal in most classes was a grade rather than understanding. Reasons for this were numerous: pressure from parents, teachers, and class atmosphere, acceptance at graduate school, receipt of financial aid, etc. And students who claimed that understanding of subject matter was their classroom goal, felt that the emphasis on grades hindered their learning.

Schellenger Wins Library Award

The Amy Loveman National Award for the best personal library has been won on the local level by Dale Schellenger, senior history major from Gurnee, Illinois. He entered 35 books under the title, "Library of Modern Alienation." This award brought him $10 worth of books plus eligibility for the national contest and the possibility of winning $1,000 for first prize or $200 for honorable mention. The national contest is sponsored by the Book-of-the-Month Club, Saturday Review and the Woman's National Book Association.

Honorable mention was awarded to Celia Tiffany, who will probably receive a one-book prize for her excellent general library.

The judges for the local contest were Mrs. Dorothy Crawford, chairman; Dr. Arthur Ainsworth; Duncan Bennett; Mrs. Ruth Webb; and Dr. Edwin Hunter, consultant. Mrs. Crawford reported that all of the judges were pleased with the ten final entries and felt that with the interest which had been shown the contest would probably be sponsored by the Maryville College Library again next year.

The two winning libraries will be on display in the library during National Library Week, April 17-23.

EDITORIAL OUTLOOK

I LIKE MARYVILLE COLLEGE BECAUSE (No editorial "we" this week):

1. I have received a sound undergraduate basis in English, which is my major.
2. The independent study program has been very valuable to me personally.
3. The size of the college makes it possible for individual contact with administration and faculty.
4. The Echo is not restricted in the material which it publishes.
5. I have formed friendships with students and faculty which I consider meaningful.
6. The strict regieme of the past is being daily challenged and possibilities for change and progress are being considered.

I DO NOT LIKE MARYVILLE COLLEGE BECAUSE:

1. Four years of my life have been abstracted out of the contemporary American situation.
2. I am being led across too many streets for my own good.
3. My value judgments become amoral because morality is legislated.
4. Possibilities for social responsibility are not commensurate with progress toward graduation.
5. Portions of the curriculum are an insult to the intelligence of any serious college student.
6. New ideas for immediate change become stale when filtered through myriads of committees.

Six of one, half a dozen of the other. But, I've been here four years, haven't I?

GRAY TOWER

by Jim Gifford

We are men — the most complex of all the lumps of clay that God chose to place upon the earth. We are rather distinct from other animate beings. We have a movable, workable thumb and the power to reason between right and wrong. With all these wonderful assets, mankind has progressed over the centuries to its present state — insipidity and pretentiousness. This is a progression? Of course, the same sort of progression that man has made in learning to kill, both himself and others, more quickly and efficiently.

Perhaps man will never change. Primarily, he will always be composed of what he eats and what he thinks. I often think what a pity it is that we and they and those that are to come do (will) not make a greater attempt to control their two factors.

Our world would be more like the world above,
If everyone would only learn to love.

Letter to the Editor

March 18, 1966

Dear Editor:

I am writing to comment on the article by John Mulholland entitled "The Quest" in the February 26 issue of the Highland Echo.

When I read this article I was really impressed by it, in fact, it really inspired me. I congratulate Mr. Mulholland for writing an article like this. In this article he really hits the nail right on the head. I am glad that he has taken the initiative to try and convey this most important message to the students. The most important part of this article is that the student should not take everything for granted and not challenge it and find out more about it or if it is right.

I would like to reemphasize and amplify a few points in the article. Since I have been out of college I have come to realize how important this idea of challenging the ideas you learn is.

Education is no fun unless you get the most out of it. One way of doing this is by challenging your professors. When you get out you will find that your education will not be as full and complete. The real importance of education is to get the most out the field you are studying. So get the most out of your education by challenging the facts you get and do a comprehensive study of your field. When you get out you will find that you are better prepared.

In closing I would like to congratulate Mr. Mullholland again on the fine article he wrote.

Sincerely yours,
Martin J. Papp

FOCUS ON CHEMISTRY

by Sandra Briggs

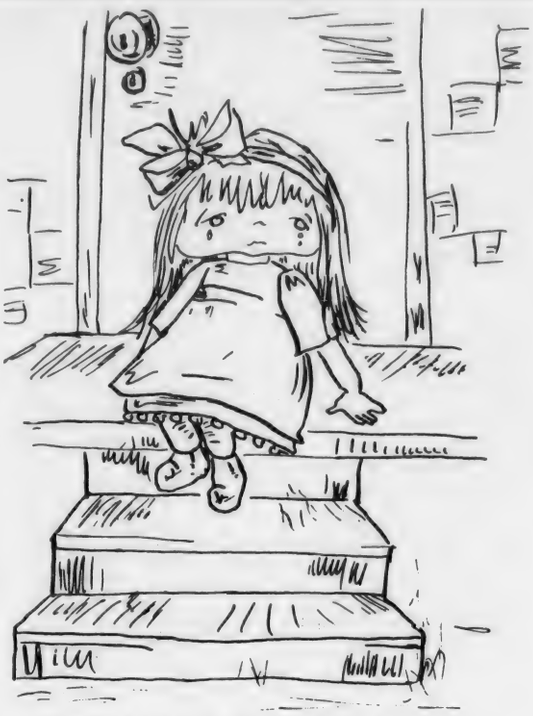
Reseach for Pre-meds

Three years ago the general pre-medical major was dropped from the Maryville College curriculum. One of the main reasons for this was the difficulty encountered in doing an independent study. The student was just not specialized enough in either chemistry or biology to do a thorough research. Therefore, up until this time, the future medical school student usually has majored in either chemistry or biology and has done an independent study in his major field.

This year, however, because of the concern for the pre-medical students, I have been afforded the opportunity to forego the standard chemistry independent study program. I am doing a study at the Blount Memorial Hospital Laboratory under Dr. Elgin Kintner, head pathologist, and Dr. Edwin Kelman, assistant pathologist.

The study involves the use of paper chromatography in determining relative concentrations of amino acids in the blood. An excess or deficency of certain acids is known to be the cause of certain forms of mental retardation.

With this type of co-operation, it is still possible for the chemistry major to do an independent study in his main line of interest. This opportunity is being granted to the biology students. Oliver Williams, who will enter Ohio State University Medical School next fall, is also doing his independent research at the hospital.



Spend your summer in Fayerweather!

For the past two summers, the chemistry department has carried on a research program under the direction of Dr. David Young. He has announced that there is a projected project for this summer which will involve two or three students. Funds have been supplied for this program by the National Science Foundation, the Petroleum Research Fund of the American Chemical Society and Research Corporation.

Grant applied for

Dr. Fred A. Griffitts, head of the department, has announced that a prosposal has been sent to the National Science Foundation for a grant to buy very specialized equipment for the cemistry department.

An Open Letter To Dean Tom Fuhr

(Editor's note: The following is the viewpoint of an individual student and should be regarded as such. Because the Echo is and will remain an instrument for personal expression, we ask for responses to Mr. Schellenger's statements. The reply of Dean Fuhr will appear in next week's paper.)

With the statements that I've heard from you in the past two weeks, culminating in last Saturday's Echo, I feel a response is necessary. I shall have to start with the points which first strike me. There are two concepts which you advocated which some have been trying to do away with for some time — both centering on the fallacious idea of a college in loco parentis. Your statement concerning the leading of a child across the street being comparable with making rules for college students is highly presumptuous. I do not want or need you leading me across any streets, nor is there any one of you in Anderson Hall so morally superior as to be able to give me your "wisdom" as a set of rules for life. No college has any business supposing that it knows so much about life that it must guide students. When will you people learn that moral life cannot be doctrinal, that it cannot be codified by the older for the younger generation? Moral life implies active decision of the particular person in his particular situation, not adherence to someone else's idea of a set of rules. I've crossed enough streets by now to be able to pick my own and to cross them at my own time.

I am perfectly willing to talk with you about what you think you've learned in your life, but when you codify it in the way Maryville has and then force it upon me with the justification that this is a necessary safeguard, all I can reply is "hog-wash." Your generation and its rules have made a clear showing of inadequacy in the face of the modern world. To ask me to be grateful for having to live by such rules is patently ridiculous. I must refuse such second-hand existence which calls on me to lead life the way you want me to; I have my own life to lead, and no justifiable reason can be put forward by any college for preventing me the flixibility to find my own way of doing so. If you persist in legalizing rules of life, you will cut off all communication between yourself and me, and of necessity you may find the student flatly refusing what you have to offer. At the present, I only go around your rules, recognizing their basically asinine character.

In the same manner there is your statement concerning moral anarchy — it is quite obvious that you have no concept of the meaning of the phrase. All it means in your context is that you're afraid that, without your rules imposed upon us, we might not lead our lives by them. You're darn right I wouldn't, but that's still a far cry from moral anarchy. It is fallacious for you to assume that you know so much about moral life that you can tell me that without your rules (or any set of rules as comprehensive as we now have) we will face moral anarchy. All I will do is to choose my own moral interpretations, a perfectly valid process which should not have to take place subversively. The smug idea that you seem to show which says that you and your Anderson tower friends are to "give us life and responsibility" has been shot full of holes many times before, and must remain invalid. If you persist in maintaining it here, you will find that, regardless of your new curriculum, you will not be able to keep intelligent students—already they are leaving, finding the combination of weak academics and ignorant rule more than they need to bear.

In the matter of judgment of students, I cannot help feeling that those who make the judgments are in worse trouble than those receiving them. Your statement about the lack of clinical psychiatric aid for our students must be altered. Perhaps you have not been here long enough to see many students crack because such help was not available. There should be no reason why Maryville cannot dig up the funds to pay part salary for a clinical psychiatrist, at the hospital for example, who could handle our students who have need of such service. The funds excuse is becoming a highly irritating one which I am sure can be gotten around. Your concept of judging a student on the basis of his willingness to reform is nothing short of coercion. You seem to expect me to admit I am wrong because I disobeyed your rules, which I cannot accept in the first place. The key here appears to be your concern that the college have final authority, no matter on what grounds. I feel that authority, as respect, must be earned, and there is precious little in the academic and social life to earn it.

The further idea that we must expect certain penalties to go along with our "education" is invalid in its present form. You used the euphemism "limitations" to justify the position of the school as supreme authority in all matters concerning students; to this I can only object, and say "no" resoundingly. I will work with you to change the situation, and do so eagerly; but I cannot run around giving lip service to the idea that we are wrong as long as the rule is on the books. "Renovation of character" as you stated it becomes very meaningless, for it is one-sided, and that side is your side, not the side of the "offender."

Now to cars, where, as you know, I have a personal interest. I brought a car back after Spring Vacation, and asked you to permit me to park it, telling you that my parents had no desire to have to drive two cars down here themselves at graduation time. Ignoring my parents entirely, you and your committee came up with a completely negative response to the issue which can only be calculated to prolong the present lack of logic in our car policy. "Take it back to Illinois," you said—as if I had the time or money to do so! As an alternative, you let me suggest my sister in Rome, Georgia, where the car now is. Your reasons? I hadn't told you before vacation, and you didn't want to establish a precedent of the college permitting cars to be parked until vacation. The first is another clumsy attempt to maintain college authority, regardless of the nature of the decision. The same type of attempt was made last semester when you made men in the basement of Carnegie return their rooms to their original setup, because they had changed two rooms around to have one to study in and one to horse around in without asking you—as if that was the only important issue.

The second issue I suggested that you get around by using the presence of my car a lever to review car policy, especially since you had made such an earnest statement about wanting to review it. But that was unheard, so the car is now "nowhere in East Tennessee" as you specified. Then came Saturday's paper. Perhaps you are not aware that everything in the way of research has been done except having cars on campus to see their effects. If you truly want to change car policy, you are in position to do so, and you would receive sufficient backing to facilitate all procedures and to secure your position against any opposition. I think that the argument about students leaving the immediate campus is crucial only if you still accept the myth of the "Maryville College family," which I happen to think is presently a bit shabby.

It seems that Anderson still has to learn that students can only suffer when someone else tries to lead their lives for them to the extent that Maryville does. Rebellion can be the only result, and freedom in such an oppressive atmosphere must necessarily become identified with escaping rules as such. This can be quickly changed, and without the sweat and tears now being shed over the issue. None of the rules is so sacrosanct as to defy inspection and change, nor are any of the motives of those who originally established them. As Paul Millin pointed out, one of the quickest ways to get students on the side of wanting to help this school change is to make the atmosphere more acceptable and realistic—in other words, change rules. Anarchy can only occur if you fail to allow for necessary change. Until the necessary changes are made, and especially until you stop thinking you stand in position to give me life and responsibility commensurate with your estimate of me—the life and responsibility which are already mine regardless of your opinions—until then, you cannot expect my aid, nor can you honestly expect us, as seniors, to go out of here recommending this school to prospective students. I have hope for the future of this school academically, and I've worked fairly hard to help; but a statement such as yours causes me to lose much hope, for the attitudes expressed therein stand directly in the path of this school ever becoming first rate.

Baseball Strongest In Years

The Maryville varsity baseball team has what promises to be one of the better teams to be fielded in the past few years. Coach Boydson Baird has scheduled a 26 game season in order to test the Scots. There are 8 Scots back from last year and a host of new promising material. Sonny Hughes is the only senior—the rest being either freshman or sophomores. Hughes, Sonny Webb and Frank Gready are the only 3 year returnees. Last year the Scots suffered because of their lack of hitting ability and depth in the pitching staff, two things that are heavily counted on in a winning baseball season. This year the Scots have come up with 4 good pitchers that can win readily if the team can score a few runs

Probably the strongest point on the team is its defense. At first base is Big John Agnew, a letterman from last year who handles his glove ably and is also a constant threat with his bat. John will be looked to a great deal for his hitting this year. Behind John is Jim Stiano, a freshman who has a lot of baseball ability and is capable of hitting the long ball occasionally. Jim will be relied upon to do much of the pinch hitting this year as well as some of the outfield duty. If he proves himself with the bat he may well find a regular spot in the line-up before the year is over.

At second base the Scots are equally strong with Steve "Doc" Dockery making the tags. Steve is a Junior transfer from Hiwassee Junior College. Steve played both of his years at Hiwassee and really likes the game. Along with smooth fielding Don Payne at short stop they make a fine double play combination. Don is also a letterman back from last year's team. After being moved to several positions in the infield last year, Don has found a regular home at short stop. Don will also be counted on for much of the Scots bat power.

Third is Question Mark

At the keystone sack Coach Baird has had to do a little thinking. In order to find the man for the position about five players were tried at the spot. After things were narrowed down, Coach Baird had two remaining choices: Steve Dorner and Dave Maxwell. Dorner got the nod for the first two games and did a capable job, but Dave will probably get a shot at the job before the year ends. Both boys prove to be better than average fielders. The big question will be who can come up with the big play or who can swing the bat. Steve is a sophomore who only decided to play this year. Dave Maxwell is a fre. man who has been switched from first base where he is a little more at home.

Rounding out the infield at catcher is captain Sonny Hughes. Sonny has lettered the past three years and handles the catching chores adequately. He will also be counted on heavily for his hitting ability. Backing him up is Frank Gready, a junior letterman. Frank works hard and within the past two years has improved enough that he can be substituted any time. He also can handle an outfield position if the need arises. Giving added depth to the infield is Lynn Raby, a freshman who can cover a lot of ground and if need be can play either second base or third.

Outfield has depth

The squad has been well supplied with outfielders this year. The starters are Al Morris in rightfield, Sonny Webb in center field, and Junior Maietta in leftfield. Al is a real ball hawk and has a fine arm even for his small size. Al will be found on first base as a runner many times this year. In center Sonny Webb is so at home he could sleep out there. Sonny snags any thing that moves in the area. Sonny is very capable of carrying a strong bat for the Scots and if he does get on base takes everything he can get for nothing. Sonny's poise on the basepaths will help cash in on many runs before the close of the season. Junior Maietta, a freshman who lives baseball, will prove a strong asset for the Scots this season. He covers his position well and has already started the season batting in the clean-up spot. The outfield also has players to spare with its added depth. Ralph McCampbell, Bucky Hartenstine and Steve Byrum are the outfield reserves. Bucky should see action this season because of his speed in the field and his strong arm. Steve not only is a reserve outfielder but also a promising catcher. He has a lot of hustle and is willing to put out in any place he plays. Ralph with his improved hitting and strong arm will be able to fill in whenever he is needed.

The hope of the Scots is pitching. With two new comers and two back from last year there is both new talent and experience. Back from last year are Jack Llewellyn and Bob Nicholas. Jack, a southpaw, has that magic touch that all left handers have plus a little of his own. Jack is an able starter and an excellent relief pitcher. He is sure to win his share of the games this year. You will find it most enjoyable to watch Jack perform his mound duties. Bob Nicholas is a sophomore returnee from last year. He had the most victories of any of the hurlers from last year's team. Bob is a strong thrower and with good backing from the field can turn in a victory at any given time. The two new comers are going to add a lot of spark to the team this year. Jim Bachus and John Hancher are the newest additions to the Scot roster. Jim has already turned in one fine performance and will be expected to add to his win column. He is a tall strong right hander who has all the makings of a good pitcher. John is also a strong thrower and his southpaw ways will give him an edge over any right handed pitcher. John has the potential of turning into a really fine performer before the end of the season. He has size and speed which matched with a little more control will give him the qualities of a winning pitcher this year.

The team this year is not overly strong but is well rounded with a sufficient amount of depth. With well-timed hitting, good pitching, and strong defense the Scots could go a long way this year. All home games will begin at 3:30, come cheer the home team.

UT DOWNS SCOTS

The University of Tennessee arrived at Maryville College at 1:30 p.m. on Monday, April 11. They left campus approximately five hours later.

Thinclads Drop Opener

Maryville's track squad was overcome in their first home encounter by a strong aggregation of tracksters from Cumberland College, 97-48. The Scots not only did poorly in the field events, but did not come up to expectations in the running departments.

The Scots got off to a good start by winning handily the 440-yard relay in 45.6 seconds (Leech, Cropper, Dalton, and Craig). Again the Scots struck in the 440-yard dash, with the swift Dick Craig taking first place in 53.2 seconds. Newcomer Cole Piper placed third with a fine effort. In the mile run freshman Bob Cooper ran a commendable 4.35, good enough for another first place for Maryville. Hugh McCampbell, also in good form, turned in a third place to collect six points in this event for the home team.

The remaining events seemed to be dominated by the runners from Kentucky. The mud-covered track did not help matters. A few bright spots for Maryville were as follows: Mike Dalton scored in two running events, taking a third in the 100-yard dash and a second in the 220; Terry Amon placed third in the 120 highs; Rich Reed gave Maryville a second in the 880-yard run; in the 440 intermediates, Bob Leech placed third after taking a hard fall on the sixth hurdle of the race; and Bob Cooper turned in a fine effort in the two mile run, taking a close second to Drake of Cumberland, despite an amazing final kick.

In the rain-soaked field events, the Maryville weightmen were out-scored by Cumberland 44-19, with Maryville's only first coming in the javelin. Greg Hallen, undefeated in last year's competition, captured this first with a toss of 163'. Ray Eaton rounded out the scoring with a third in this event. In the the disc, the Scots Monroe Brown, a very promising freshman, and returning letterman Cole Piper took 2nd and 3rd respectively. In the jumping pits, Dean Clark took a third in the high jump and a second in the hop, skip, and jump, followed by John McLaughlin's third in the latter event. In the pole vault letterman Denny McGowan place third with a vault of 10'4" Mike Dalton, exhibiting the best jump of his career, garnered a 2nd in the broad jump.

SCOTS SPLIT WITH NORTH GEORGIA

Jim Stiano cracked a pair of homers and MC pulled a triple play in the second game as the Scots split a double-header with North Georgia.

Stiano's second homer, a two-run shot in the sixth, gave Maryville the runs it needed for an 8-5 decision after the visitors had racked up a 7-6 win in the opener.

Stiano's first round-tripper capped a five-run seventh by MC in the first game.

Tuesday, April 19—The Lantern
7:04-7:11—The racket was fantastic—maybe Council hadn't recovered from Sunday night?
7:11—Hu whistled for Order, who showed little strength the entire meeting.
7:11—Tom Ellis shouted a prayer—or was that an editorial?

COMMITTEES:
Programs—Things are looking bright for some popular shows next year. We discussed the pros and cons of scheduling one on Homecoming Weekend. Your opinion on both who and when? . . . tell us.

Organization—This is Skit Nite Day—after the Frosh movie—25c.

OLD BUSINESS:
Council is to begin supervision of the Study Hall.
Senior Chapel still seems snagged on something. Is it a matter of time involved—or of a hesitation to laugh at ourselves?
A copper shortage has stalled that fire alarm. And that's the truth.

NEW BUSINESS:
The ventilation problem in the New Student Center was discussed. Council decided, finally, to put off further verbal combat

Honor Society Installs New Members

Pi Gamma Mu, national social science honor society, recently installed new members and officers for the coming year at its annual dinner. President Paul Millin installed the new president, Florence Corbett, and Vice-President, Fred Van Hartesveldt. New members also include seniors Sandra Chittick, Margaret Haggart, Anne Layman, Elizabeth Robinson, and Helen Ryan, and juniors Beverly Alcan, and Jose Cobas.

Pi Delta Phi, also, at a banquet meeting at Leonard's installed new members into the French honor society. As President Walter Goodwyne presided. Mr. and Mrs. Edwin J. Best and their son Edwin Jr., Meredith Pierce, and Mrs. Dees became new members of the society. As the meeting ended, Mr. Friedenbergs led the group in a rousing chorus of the Marseillaise.

1966-1967 Artist Series Scheduled

Next season's Artist Series programs have just been announced and include a variety of musical experiences.

On November 4, the series will begin with Helen Vanni, mezzo soprano, who has appeared at the Metropolitan Opera and with the Philadelphia and Pittsburg orchestras. On January 13, a piano, violin and cello group, the Beaux Arts Trio, will appear. It is especially noted for its Beethoven and Mendelssohn selections.

A somewhat different group will follow on February 3. The Romeros, Spain's first family of guitarists, will present a program of classical and Flamenco guitar music. Closing the Artist Series on April 14 will be an ensemble of twenty-one musicians and a soprano solist. This Princeton Chamber Orchestra is conducted by Nichas Harsanyi of the Westminster Choir College and Princeton University.

Dr. Jerry Waters

Dr. Jerry Waters, Associate Professor of Psychology and Chairman of the Department of Psychology at Maryville College, spoke to the Blount County parents of handicapped children at a meeting at the County Health United Tuesday, April 12, at 7:30 p.m. Dr. Waters spoke to the parents on how best to help children suffering from physical, emotional or mental handicaps.

The meeting was sponsored by the parents of handicapped children who organized to secure the services of the Daniel Arthur Rehabilitation Center in Oak Ridge, now one of the agencies aided by the Blount County United Fund. W. H. Semmes of the Maryville is President of the group. There are now 13 children from the county enrolled in the program at Oak Ridge.

Robert Ramger

Robert C. Ramger, Assistant Professor of Biology at Maryville College, has been chosen as a participant in the Summer Institute in Protozoology at the University of California, Berkeley. The Institute is sponsored by the National Science Foundation and will last for six weeks.

Ramger's wife and family will accompany him to California.

He has also had an article published in the February, 1966, issue of "The American Biology Teacher," a publication of the National Association of Biology Teachers. The article deals with the study of parasites, and suggests that a parasitic worm, available from biological supply houses, could be used in teaching a general parasitology course.

Copeland Announces Rule Changes

by Bill Erwin

At last Saturday's Chapel, Dr. Copeland announced that two changes would go into effect immediately — smoking was permissable in the student center and dorm returning hours for women on Sunday nights had been changed from 7:30 to 10:30. Dr. Copeland also explained that thorough studies are underway by the Dean's and appropriate student dorm groups concerning dorm life.

The remarks made by Dr. Copeland on Saturday carried more, however, than just an announcement that certain rules had been changed. He went on to explain the hours of hard work that concerned students and faculty through regular student-faculty groups, have been spending in an effort to understand what Maryville College should be. Small group meetings, which split and form new groups, meet informally to throw out ideas, suggestions, and impressions. A long, deep and hopefully, an honest look is being taken by our college community into its purpose and structure (academically, socially, and spiritually). What is needed now is a barrage of ideas. "What would you like Maryville College to be?" Last Saturday's Chapel carried a message of change to be sure, but, more than that, it carried an invitation for anyone with a concern and ideas to join in the current discussion and evaluation here at Maryville. What is good? What should be discarded? Do you have any ideas? The best results will be gained when the faculty and student body join in an open dialogue of mutual concern.

A Student Opinion Poll: Teachers, Courses, And Grades

by John A. Kerr, Jr.

PART II

Some students expressed a desire for more than two major tests a semester; there were those, however, who prefer having just the two tests, and one person advocated a nongrade program (pass or fail) with a number of personal teacher-student conferences. The number of tests a semester seems to be an important issue for teachers to consider; efforts should continually be made by teachers to adapt their testing program according to the manner which would best facilitate students' learning (this would naturally vary with courses and the feelings of the particular students involved.) Most students agreed that periodic quizzes aided learning, but that the quizzes could be fairer, that often it seems as if the teacher is trying to "shoot them down" with trivial, tricky questions.

It was an almost unanimous concensus that teachers are willing to show students personal concern; in most instances of a student's hesitancy to talk over a problem with a teacher, the fault lay in the student's attitude, not the teacher's willingness.

Following now are miscellaneous suggestions students made toward bettering the educational program:

Teachers should make a greater effort to bring material into contemporary terms.

Courses should be better coordinated (both intradepartmental and interdepartmental); the Phychology and Sociology Departments were mentioned specifically in this respect.

Maryville College being a church-related college, the Bible and Religion Department should be far stronger than it is.

Class attendance should not be required; but class should be made so vital that students feel the need for attendance.

Seminars are especially effective.

The English Department should expand its offerings on Shakespeare and add a course on literary criticism. A special 101-102 English class for foreign students should be arranged. There is a lack of "creative" emphasis in the English Department and too much stress on scholarship for its own sake.

A student should be able to take upper level nonmajor courses on simply a pass or fail (credit or noncredit) basis; in this way they would not affect one's grade point average, which would be determined by only those grades achieved in major courses.

Half-hour tests could replace hour tests (naturally there would be more of them a semester than there are hour tests now.)

Students should be allowed a more active role in learning — not just expected to feed back lecture material on tests.

Hopefully, this survey, by presenting what we feel are representative opinions of students, will do much toward informing teachers and administrators of our estimation and analysis of the present education program at Maryville. If it does this, it will have been a successful step in improving the communication between students and faculty. Using this study as a basis, perhaps students and teachers could continue to consider constructive improvements through personal conferences and small student-faculty discussions (of which there are a few already meeting.)

In conclusion we would like to add a word of caution to students looking for perfection in their professors; as one senior said, "Ideal teachers are as rare as ideal students." And on the same questionnaire appeared an articulate summary statement challenging both teachers and students as to their educational role: "It is the responsibility of teachers always to improve and validate their courses, and it is the responsibility of the students to balance by their own efforts what they may feel is lacking in a course."

The Better Than Nothing Committee Reports

A number of the freshmen who participated in this year's orientation program expressed concern about the program held last fall October — December, and their comments seemed significant enough to warrent an appraisal of the whole situation. A recommendation was made to the student Council, by Dean Fuhr, that the freshmen representatives on the council along with interested classmates meet to consider the issue. The committee was formed and on the March 31, 1966 they requested a meeting with Dean Fuhr.

The committee feels that it is important to carry out some basic parts of the orientation program the week of the students arrival. In the past we have had just two days for such activities, Tuesday and Wednesday, of the opening week of school. Even these days have not been entirely free for orientation activities since there have been several tests which consume the time of some or all freshmen. Assuming that these tests will be needed again next fall a recomendation was made by the committee to lengthen the orientation week. The administrative staff accepted the recommedation and postponed the beginning of classes until Monday Sept. 19, thus allowing the week of Sept. 12, for orientation.

The committee also feels that incoming students should meet with their advisors before registration at which time a program concerning the offerings of the various departments would be presented. Other considerations for orientation during this week are: college regulations, various campus activities and the various organizations. Dean Fuhr has also submitted a suggestion that a one hour semester course be offered on study techniques.

The majority of the students on the committee feel that the incoming freshmen shouldn't be spoon fed; that the orientation discussions should be ones that will give the facts and the true reasons behind them. It is also felt that several orientation meetings dealing with provocative topics will be needed after classes begin. However, plans for these topics are still being discussed and will not be available till later this month. Any reaction to the work already completed is welcomed by any freshmen officer.

NO ECHO NEXT WEEK.

WOULD YOU BELIEVE COMPS?

EDITORIAL OUTLOOK

Have you noticed a change in atmosphere since last Saturday? Have you heard kids (that for years have said the same thing that Schellenger did in his letter) suddenly ask what in the world was the matter with that guy? Said one, "I sure do hope Dean Fuhr realizes that was only an individual opinion." And all this because of one 15-minute announcement by President Copeland. Amazing, isn't it?

O.K., now what? It's rather obvious that our previous charge of administrative indifference is now quite invalid. No longer can we say that our pleas and suggestions fall on deaf ears; nor can we bemoan the alleged inability of Executive Council to take action.

A faculty member last week said, "What do you students really want?" We aren't sure—maybe it's room to breathe, room to grow, room to learn. Then, on the other hand, maybe it's the freedom of responsibility for which we are grasping so desperately. The world pushes freedom on us from every direction; Anderson Hall is joining the trend. We've asked and we're being given. What next?

Our chaplain has said that if students were treated as ladies and gentlemen, then they would respond as such. Would we? Are we mature enough to accept the serious nature of the demands on us which are required with every liberating action?

In writing of the decline of Athens, Edith Hamilton said,

> "When the freedom they wished for > most was freedom from responsibility, > then Athens ceased to be free and > was never free again."

Sorrow

I can only share your Sorrow;
Never ask me to explain it.
You have not offered to share;
I came, not willingly—even despairingly—
But could I have stayed away?
O Little One, how can you stand the Pain?
Has all been in vain?

Joy was ours for but a moment.
Joy and Sorrow have been ours.
In which lies our love only God knows,
And he will never tell.

I lie;
And I am dead.
They have killed her.

or wine or cloth.

Reflecting the hot noon sun
the glaring dish made me one with heat and white and sheets of light.

Now I know a gift that glares, when a gift of glow
from one who cares
was what was meant,
will not suffice.

Yes, and such a meager way
— a gift at all — to have to say that my intent
(of wood or wine or cloth) was not to soil, decay or be drunk down
to leave such empty glass,
But rather was a question
"Do you understand?"

D.R.P.

If
I could hold you now by my tears
my sighs
my thoughts
my eyes
If
I could but speak one word a word that would suffice
a word that would impoverish your confusion a word that I could know as my own a word that I could offer to you now — and know the security of its having been spoken
If I could . . .
Yet
even so
I know full well I would not, for even as the breath of wind chimes cannot be held in lavender bottles for safe-keeping cannot love be pressed beneath glass without distortion.

"We Went: We Listened: and we had fun!"

From April 3 to April 6, Deenie Barnett and Mary Jo McConeghy enjoyed the luxuries of the Oklahoma State University Student Union Hotel: wall to wall carpeting, private bath, telephone, television, maid service, no closing hours, and no clanking radiators. The Intercollegiate Association of Women Students (IAWS), of which the Maryville College WSGA is a member, was holding its southern regional conference. The days were full of meetings and events, including the pleasant surprise of a Hawiian luau.

The convention's theme was action; dicussion groups were geared at formulating interest which would result in action.

Deenie's discussion group considered the place of religion on a campus: Are college students more or less "religious" than others? What are the popular trends in religion? What are the problems coused by fanatical groups? Mary Jo's discussion group tried to examine and evaluate the college woman's role in student government.

Discussion also considered the problems of colleges as affected by their size, the workability of honor systems, scholarship programs for girls, the position of freshmen, and the involvement of town students.

The IAWS convention provided some new ideas. Its national clearing house is also a source of information and ideas. Hopefully its theme of action can be carried over to our own campus.

"Question 7"

A Review, Dale Schellenger

We were somewhat disappointed last night when we learned that Ingmar Bergman's allegory, "The Seventh Seal" could not be obtained, but we endured the sufferings of the theater as it attempted to show "Question 7" which ended with a story-telling session by Mr. Jones after the projector bulb failed and could not be replaced.

All This and Cancer, Too.

A few pithy remarks and apt observations concerning the unrelated manner in which certain negligible concerns went unheeded by opposing retractors (unwitting as they were, it should be noted) in a recent court decision handed up by the oppressed tobacco miners to the great Judge in the Sky whereby the future was crystallized far beyond what we could forsee, for a change. Amen.

Here, then, the promised and aforementioned remarks:

Yes.

No.

Love.

P.S.

The Newport Festival will not be held in Newport this year nor will it be a festival as previously planned and ordained by precedent. The Salem trials are scheduled to resume and it is felt that the needless strain of competition between the two events can be relaxed by foresight. Sir Winston (of Parliament and other recessed hovels) said we were "Lucky." This statement was reiterated by the Duke of Marlboro from his palatial mansion at Kent. His son Chester felt differently, however, and his reply was, "Flogging more now but enjoying it less? Try Adolph's Meat Tenderizer and get all the juices. You can't beat it. (You won't even want to.)"

Well, as Teddy Roosevelt once said, "Speak softly and carry a big stick."

Well, as Aunt Jemima used to say, "Come and get it!" but she always got everything backwards.

Learning

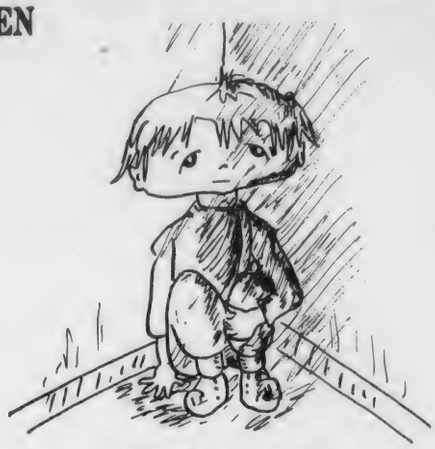
by Jim Gifford

I walked down a quiet street alone
And an old beggarman sat there
And I wondered if he were happy-
This drab old man with the silvery hair.

I knew it was none of my business,
But I asked him concerning his part
And he spoke with the deliberation of age-
As if each word were his last.

"I had been happy at one time
But God took it all from me
I, as a youth, was a pine straight and tall
And God chopped down my tree."
He rose cursing and spat on his crutches
And he hobbled the path I'd just trod
And I knew more why people were unhappy —
For they walked down life's path without God.

A Student's Reply to Dale Schellenger



Dale, I think you reflect the aspirations of a great number of students when you advocate changing the boorish-seeming rules of this institution. However, I am in violent disagreement with your basic attitude toward rules in general. You have stressed in part of your editorial commentary the necessity of mature individuals making their own statutory decisions; in other words, if you don't happen to agree with a law, break it. How anarchistic can you get? What can you really hope to gain by functioning as a one-man congress? Freedom? Come off it! If everyone chose conscience over necessity, chaos and perpetually non-constructive friction would plague mankind until he sank back into prebarbarianism.

But must man be merely a social cog in a vast bureaucratic machine? Let's face it! Man is a social animal. He has achieved pinnacles of cultural attainment working in concert with other beings bound by common ties—racial, cultural, political, economic, emotional (although race is non-essential). You are an integral part of a society, Dale—this society.

You are not operating in a sociological vacuum; neither do I think you stupid enough to hide completely your mind in existential philosophy like an ostrich head in sand. Dale, why don't you take into account the reasons for rules instead of merely chafing against them? For instance, there is the student anti-parking rule . . . If "the until the fag fad dies down to normalcy—whatever that is.

THE SITUATION:

As I see it—my reaction—a shared one, but not necessarily that of Council as a body:

Having spent, academically, too much time in the group meetings and the group leader meetings and the Now Committee meetings and Behind-the-Echo Meetings, I have gathered some rather definite reactions to things—and I have not been Sir Optimistic, in general—BEFORE.

The progress we have seen lately has not been token concession. We are not being appeased. The atmosphere established by the recent student-faculty contacts has been a very open and healthy one—and its results are obvious. There is much more to come.

The faculty and administration are spending long and agonizing hours in honest examination of Maryville College. The student opinion, when mature, is being given careful attention. The Board of Directors, when it meets in May, is going to be confronted with numerous recommendations and reports which deal with the very heart of this place. We are going to change—and just as soon as possible.

We—now—have a definite job. We can dispose of the idea that Anderson Tower is out to shaft us. It isn't. Exceptions?—maybe. But the time has come for us to assume that the Other Side is really honest. There—now—is just no other way to progress. The Other Way failed badly.

Sounds rosy. It isn't. Never will everyone be satisfied. We may still be dumped upon, but those of us who have been struggling to keep up are convinced that we are on the right track—on a train which is moving too slowly but which is at least moving—FORWARD, Etc.

P.S.—Two weeks ago I would never have thought, no less written, this. Tomorrow I may want to take it all back—but I hope not. Let's get behind this New Smell and leave the Old Stink alone—IT MIGHT WORK.

Editor's note: Dale Schellenger and Dean Tom Fuhr are presently working on a joint statement in light of the letter printed last week. This statement will be forthcoming in the Echo.

Track Lose to Emory

A sunny day in Atlanta, Georgia at Emory University's track was the scene of the Scot track team's second loss of the 1966 season. Again it was the case of being outclassed in the field events which meant defeat for the struggling thinclads.

Maryville held their own in the area of the running events by taking six out of ten possible first places. The 440 relay team was again victorious with a time of :45.4 (Leach, Dalton, Cropper, Craig). It turned out to be the most exciting race of the day as Dick Craig nosed out his man at the finishing line by just a fraction of an inch. Bob Cooper, improving his mile time by several seconds, again won this event with a time of 4:32.3, setting the track meet record at Emory. Later in the day, in grand style, Cooper won the 2 mile run (10:11.5). The 440 yard dash was won by Dick Craig with the best time this year in that event, :52.8. In the 880 yard run Rich Reed placed first with a 2:04.9 and Bob Leach was the Maryville winner in the 330 intermediate hurdles (:41.8).

Second Place Difference

The difference was in the number of second places which the Scots managed to garner. Mike Dalton, top point man for the team, took second in the 100 and it was Craig again in the 220 with a second place. Hugh McCampbell placed third in two events for the Scots, scoring points in both the mile and the 880. Terry Amon managed a third place in the 120 highs and Dalton ended his day with a third in the 220.

The field events were swept by Emory University — no first place wins were to be had by the Scots. However in the shot put Steve Worrell took a third place, as did Monroe Brown in the discus. In the pole vault event, McGowan took a second and Joe Malloy a third. In the high jump it was the same story with Maryville taking a second and a third with the jumping of Dunson and Dean Clark, respectively.

The team of Malloy and Dalton took another second and third in the broad jump. In the triple jump the Scots could manage only a third place spot via the efforts of John Mclaughlin. For the first time in two years Greg Hallen was beaten in the javelin. Hallen did manage a second while Danny Styles took third place.

MC Drops Two

The Scot baseballers lost a pair of games this last week to drop their over-all season record to 5-6. Emory and Henry squeaked by the Scots 5-4 last Friday at Emory. Jack Llewellyn in relief of Bob Nicholas took the loss for Maryville to put his won and loss record for the year at 2-2.

Tuesday in a hotly protested game Carson Newman downed the Scots 11-7 at Maryville. The Scots spotted the Eagles an early 6 run lead as they gave them 4 runs in the first inning and one in the second and third innings. Then Jack Llewellyn, the Maryville starter, settled down and blanked the Eagles until the ninth inning when he was apparently upset by a hotly disputed call by the plate umpire. The umpire later admitted to making a bad call, but he refused to change his decision. A home run by Sonny Hughes, his third of the year, that would have tied the game for the Scots in the eighth inning went to no avail when Sonny missed second base. The Scots bravely tried to come back and actually out hit C-N in the game 10-9 but the effort fell short after the Eagles scored four in the closing inning.

Sig Notes

The Alpha Sigma Society evened the Stinkin' Shoe competition at one and one with a 68-49 basketball victory over Phi. Big guns for the Sig team were Junior Maietta and Rip van Agnew. The undefeated Sledgehammer softball team is tied for first in the intramural league. Phi, as has been done in the past, once again turned down a Sig Challenge to a swim meet. The Spring Formal sponsored by Sig and Theta Epsilon is set for April 30. It will be held in Lloyd basement and the theme will be Paradise Isle. Thetas will be passing out leis at the door. Six of the baseball team's starters are Sigs. The program for underprivileged children, sponsored by Sig and Theta, is going well. The children were treated to a Easter egg hunt at the picnic grounds the Saturday before Easter. President Hugh McCampbell has a new motto: Keep something going all the time. How about another trip to Gatlinburg.

—Lynn St. Clair

FLASH!

In a track meet held on Thursday, April 20 the Maryville team dealt arch-rival Carson Newman a stunning 95-50 loss. Maryville took 14 first-place awards in their march to victory.

Bachus Wins 3rd

The big sticks of the Maryville Scots came alive last Saturday against Mars Hill here at Maryville as the Scots blasted 14 hits for 11 runs. The Scots ace righthander, Jim Bachus, scattered 8 Mars Hill hits and allowed only 2 runs as he posted his third victory of the year.

John Maietta and Bob Nicholas had home runs for the Scots. Nicholas's blast came in the second inning following singles by Jim Staiano and John Agnew, and Maietta clouted his with one man on base in the fourth inning. Maietta, who had a field day against Mars Hill pitching, belted a two run triple in the seventh to top off the Scot attack.

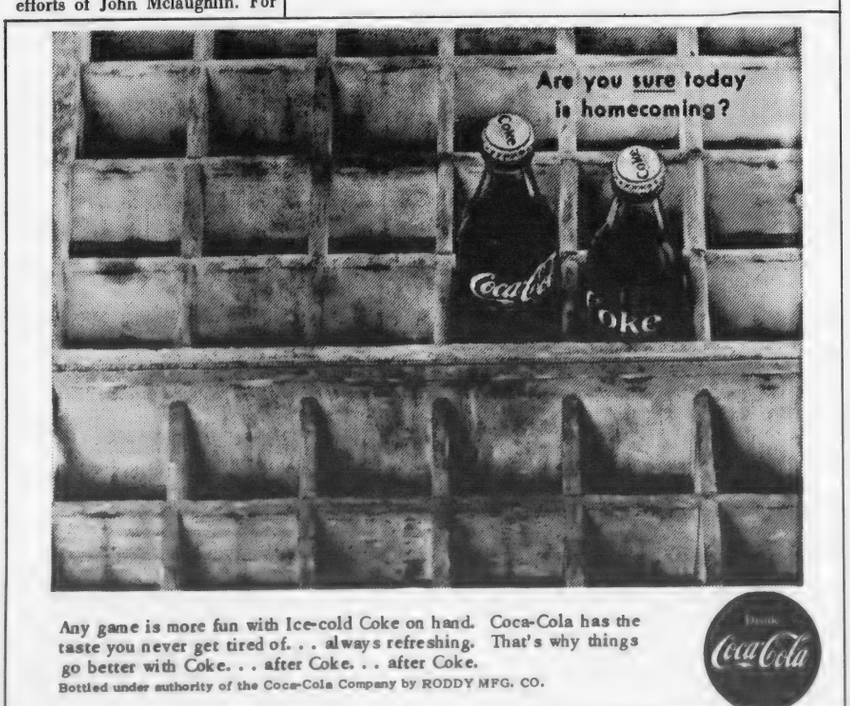
dictators" made an exception in your case, other exceptions could be validated, thereby, in effect, nullifying the rule.



As of this moment you probably want to cut me up with a satirical poem, a biting essay, or a hypothetical toad sticker, but I had to challenge the embryonic wisdom of that grudged-up editorial you wrote. I don't think you did justice to yourself, to Anderson Hall, or to the students in general. Furthermore, this attitude of unrestricted personal freedom does not jibe with reality as I have in effect stated previously. I am not attacking you personally. I am only attacking an attitude which, in my opinion, needs considerable toning down in order to be sane.

Dr. Ferris of Ferozepur to Speak at Vespers

Ferozepur has become a familiar word around Maryville College this year in connection with the Fred Hope Fund. Money raised by the students and faculty this year and in years past has been sent to the Frances Newton Hospital in Ferozepur, India, under the direction of Dr. Dorothy Lee Ferris. This weekend Maryville College will have the chance to find out exactly what achievements have resulted from her aid and support. Dr. Ferris will be the speaker at Vespers tomorrow evening and will be in the Lantern afterward to talk to students who are interested in seeing the-place-where-we-send-money become a reality.

Hospital widely known

Dr. Ferris is a graduate of Maryville College and the University of Cincinnati Medical School. On an extended furlough during the early part of World War II, she completed post-graduate work in New York and served for eight months on the medical staff of the National Missions Hospital at Embudo, New Mexico. Dr. Ferris went to India in 1935 under the appointment of the former Board of Foreign Missions of the Presbyterian Church, U.S.A. and became the director of the hospital the following year. The Frances Newton Hospital cares for more than five thousand inpatients a year and serves an additional ten thousand through the outpatient clinic. A fine staff of Indian colleagues and a widespread reputation has developed under the guidance of Dr. Ferris.

Dangerous periods common

During the war the hospital rendered unusual service in the community and received official recognition for its work. Dr. Ferris was awarded the Kaiser-i-Hind medal for public service in India. In 1947, the hospital was again able to provide outstanding service as it was located in the center of the communal uprisings that followed the partition of India and Pakistan. Only a few months later in October, 1947, when disastrous floods swept the Punjab, the hospital, though seriously damaged, was commended for carrying on uninterrupted service. Dr. Ferris was given extraordinary mention in military dispatches for her faithfulness to duty in the period of danger.

Dr. Ferris honored for achievements

During her years in India, Dr. Ferris has been a member of the executive councils of the Punjab Mission and Synodical Boards, chairman of the Medical Board (of the Synodical Boards), chairman of the governing body of the Women's Christian Medical College at Ludhiana, president for one term of the Ferozepur division of the Indian Medical Society, part-time lecturer for the Dev Samaj Women's College at Ferozepur, and an examiner in surgery and anatomy for the Punjab Government Nurses Registration Council.

Theatre to Present "Androcles and the Lion"

The College and the community are looking forward to the third dramatic production of the College Playhouse's season, "Androcles and the Lion," scheduled to be performed on May 13 and 14, and again on May 31 as the Commencement Play. One of George Bernard Shaw's satires, it is directed by Thomas E. Jones and involves 24 Maryville students.

The plot is based on an ancient fable of a Christian, Androcles, who removes a thorn from a lion's paw. When they meet again as opponents in a Roman arena, the lion refuses to harm Androcles. A greater appeal, however, is found in the satirical aspect of the play, which slashes at the excessive piety and hypocrisy of organized Christianity, in Shaw's finest style. The players use elaborate costumes and a very simple, stylized stage set to focus the production on the action and dialogue.

Andy Ruhlin plays Androcles and Marty Miller the lion, supported by Dale Schellenger as the Emperor, Doug Price as the Captain, Stuart Smith as Lentulus and as Secutor, Louis Newmen as Metellus, Jim Pryor as Ferrovious, Ron Fagan as Spintho, and Bill Remenschneider as the Centurion. Others in the cast are John Weiler as the Editor, Eugene Keeler as the Call Boy, Michael Chomyk as Retiarius, Phil DerPilbosian as the Menagerie Keeper, Joanne Gidley as Megaera, and Diane Caylor as Lavinia. The Christians, a chorus, include Celia Tiffany,

Tau Kappa Chi Honors New Members

On April 21 three musicians were honored with a reception in the Fine Arts Center by Tau Kappa Chi. Those selected for membership were Carole Brownlee, violinist; Barbara Adams, organist; and Cynthia Cowgill, percussionist. Membership for Tau Kappa Chi is based on excellence in performance and consistently high academic achievement. All music students, whether majoring in music or not, are eligible for membership.

Honors Seminar

American Studies: 20th Century Interpretation

Maryville College has received a generous grant from the Lilly Endowment, Inc. of Indianapolis, Indiana, to provide enrichment of the College's curricular program. A portion of the grant will be used in the second semester of the academic year 1966-67 to offer an interdisciplinary honors seminar under the title "American Studies: 20th Century Interpretations." This seminar will involve the departments of Bible, Philosophy, and Religion; Economics; Education; English; History; Political Science; and Sociology, and will be open to a limited number of juniors and seniors of ability and scholarship from these departments. Projects in other areas will be available later under this grant.

Lectures open to public

This course will include lecture and discussion sessions under six eminent scholars in the fields mentioned above. Each scholar will be a visitor on our campus for two periods of several days each during the second semester, 1966-67. It has been necessary to schedule the seminar considerably in advance, in order to secure the services of the scholars invited to participate. Dr. Robert E. Brown, of the History Department of Michigan State University, is serving as consultant for the seminar and has already visited our campus. Dr. Ainsworth, of our faculty, will be coordinator of the seminar. In addition to the seminar the visiting scholars will give lectures open to the College as a whole and to the public.

Eggers to do Oak Ridge Research

Frank M. Eggers II, son of Mr. and Mrs. Frank M. Eggers of Maryville and a junior at Maryville College, has received an appointment for a 10-week research job with the Biology Division of the Oak Ridge National Laboratory in Oak Ridge.

Eggers, a chemistry major at Maryville, will start June 15. The appointment was received from Oak Ridge Associated Universities, and similar appointments are made each summer on a competitive basis to juniors majoring in engineering, mathematics, and the sciences. The students work at the University of Tennessee-Atomic Energy Commission Agricultural Research Laboratory, the Oak Ridge Institute of Nuclear Studies, and the Savannah River Laboratory, as well as at ORNL.

The program is designed to give instruction and training and provide students with a better perception of the factors involved in selecting, planning, and carrying out a research project.

Eggers, an honor student at Maryville, is a three-year letterman on the Maryville football team. He is a graduate of Maryville High School.

Next week's Echo will feature an article regarding the results of Student Body president and vice president elections held on April 29. Officers-to-be Greenawald and Wolfe will be interviewed for information concerning their plans for next year.

Music to be Offered in Summer School

A program of study in applied music will be conducted this summer as part of the College's summer term from June 13 to July 22, Dr. Harry H. Harter, head of the Department of Fine Arts, has announced.

Voice, piano, organ, or the violin may be studied for two three-week periods under members of the College music faculty. Dr. Harter will teach voice, Mrs. Sallie Warth Schoen will teach piano, Dr. James Bloy will teach organ, and Robert C. McKaskell will teach violin. Students may register for either one of the three-week terms or for both terms.

College credit will be given for the six-week course to anyone qualified to enter college or already a college student, Dr. Harter said. Further information may be obtained at the Fine Arts Center.

Corbett and Story Honored for Spanish

Florence Corbett and Don Story, top honor students in Spanish representing Maryville College at the University of Tennessee, were initiated Monday evening into the Alpha Psi Chapter of Sigma Delta Pi, the national honorary.

Dr. Earl Hamilton of Lubbock, Texas, the national president, was present at the initiation and spoke at the honor banquet. Mr. and Mrs. Howard Schwam accompanied the students.

EDITORIAL OUTLOOK

A topic of recent discussion in the student-faculty "talk groups" and with President Copeland has been the Department of Bible and Christian Education. Because the consensus has been that this department is generally deficient, we have wondered why and what could be done to improve it.

It seems that a student from high school expects, whether consciously or not, his college years to be a time of religious testing and indecision. He has been raised, more than likely, in a Protestant-oriented home where religion was a matter of habit and tradition. Suddenly separated from the home environment, he begins to rebel and question the basis for his inherited beliefs. Therefore, he enters Bible courses (such as 101, 102) with battles to wage and questions to ask and problems to be considered.

Instead of a free, academic situation in these courses, the student is often faced with exactly the same kind of material and interpretation which plagued him in previous years. No questions are asked because no answers are volunteered; no battles are waged because there is no one with whom to fight; no problems are considered because the results are predetermined. So, he sits in his Bible class, learns his Sunday School lesson, and parrots back the desired information on tests, quizzes, and the like.

Now then, that is the problem. The solution? (1) Modern theological interpretations must be acknowledged and discussed. (2) Individual teacher viewpoints should be subordinated to a more objective consideration of the material. (3) When needed, time should be given to student disbelief or "rebellion." (4) Tests should not be the same from year to year and should allow for individual interpretations of the subject covered. (5) Bible courses should have more teaching and less preaching.

It must be remembered that there are exceptions to this deficiency in the present department. Unfortunately, they are far too few, and the majority of students remain bored to death in what could well prove to be some of the most exciting courses in the curriculum.

The seminar will usually meet several hours each week, although the particular times will need to be adjusted to the availability of the visiting lecturers. To provide for this variation, Monday evenings from 7 to 10 and Friday afternoons from 3:30 on will be kept free, although it is not likely that both periods will be used in any single week, and other times will probably need to be found in some weeks.

In general it is planned that each of the six visiting scholars will be on campus in two different weeks during the semester. There will be a considerable amount of reading and some writing assigned by each of the six lecturers. Dr. Ainsworth will be responsible for administering these assignments, keeping contact with the participating scholars, and maintaining the continuity of the course.

Each student accepted for this course must be approved by the chairman of his department. Juniors beginning Independent Study in the second semester next year, who are eligible for the American Studies seminar, might in some instances plan their subjects to take advantage of the seminar for the enrichment of their Independent Studies. This would not lessen, of course, the time and effort required for each course.

A Nonsense Parody

by John A. Kerr, Jr.

Once upon a time in the Valley of the Shadow of the World there was an isolated little chicken farm. It was run by a farmer and his wife, and they had a foreman plus several hired hands to assist them. They were all nice cooperative folk — all, that is, except for a few of the hired hands, who were too set in their ways. And it was hard for the farmer and his foreman to deal with these difficult hands because, for the most part, they were the ones with seniority.

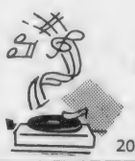
The pride and joy of the operators of this chicken farm were the plump white chickens which they raised. These chickens were managed so meticulously that they had developed a lack of concern beyond belief. When a new batch of chicks arrived they always seemed more independent, more vigorous than the older chickens. But within a few weeks, or at most months, the new chicks acted just like the more experienced ones.

The chicken farm had maintained a strict code of regulations throughout its existence because it operated under the old school's concept of chicken farming, which felt that this was the way to keep the chickens producing the finest eggs. Gradually, however, more and more of the younger chickens began to become vociferous about certain dissatisfactions which they had. Sometimes, surprisingly, a few of the older chickens would half-heartedly agree with them, but always they concluded with the advice that the young chickens just accept their lot and get used to it.

Nevertheless there were a few isolated instances when certain factions of the chickens raised such a ruckus about restrictions, such as limited mobility and no choice as to where they could lay their eggs, that the hired hands had to swing their entire force into action to crush the rash pleas of the chickens.

The situation smoldered like this for years, and then one day a stranger from the World came passing through the Valley. He stopped at the farmhouse to see if he could eat dinner with the farmer and his wife, and while the Mrs. fixed the meal, the farmer took the stranger on a tour of the farm. As the stranger looked around the place, several features struck him as unusual. For one thing, he was impressed with the white uniformity of the chickens; he confessed that he could not tell the difference between the mature and the young chickens. Furthermore, he was shocked by the general ignorance and apathy that the chickens' evidenced; several chickens, for example, stood obliviously by as one of them cheated on his egg-tally record for the week. Perhaps the stranger's most important observation was the extent to which the old hired hands controlled the farm and kept it antiquated in relation to the World.

The stranger and the farmer talked over these problems extensively while they ate. The stranger's urgent warnings that the farm must change or be replaced by more updated poultry co-ops fell on attentive ears. When the stranger had taken his leave, the farmer hurried to convey his excitement to the foreman, who wholeheartedly matched the farmer's enthusiasm for change. How, nevertheless they questioned, shall we impress the old hired hands with the need to change. The idea came to them both at once — "Why, we'll place the responsibility of communication in the hands of the chickens!" they shouted. "After all, they've been clamoring for recognition off and on for years and we've simply repressed their demands; if we give them the green light, their concern and ideas will be the force by which we shall convert this farm into a more effectvie egg producing center."



So the farmer convocated all the chickens one morning and announced the new trend in policy. Most of the chickens, hardened to the traditional way of life at the farm, just perched there and clucked in mocking tones of absurdity. Some of the most radical chickens ran out and purposely singed their tail feathers in a great bonfire of tobacco leaves which it was now legal for them to have. Others quietly began to contemplate the deeper meaning of this announced change in policy. They would stop on their way from the henhouse to the watering pan to discuss the validity of the announcement and its possible results.

It just so happened that two weeks later it came time for the chickens to elect flock leaders for the next year. It boiled down to a race between a rooster who had had experience in dealing with the hired hands in the traditional manner, and a rooster who hadn't had similar experience, but who assured his fellow chickens that he had undergone a miraculous conversion, and now felt called by some mysterious force to do what he could to change the farm into a better place to lay eggs.

The chickens, being by nature excitable creatures, naturally followed the appeal to their emotions and elected the wonder-rooster — to the surprise of only those who didn't fully consider the nature of a chicken.

It has been many years since this revolutionary movement took place, and the small chicken farm in the Valley of the Shadow of the World is still very much in existence. In fact its chickens, who may perch where they want, strut where they want, and even lay where they want, are producing a type of egg which is in the World's greatest demand. I guess it just goes to show that the grade of egg production improves with the amount of freedom in which chickens live. That could be life.

But what of wonder-rooster? Is he to be forgotten with the passage of cruel time? Well, you wouldn't think so if you could see the sixteen and one half times life-sized statue of him in front of the modern henhouse. And what's more, all the freedom-loving chickens pay homage to their "deliverer" by laying two grade-A eggs before his giant replica every day. I know . . . it is an established fact that chickens can lay only one egg a day. Well, from now on don't underestimate the power of a wonder-rooster.

GRAYTOWER

by Jim Gifford

Less than fifty years ago, the followig poem was published in the Maryville College CHILHOWEAN:

ADVICE TO GIRLS

Now, girls don't you see
Cooperation there must be!
Do not stand at the door —
"Goodnight" once, but no more.
At five o'clock boys must go,
Even though you hate it so.
Parlor doors leave ajar,
Lest your character you mar.
Don't complain at the feed—
You get all you really need.
If for mail you wait a week—
Smile, be patient, and be meek!
At the movies don't be seen—
They show wicked things on the screen.
During study hours quiet be—
Miss Marshall wants to sleep, you see.
Be dignified when to town you walk—
The men down there are bound to talk.
To Church and Sabbath School do go—
It helps your reputation so.
Girls, be modest in your dress—
Then the boys will stare much less.
Be respectful; grateful, too—
Remember what is done for you!

Had I never gone to Maryville College, I would never have believed any twentieth century educational institution could have advocated such a social policy—however . . .

A twentieth century education seems to lose some of its meaningfulness if it is acquired in a nineteenth century social atmosphere. Change is not necessarily inevitable; it must be worked for — sometimes fought for. Recently, we have made a slight crack in the anacronistic social policy at this school. Slight cracks can be covered over; let us not be satisfied and complacent.

We care enough about education to spend four years and ten thousand dollars at Maryville College. Should we not then care enough to make Maryville College a place where we enjoy spending our time and money?

Perhaps, a few years hence, students will look at the social system of 1966 and laugh — just as we laugh at the one presented in the poem above; they will laugh and then wonder how in the world young people seeking an education managed to exist and survive in such a dictated and paternalistic atmosphere.

THE CHAIR

by Mouses Housepian

Vahan's inseparable companion at the age of three was his red chair. He used to drag it behind him from place to place. One day while he was taking his friend downstairs, he lost his balance and found himself in front of the outside door of the house with a broken leg and a fractured skull. It took him quite a long time to recuperate, but he still did not forget his favourite-chair.

In his kindergarten classes he used to carry the chair with him from one class to the other. He used to pay much more attention to it than his satchel or anything else. For him the chair was everything.

Years went by, but Vahan grew only physically and eventually had to drop out of school. His father tried all possible means to secure Vahan an education, but all his efforts turned out to be fruitless.

The poor father, who hadn't had the chance of getting a college education himself, had experienced the hardships of life. So he had saved every single penny to give his only child Vahan a college education. But, unfortunately, none of his dreams were materialized and his castles remained built in the air. And now reluctantly and with a broken heart he had to give up the idea of education and apprentice Vahan to a carpenter.

The carpenter was a wolf in sheep's clothing. He had twice been caught red-handed in acts of robbery, but this was kept secret. The police kept it confidential to try to catch the whole gang of his, so he was under close surveillance by the pclice.

The carpenter's shop had become a nest for a bunch of illiterate youngsters who used to meet every day. They were planning to rob a wealthy man who owned a furniture factory on the other side of the street. Now Vahan was twenty years old, and it had been his seventh year in that workshop. He had changed completely. He was treading the footsteps of his master. He was almost one of the members of the gang.

Finally the day came when the robbery was going to take place. They were five: Vahan, his boss, and three other juvenile delinquents.

The time was set for twelve midnight. At twelve o'clock they were in front of the door of the factory. Using a master-key, in a few minutes they were in. They took the things they wanted (besides money), and all of them got out except Vahan. He had noticed at the last moment a beautiful chair which was probably made for a nobleman or the mayor of the town. For a few moments he was puzzled whether to take it. But at last he made a positive decision. So he carried the chair and was on his way out when he suddenly stumbled with it. By accident the night watchman who was passing by, heard a noise and went to the direction where the noise came from. Vahan was still on the ground with that chair; nobody had come to his rescue. His friends had already gone. Vahan was caught red-handed, but being young and strong, he attacked with that heavy chair and left the old watchman dead on the ground. But it was too late— the night police had come.

Vahan was imprisoned and kept for trial. The judges after taking long consideration of the case, were unanimous in their decision. The verdict was guilty. The sentence for first degree murder was the electric chair.

Poor Vahan (even at the end of his life) a chair was his immortal friend and destroyer as well.

Letter Received from Viet Nam Soldier

Today there are close to 300,000 American soldiers in Viet Nam. There are many times that number of young men in America who are eligible for service there—some of these are serving their country by getting an education; some are merely doing their best not to go. The following is an excerpt from a letter received by a student on campus from a volunteer helicopter pilot two weeks before his departure for Saigon. Every American, especially draft-age Americans, should know how these young men feel about their mission—about their cause.

"Our orders for reporting in Viet Nam have been moved up from 1 April to 20 March so our leaves will be cut short by approximately a week. I am really looking forward to going to Viet Nam, although not so eager to go in my designated capacity. But there has been so much said about that little country that I would like to see for myself. No matter how truthful reporters try to be, some things are left out and others added so people can't see the situation as it actually exists. Also the situation is not the same for people who hear and read about it as it is for ones directly involved. It may be because time is getting short for going over there, but I'm not optimistic about coming back or coming back a whole person. I have been blessed many times and in many ways by God and for this reason I have a feeling that my time will come while doing something meaningful. I don't feel that I will die a useless and insignificant death—there have been too many times that I could have died had He wished. I didn't mean to get into this and it's not a very pleasant subject, but it's what I believe. I didn't put this in to try to shock you—I just wanted to get it out of me. This is the most I have written to anyone in a long time."

This soldier would be a junior in college. Would you feel this way?

People Sounds

I sit here alone, hearing people-sounds outside my window.

People sounds—
emotions, laughs.

Why aren't I laughing too?
I can't laugh,
for there is only this emptiness inside me.

An emptiness that becomes so oppressive it periodically swells and ruptures itself into sobs.

People sounds—
people who neither know what they're doing,
nor care why they're doing it.

So they laugh,
they cry,
they despair,
they love,
they die.
In vain?
Perhaps.

Peace Corps Announces 11 Training Courses For College Juniors

May 20 is the deadline to enroll in 11 Peace Corps training courses for college juniors to be held this summer at U. S. universities, the Peace Corps announced in Washington, D. C.

Peace Corps officials advised that students enroll immediately because of the time required to process the applications. "The sooner the better," they said.

The courses — 10 starting in June and the other in July — are designed to enable future Volunteers to integrate Peace Corps training with their senior year of college. Each course runs 10 weeks.

Juniors qualified to enter the Advance Training Program will be prepared for assignments in 14 countries. The assignments cover community and agricultural development, secondary education and teaching English in French-speaking West Africa.

In their final year of college, the trainees' courses of study may be tailored to fit their Peace Corps training. The ATP enrollees will complete their training in special field programs the summer of 1967.

A Peace Corps loan fund for ATP enrollees helps cover the loss of income trainees might have otherwise earned from summer employment. Trainees may borrow up to $600 at low interest rates to pay expenses during their final year in school.

ATP was begun in 1964 as a solution to the increasing difficulty in preparing Volunteers for certain assignments. Some Volunteers, for example, must learn two languages to handle their work effectively. ATP gives the Peace Corps 15 months to prepare the Volunteer instead of the normal three.

Courses to be held this summer:

1) Bolivia Community Development. Studies include community development theory and practice, Spanish, Bolivian national and sub-cultural studies. The training will take place at the University of Notre Dame, South Bend, Indiana, beginning June 19.

2) Colombia Community Development. Studies include community development theory and practice, Spanish, Colombian national and sub-cultural studies. Beginning June 19 at Antioch College, Yellow Springs, Ohio.

3) Peru Community Development. Studies include community development theory and practice, Spanish, Peruvian national and sub-cultural studies. Beginning June 26 at the University of California, Berkeley.

4) Brazil Community Development. Studies include community development theory and practice, Portuguese, Brazilian national and sub-cultural studies. Beginning June 19 at Sacramento State College.

5) Teaching English in French-Speaking Africa: Gabon, Togo, Ivory Coast, Cameroon and Senegal. Studies will include West African national and community development, French and African languages, African classroom and curriculum. Beginning July 5 at Dartmouth College.

6) Kenya Agricultural Development. Studies will include Kenyan national and village studies, Swahili, topical agricultural development, with practice in midwestern Indian reservations. Beginning June 20 at the University of Wisconsin at Milwaukee.

7) India Rural Community Development (Poultry and Health). Studies include Indian national and rural community studies, language, community development theory and skills, with participation in projects on midwestern Indian reservations. Beginning on June 19 at the University of Wisconsin, Milwaukee.

8) Thailand Rural Community Development. Studies include community development theory and skills, Thai language, national and rural community studies, participation in Missouri community development projects. Beginning on June 19 at the University of Missouri at Columbia.

9) Philippines Secondary Education. Studies include Philippine national and community studies, a Philippine language, classroom and curriculum, with practice teaching in the St. John's area. The training will combine teaching and community action experiences with the St. John's College seminar approach to learning. Readings will concentrate in American and Far Eastern classics. Beginning on June 25 at St. John's College, Maryland, adjacent to Annapolis.

10) Turkey Community Development. Studies include language, community development practice and theory, national and rural community studies and participation in community projects. Beginning on June 26 at the University of Kentucky at Lexington.

11) Thailand Secondary Education. Studies include Thai language, national and sub-cultural studies, classroom and curricu- studies, classroo mand curriculum, with practice teaching in slum schools. Beginning June 24 at Northern Illinois University at DeKalb.

Poetry

D.R.P.

The day the dogs danced wild and high
I was blanch and sorry mean and sullen in a crib of dead grass dry and dry.

The night the owls boiled apples in the bay
Was pale to me and lonely long and sour from sitting still instead of running free.

The new moon day and night the maggots sang
Their whimsey in the green-benched park
I wished for a crochet pink and now.

O.K. so skip the maggot song I missed for being bitter.
Just let me know next time when the poppies rough and tumble on the mead.

We were the grape-eyed, bee-bite friends,
The rush and ruckus honeybear boys of catch me-
Far beyond the glance of here it comes and soon.

Shaggy heads of hedge we were, and sand and sugar pie,
Wool and oats we never played in fountains
(Thank You, God) or wanted to.

But soap and carved we melted in the rain,
Puddle boys to mirror all the low spots.
Fish filled ponds, yes, and ooze to boot, and ooze.

Shoemaker slow in the sun we grew and sandal brown,
Lazy warm and bony, leopard spotty-
A patch of thistle brown and bony, frosted in the sun.
Pine cone cake to eat and hurry up.

Spider water flashs heaped round with heat.
Sweat on the flashs and cool to wash the lumps, to swallow down the lumps.

Long in the favor of gods and skies
We heard all that the white moon said that the white moon said
We crouching, flop and plenty-eared friends of silent talkers
–the moon and silent talkers.

Conductus tatuus.

I have outlasted the long distance runner and the saints.
I have rethought the speeches of statesmen and God.
I have watched death and participated in hating death,
in loving life,
in peeling sour grapefruit days,
in finding silver dimes in gutters.
I have spent my soul on licorice whips—spent my body in ravishing mountains, smothering seas,
eating the offal of tramps and snakes.
I spat on Christ.

Now that is done — the act is no longer mystery.
I shall not play shaft to the lynx and viscous whoring, hollow succubus grave that sucks life flat and never smiles.
For God's sake, listen.

Even fools cannot gratify the hollow banshee that eats man.

Track Team Should Be Best Ever

This year could be the best ever for the Scot thinclads. The running events will be this strongest part for the track team.

The dashes will be well taken care of by Dick Craig, Mike Dalton. Joe Malloy and freshman Al Cropper. The middle distances are taken care of by Dick Craig in 440 and Rich Reed, Hugh McCampbell and Brian Childs in the 880. The half-mile should be another Scot strong point with Reed and McCampbell both capable of 2 minute times. The long distances of a mile and 2 mile are taken care of by Bob Cooper, Brian Childs and Bill Evaul.

The hurdlers are headed by senior letterman Terry Amon who runs the highs. Bob Leach is the Maryville entry in the 440 intermediate hurdles. This is a new race for the Scots since we have just become an active member of the N.C.A.A.

The field events include two categories: jumping and weight. the jumping events. Dean Clark and Les Dunson will be high jumping around 6 ft. Joe Malloy and Denny McGowan will continue to go even higher than last year's 11'3" in the pole vault. While they're concentrating on going up the Scot broadjumpers will be going out farther than usual this year. Joe Malloy and Mike Dalton take care of their department. Another new event is added this year — the triple jump and it is done by McLaughlin. With the weights, Greg Hallen, Ray Eaton, and Danny Styles will be taking their turns in throwing the javelin. The shot put is done by Pat O'Brien while Cole Piper is doubling as a discus thrower and a sprinter in the 440 yd. dash.

Two of the most important events of the track meet are the relays. Last year's 440 yard relay team went undefeated. It looks like another year of the same, with Dick Craig, Bob Leach, Joe Malloy and Al Cropper running. The mile-relay team is composed of Bob Leach, Dick Craig, Cole Piper and Rich Reed. The reason that the relays are so important is that the winner gets 5 points and the loser none.

This year's trackteam hopes to make it a very successful season. To do this they need your support. So get behind the spring sports and cheer your favorites on to victory.

Scots Rout C-N

The Scot tracksters broke a four-meet losing streak by overwhelming arch-rival Carson Newman by a score of 95 to 50. The Maryville boys absconded with 14 of 17 first places and a considerable amount of second and third place finishes.

Field-men improve

The weight men showed the most improvement and really provided the impetus for the rout. The Scots fared especially well this turn, bringing home 5 1st places in the field events (which might be a record). Pat O'Bryan took first in the shot with a winning toss of 36'¼", his best this year, and Steve Worrell came up to take second place. A first and second were also taken in the discus by Brown and Piper respectively. Brown's winning throw was a respectable 123' 2", also his best effort of the year. Jumping a height of 11' 6", Denny McGowan took first place in the pole vault. Malloy followed up to take third place.

Dean Clark, boasting his best jump of the season, dove into first place with a high jump of 5' 10". In the broad jump the Scots did not fare as well, but Mike Dalton did salvage a third place. In the javelin, Greg Hallen garnered first place with a throw of 158' 11". Ray Eaton took third place. Finally, in the triple jump, Dalton gave the Scots a second.

Scots Take Track Events

Maryville completely outclassed the Eagles in all of the running events, capturing 9 out of 10 first places. The 440 relay squad composed of Leach, Dalton, Craig, and Cropper turned in a fine winning time of :45.1. In the mile run, Cooper ran an amazing 4:27.6, the best mile time Maryville has seen in many years. Hugh McCampbell placed third. Dick Craig ran for first place in the 440 yard dash (:52.1) and Cole Piper finished third. Dalton churned up the cinders for a :10.5 100 yard dash, and Terry Amon ran a flight of 120 high hurdles for second place. In the 880 yard dash, it was Rich Reed and McCampbell placing one and two (2:04.0). Craig stole another first in the 220 (:23.5) and Dalton a second.

This was the day for good times as Bob Leach found out in the 440 yard intermediate hurdle race. He ran his best for his career with a :57.8. Amon placed 3rd. Cooper ran away with the 2 mile in good time (10:07.7) and Bill Evaul placed third with a good effort. The mile relay team closed out the day in grand style, winning this event by almost 75 yards (Leach, Piper, Reed, Craig — 3:32.5).

Greg Hallen

Scots watch Bob Cooper as he leads the Maryville milers at Emory.

Cumberland and Sewanee Outpoint Maryville

The thinclads of Sewanee overpowered the Scotties in track by a score of 86 to 59. Again Maryville was weak in the weight events, scoring in only six out of a possible 21 places.

Monroe Brown managed a good toss in the discus for a first place as did the winning Greg Hallen in the javelin. Clark and Dunson scored in usual fashion in the high jump, taking second and third, respectively. It was Mike Dalton taking a third in the broad jump for Maryville as John McLaughlin did in the triple jump.

Runners score well

The Scots were more successful in the running department, gathering 5 of 10 first places. Cooper was first in the mile with Hugh McCampbell coming from behind for a second place. Dick Craig won the 440 in fine style and Dalton and Cropper placed second and third in the 100 yard dash (in that order). Terry Amon was fast enough for a second in the 120 high hurdles as was Rich Reed in the 880 yard dash. Craig scored once more in the 220 dash with a 3rd and running-mates Leach and Amon placed first and third respectively in the 440 yard intermediate hurdles. Once again in the 2-mile, Bob "the phenom" Cooper took an easy first, with Bill Evaul capturing a second. Maryville's mile relay team (Leach, Piper, Reed, and Craig) finished the day on the right foot, taking a first and five points in this last event of the day.

Oh, well . . .

On a scorching hot, gusty day Maryville College ran against a strong team of Cumberland Indians and were soundly defeated. Some attribute the loss to the poor gravel track, others to fatigue. The scores are not really that important, as many of the Scot team members will attest, "it is how the game was played." For a more encouraging account, please refer to the track article on this page concerning the Scots vs. the C-N Eagles.

College Receives Alcoa Grant

Maryville College has been selected again this year to receive a grant from the Alcoa Foundation under the foundation's continuing program of aid to independent colleges. This year's grant to the college is $1,500, which is unrestricted and may be used by the college for general maintenance and operation.

The $1,500 award and the funds the college receives from the Affiliated Independent Colleges program are both in addition to the recently announced final payment of $20,000 of a $100,000 grant by the Foundation to the college. The $100,000 grant will be used by Maryville College for a new science building which is now being designed.

Netters Lead Spring Sports

The Scot netmen, 8-1 entered the Tennessee Intercollegiate Athletic Conference Tournament at Middle Tennessee State University in Murfreesboro. Alan Marshall, number five singles player, turned the best performance as he gained the semifinals of his division. This week the netters travelled to Georgia and North Carolina to play four matches before returning to play Emory and Henry on the home courts.

The team's victories include wins over L.M.U. twice (7-2, 9-0), Berry (9-0), Mars Hill (6-1), Western Carolina (4-3), Grand Rapids, Mich. (7-0), Asheville-Biltmore (6-0), and Milligan (6-3). The Scots' lone defeat came at the hands of Tenn. Wesleyan (8-1). The team includes Lynn Howard, Rich Marshall, Pete Park, Cotton Lambert, Alan Marshall, and Bill Gass. Becky Sankner, tennis whiz from Florida, holds the number seven position. However, Becky has participated in two matches and the Dogwood Arts Tournament in Knoxville where she advanced to the semifinal round.

Pairing in the doubles competition for the Scots are Howard-R. Marshall, Park-A. Marshall, and Lambert-Gass. In match play this season, Park and Lambert sport the top singles records, while the team of Lambert-Gass is undefeated in doubles action.

Coach Kardatzke says that this year's team is probably the strongest since he has been at Maryville. This has proven true so far this year, however, the netters still have six matches remaining including a return match with Tenn Wesleyan and one against a strong Carson-Newman squad.

Leading the squad is Senior Lynn Howard, Maryville High School graduate and three-year letterman for the Scots. Howard's powerful serve and strong forehand, plus good range on the court, should keep him in the major tennis action this spring.

Another Senior, Bill Gass, also a Maryville High graduate, lettered last year for the Scots, and is called a "strong, down-the-line player" by Coach Kardatzke. Gass is a hard worker whose powerful ground strokes have kept him in the forefront in the scheduled matches.

Sophomore Pete Park, another Maryvillian, is a challenge to Howard for the number one spot on the squad. Park's hard serve and steady game have kept him in action.

Scottie freshman Richard Lambert's good serve and forehand shots made him one of the runners-up last year in the state high school doubles championship.

Two Marshall brothers from Wilmington, Del., Richard and Alan, are standouts for the Scots. Richard, Captain of the team and a three-year letterman in tennis is in competition with Howard and Park for the top spot. He is being counted on for a strong serve and good forehand. Alan, who played in the number two position in the Delaware high school championship team last year, also has an outstanding serve and plays a good ground game.

Rebecca Sankner from St. Petersburg, Fla., is the distaff side of the Scot netman this year. A sophomore who transferred to Maryville, she will rank fourth, fifth, or sixth on the squad, according to Coach Kardatzke. A powerful serve is a major factor in her winning game.

So, you see, my dentist wasn't kidding when he said our group had 43 percent fewer cavities.

On a decaying dungeon: "Mystery! That was the charm. That speechless tongue, those prisoned features, that heart so freighted with unspoken troubles, and that breast so oppressed with its piteous secret; had been here. These dark walls had known the man whose dolorous story is a sealed book forever! There was fascination in the spot.

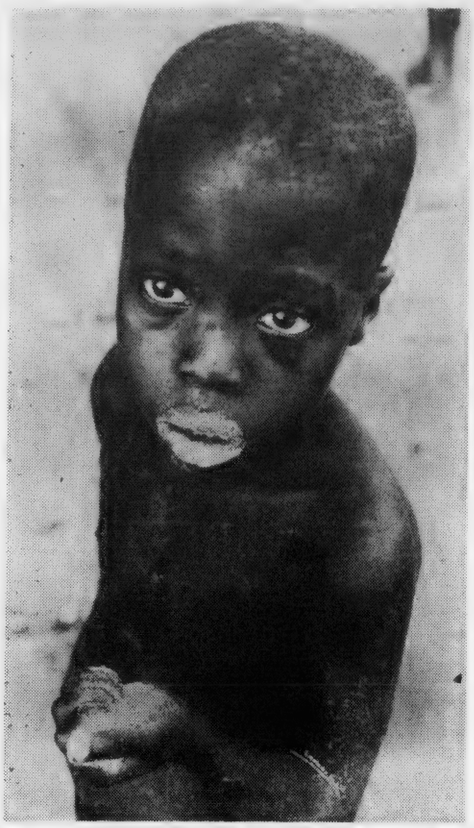
Worcester Sponsors $1500 Voice Contest

An unusual opportunity for an aspiring young voice student to win $1500 as well as major performing opportunities has been announced by the Worcester (Mass.) Music Festival in its second annual Competition for the Young Artist.



The winner, to be selected after four regional audition eliminations open to students and alumni of schools of music in 131 schools of music — and a final competition in Worcester — will be a guest artist at America's oldest Music Festival — preparing its 107th edition in October, 1966. The victorious young artist will sing here with the Detroit Symphony, official Festival orchestra, conducted by Sixten Ehrling.

Competitions chairman, Harry M. Corbett, Worcester, said that regional eliminations will be held on WEDNESDAY, MAY 11, at the University of Kentucky, Lexington, Kentucky. Winners of this competition will be guests of the Worcester Festival in Worcester, Mass., in late September for a final elimination, he said.

Applicants must be under 29 years of age on October 1, 1966, enrolled or have been graduated from one of the participating institutions, and recommended by either a vocal coach or by the dean of the school.

At regional auditions contestants will sing arias from Italian, German, French or English operas; Bach or Mozart arias, and songs or lieder in German, Italian, English, French, Russian or Contemporary American. Each applicant must already be competent in at least four languages.

Forward, Etc.

by Doug Gamble

7:45 Hu called the meeting to Order, he hoped.

7:45 Craig prayed. Council ignored Ed and John, its new leaders. They cried, with grief, more incoherently as things retrogressed.

Committees:

ELECTIONS is working on elections.

PROGRAMS is working on programs.

SOCIAL—Dance, in the Chapel Collonade, after the play Saturday—about 10. No beer, please.

College All-Sing Friday at 6:30 on the Chapel steps. No beer, please.

Be thinking about the additions and|or subtractions needed in the social structure next year. Remember the 2-nite weekend. There will be a questionnaire, on this and on preferred popular programs, before school is out. We want to try to do what you want us to try to do.

And where does SOCIAL get all its money?

OTHER STUFF:

Janie reported on her orgy at Jacksonville—she says she went to the SUSGA convention . . . and she came back with some proof. Council can use this SUSGA tie to considerable advantage. It's about this hypnotist—.

THE GREAT FARCE:

Council, disregarding any pretense of order, etc., launched into a verbal bit of consideration of the much mentioned Rat Week-a-la-Beanie-Program for the incoming plebes—oops—Frosh. After an unbelievable tirade of shouts, motions, seconds, thirds, wait-a-minutes, and curses, we finally voted, 18 to 3, to recommend some sort of a specifically Freshman emblem to unify the poor souls into a float-building machine which recognizes itself. It was 12 to 7 for the Beanie.

So, now to Student-Faculty Senate and on to unity, etc.

If Louise were a girl . . . 8:59 Everybody broke for the door.

Ed swore that Robert's Rules for Order will be used next year. Very good idea.

Rudolph to Speak on Gandhi

Dr. Susanne Hoeber Rudolph, Associate Professor of Political Science and Social Sciences from the University of Chicago, will speak at Maryville College May 19 at 8:15 p.m. in the Music Hall of the Fine Arts Center. Her topic will be "Relentlessness and Intimacy: Aspects of Ghandi's Leadership."

Dr. Rudolph's visit to Maryville College is under the auspices of the College Epsilon Chapter of Pi Gamma Mu, national social science honor society.

She has been one of the consultants in a series of Asian Studies seminars held at the University of Chattanooga in which Maryville faculty members have taken part for the past three years. A Fullbright research scholar in India in 1962-1963, she holds the doctorate from Harvard University.

Choir to Present "King David"

Sunday evening, May 22, at 7:30 in the chapel, the Maryville College Choir will present a special musical vespers. Dr. Harry Harter will conduct the choir and instrumental ensemble in producing "King David," a dynamic and exciting oratorio by the twentieth century composer Arthur Honegger. Honegger, a member of the French group of composers who called themselves "Les Six", studied at the Zurich and Paris conservatories of music, and was tutored by Vidor and D'Indy.

In "King David," Honegger has combined with breath-taking success the contrasting styles of the archaic rhythms of Juda and the contrapuntal richness of J. S. Bach.

Soloists for the presentation are: sopranos-Sarah Tompkins and Ibbie Ann Jack; contralto-Mary M. Rucker; and tenor-James Breckenridge.

Concert Band Tours Atlanta Area

The 71-member Maryville College Highlander Band, under the direction of John A. Roberts, made a concert tour in the Atlanta, Ga., area May 11 and 12. The itinerary included television appearances, a pre-game show for the Atlanta Braves game Wednesday night, and high school concerts.

The concert tour, by chartered bus, took the band first to the Sprayberry High School at Marietta, Ga., where they played a concert at 11 a.m. The band then went go to the baseball stadium to play a 10-minute show before the game and to play the Star Spangled Banner at the opening of the game.

On Thursday, May 12, the band was featured on the "Today in Georgia" show broadcast by WSB-TV in Atlanta. The show, at 9 a.m., was broadcast live and in color. At 10:30 a concert was scheduled at the West Fulton High School, followed by a 2 p.m. concert at Lovett High School and an 8 p.m. concert at Reinhardt College in Waleska, Ga.

Debate Team Offers Opportunities

by Sherry Proffitt

If you like travel, excitement, eating out, staying in nice (?) motels, meeting exciting people, and intellectual challenge, answer this call for help! There are certain qualifications which you may think that you must possess to answer which you really do not have to have at all: you do not have to have a 4.0; you do not have to be able to speak proficiently right now; you do not have to be rich (i.e. you do not have to finance your own trips); and you do not have to be a windbag. To put it simply, the debate team needs new members next year and we are inviting you to talk to Dr. Walker (who really is a lot of fun, if you like that sort of thing) or any of the members of the debate team and find out what a debate team really is in spite of its image. It is challenging and rewarding, else I would not have stuck with it for four years. Moby likes it even — he says he wishes he had started as a freshman! But the problem is that Moby is leaving, along with two other seniors, and we need other students to fill the ranks. If the first sentence of this "plea" appeals to you, at least inquire about the possibilities of joining. Are we puttin' you on?

Greenawald Interviewed

As promised, the ECHO had an interview with next year's student body president, Ed Greenawald.

Q: Ed, is there anything in particular that you hope to change in next year's student council?

A: Yes, but when I say "change" I do not mean to change it from anything that it has not been before. Student council can be a strong body which voices student opinion and I want to be a leader of a group that will hear this opinion and take the initiative to present it to the administration.

Q: What else is important for a strong student council?

A: More than some students realize, it is the whole student body. Some students don't realize their own worth. Many of them have great ideas, but have not voiced these ideas either to the discussion groups or to anyone else that can funnel them into any sort of action. Interest is high among most of the students and I hope that it will be even more so next year.

Q: Have you any other plans for next year's program?

A: Yes, as I mentioned in my platform, I plan to establish the following:

1. an academic committee to keep in close touch with the faculty consultative committee.
2. a rules committee where rules will be kept track of and efforts coordinated in making necessary proposals.
3. a program committee to insure more and better popular programs (such as "The Womenfolk" this year).
4. an organizations committee to work on possible expansion and improvement of the society program.
5. better UCCF-Student Council relationships (e.g. a UCCF member at every Student Council meeting and vice versa.) The efficiency of these committees will depend on the appointment of responsible heads to each.

I do not think it unreasonable to look for definite changes in the areas of curriculum, smoking, women's rules (e.g. freshmen to senior lessening of personal restrictions), cut system, and cars.

Editorially Speaking

This Week's Editor Is Jerry Weeks

Someone has said that once you break the ice, the water flows freely. Well, last week the Board of Directors made the crack a little wider and caused the trickle to add more momentum. When you seniors were freshmen, who would have thought to really see a five-day week? This year's freshmen certainly would not have imagined it. Or how about the future of chapel actually being discussed seriously? After a year—or has it been years—of sounding complaints, requests and suggestions, we have seen the administration, faculty, and now the Directors, do something about them.

Are these new policy measures merely pacifiers to appease the restless natives? Some think so. But this is no time to doubt the administration's sincerety. Doubts and mistrust have prevailed too long already. But by no means are we students to sneak back into our dens and occasionally peek out and bark like gophers.

Apparently the administration and faculty have realized that Maryville College must change—and rapidly—if it is to continue to offer quality education. But neither administration nor faculty can create an academic environment if changes do not come from the students—and rapidly. A few exceptional students who can state their complaints with justification cannot make an environment academic—many more must join their ranks. We have heard a lot during the last few weeks about making Maryville College the kind of school it should be. Regardless how trite it might be, Maryville will become that kind of school when its students, as well as its administration and faculty, open their eyes to the world about them and want to learn.

WE DANCED 'TIL A QUARTER OF THREE or

"Dr. Jackson, if you're wondering why this linguistics paper is late . . ."

"Gee, I was at the President's house — and I didn't even do anything wrong — except drop a piece of fried chicken on the floor, but I picked it up quick and nobody noticed."

But most people managed not to drop their chicken or drip their steak gravy as the Copeland's entertained the Seniors last Monday evening at Morningside. The good food and friendly hospitality caused many to remark, "I guess it's worth being a Senior after all."

The sudden afternoon chill caused plans to be hurriedly changed as everything was shifted for an indoor dinner instead of the terrace dinner originally planned. Outdoors only the colored Japanese lanterns swaying in the breeze kept a silent vigil as indoors the guests jumped with various kinds of dancing to the music of the Maryville College Dance Band.

It was hard to tell who was having the best time. Karen Copeland downed four pieces of pie before the dinner even began, and as we left, Dr. Campbell was still bringing extra helpings of potato salad to Carole Brownlee. Then there was Paul Millin who looked pretty embarrassed after he stepped on Sandy Brigg's toe for the sixth time, which wouldn't have been so bad except that President Copeland didn't step on Mrs. Copeland's toe even once, and the two of them were still frugging long after everyone else was exhausted.

Anything Goes

or How Brownlee gets away with cutoffs and sweatshirts.

by Jeanne Sherer

Recently I entertained a guest from another college who was amazed by our casualness of dress at Maryville. The fact that he goes to a college for men only is indicative of his strictness of attitude, but his comments started me thinking about "fashions" on the campus here. Coat and tie is the norm in dress at his school and he found it appalling that some of our men should wear jeans and sweatshirts to class. The dress of the women students he found to be neat but perhaps more informal than he expected. (Perhaps he caught sight of some of us in cut-offs under raincoats!)

After looking around to take more interest in what we actually do wear, I have found that we are in fact quite casual and take a "anything-goes" attitude. We do not stare when someone wears a coat and tie to class any more than heels and suit. We seem to dress to fit our mood.

Students of both sexes exhibit quite a bit of good taste most of the time wearing clothes that could be found in any current fashion magazine. And yet we do not look like models who dress for the sake of conformity. Our mood on campus is not orientated toward wearing apparrel but on the person inside the outfit, and I think this is wonderful.

Versatility seems to be the rule of fashion here; the individual is allowed to be an individual. Our "fashionable" students do not seem to take the dictates from "Vogue" or any other fashion magazine as the ultimate rule unless their particular tastes, personalities, and figure sanction such dress. Therefore I say Bravo! for our intelligent, individual perspective of current fashion.

In the course of enjoying and enduring the perils of the years spent at this college, we all as required sit in chapel and have for the most part, abstractions spoken at us. The messages are generally the same, varied only by the speaker, his approach. And five days a week too many of us walk away, gaining solely in the sense that the chapel cut not used today is saved for a tomorrow.

So here I am, another speaker, with by my own admission, an idea heard before . . . As in the case of the aforementioned abstractions, it is your prerogative to take or leave the words that I speak, the tootsie-roll-pop you've found in your seat. It is your decision alone to exit emptyhanded, emptyheaded, but still able to say "I get nothing out of chapel."

The message that goes along with the candy is simple. The lollipop is your invitation to be a child—to abandon, at least temporarily, whatever stands behind those constantly repeated words: responsibility, maturity, productivity, etc. — to be as is a kid: imaginative, uninhibited, affectionate; — to have a sense of wonder . . .

You can if you will just stop sometime during the day or week while running along the superhighway of Life. Stop and imagine that your eyes had just opened and see things you never before noticed. Don glasses with lenses of curiosity.

Hear and feel the wind instead of only defining it.

Go fly a kite—pretend it's a troublesome friend with whom you must fight and play tug-of-war so that he may catch himself in the wind of Good Fortune at the right moment, or fall if you let go.

Rather than looking at your own nose, turn your eyes upward and see what kinds of clouds there are even if you don't know the scientific names.

Ponder the immensity of the sun, the contrasting smallness of self.

Look downward and see natural life, and remember that you are a part of this.

Wade through the waist-high grass.

Swing from a low-hanging tree limb.

Spray Sprite on your window to give the effect of raindrops while the sun is shining.

And if it does rain, go out—why be afraid of water in this form?

See how green the grass and leaves are in the sunlight when the rain stops—maybe there will be a rainbow.

Run without reason or direction—and if you feel you must explain yourself, say that a pink elephant is chasing you.

Look for a form, an animal, a face in the grain of a wooden door or the cracks in the ceilings and walls.

Dream of your very own island . . .

Know the warmth of sunshine.

Search for a four-leafed clover, an oddity that can give you hope.

Realize the intangible, invaluable wealth of friendship, the joy of unsought giving, and that people who need people are the luckiest people in the world . . .

Eat a lollipop—functionally speaking it's a portable breakfast.

Think of seventy years as a long time and omigod I don't want to get old and be another grey-haired wretch—but that age is merely a state of mind and you can be a kid forever.

Believe that I am out of my tree—but I don't care 'cause my world's better than your world.

Just stop, if only for a moment.

May we pray:

Each to our own god

May we appreciate being, and as beings appreciate. Amen.

Africa!

Last week Jack Noel and Carol Pusey received their assignments for work in Africa this summer. Jack will be working in Liberia, a West African country south of Sierre Leone. Liberia is famous for its rubber production and for its six months of heavy rainfall annually. Most of the Liberians speak French, so the Crossroaders have to communicate in this language.

Carol will help to build a youth center in a rural village in Uganda. Uganda is located in East Africa on the northeast corner of Lake Victoria. It is a beautiful country, famous for the Mountains of the Moon and the Queen Elizabeth National Park. Although Uganda is on the equator, it has a mild climate with temperatures ranging from 60 to 85 degrees. Heat and high humidity are prevalent in the jungle areas.

The Crossroaders will meet for orientation in New Brunswick, New Jersey on June 20.

Librarian Convention Held

Miss Virginia Turrentine Maryville College Librarian; and Mrs. Alice Crippen, Assistant Circulation and Reference Librarian, have just returned from the Tennessee Library Association's Annual Convention in Chattanooga.

Speakers at the meeting included Harry Golden, author and publisher of The Carolina Israelite; and Dr. Lawrence Clark Powell, Dean of the School of Library Service of the University of California in Los Angeles.

In Favor of the Socialist State

by Bob Hart

In America the history of the Socialist party has not been one of continuing success, at least on the surface. The Socialist party and its doctrines coming from Europe to America in the last century received a bad name and a poor reputation. In consequence, as socialism has begun to replace capitalism around the world, Americans have found it expedient to incorporate socialist principles into their conventional parties. In this way our country too has made progress towards the eventual socialization of the American democracy.

Despite the advances of the last few decades, the American public has been extremely reluctant, especially among some groups, to admit to the reality and the necessity of socialism in the United States. Even more the public has been reluctant to relinquish the deep seated capitalistic ethic. It is time the public gave up many of its misconceived prejudices concerning socialism and realized its value in furthering the advancement of humanity and the American democracy. The socialist state in the United States is still in the future, but it is a future to be hoped for and looked for. not to be feared.

Erich Fromm has said in The Art of Loving, "The principle underlying capitalistic society and the principle of love are incompatible." In this statement Fromm is speaking in an abstract sense. He does not mean that one cannot practice love in today's society. What Fromm is saying is that the capitalistic system with its brand of individualism and fairness ethics is not conducive to genuine love and responsibility, values much needed in our present crowded and confused age. The worth of the socialist state is to release men from a system of competition and selfishness to be able to practice more rewarding and fulfilling ethical values. In truth the capitalistic system is restrictive on the total personality in the context of one's community. The socialist state can in part release more people to find responsibility in a world which demands responsibility and interdependence.

Many faults have been found in socialist state for both political and economic reasons. Across the world from Russia to Great Britain, time is proving these practical problems can be and will be solved. Democracy can live with socialism, as can Christianity. Human rights are not violated by democratic collectivism but rather enhanced. The problem of motivation in work remains a question, but with the gradual emergence of a new ethic, an ethic in line with the collective and interdependant principles of socialism, a new source of motivation is replacing and will replace the old principles of fairness and individualism. Although the traits of selfishness and distinterest will always plague mankind, the state can work out the right balance of collective effort and new freedom under socialism.

The socialist state is a reality now in some countries. It will soon become a reality in the United States. We have an advantage, however, in that America is approaching this new order gradually. We are not carrying any of the old labels and hatreds as have accompanied the socialist movement in Europe, and we are not torn by vicious class struggles. With these advantages there is every reason to believe the new America will throw off the shackles of the outdated capitalistic system and be launched into a new era with a greater degree of interresponsibility and freedom.

This week's agenda has two important events taking place. Last Monday ten girls who had earned 400 or more points in the intramural program went through informal initiation. Orange "M's," whistles and "lowly neophytes" were the order of the day, and now tomorrow the neophytes will be formally initiated into "M" Club while on a swim retreat at Loudon Lake. Congratulations and best wishes to the newly initiated girls: Noreen Bouis, Sue Fershee, Judy Johns, Phyllis MacIntosh, Mary Paddison, Linda Reifenkugel, Mary Lee Roseborough, Becky Sankner, Betty Vincent and Maren Wright.

Second on this week's agenda is an awards breakfast which will be held at 7:00 A.M. Monday morning in the rear section of the dining room. Any girl who has participated in intramurals during the past year is invited to come and join with us.

Netters Winningest Yet

The Scot tennis team has just completed the most successful week of tennis in recent history. Taking the road last Tuesday, the netmen trounced North Georgia 8-1, before marching through three North Carolina opponents. Asheville-Biltmore was bombed 9-0, Western Carolina turned under by 6-3, and Mars Hill humiliated on their home court 8-1. Upon returning home, the netters chalked up their eleventh consecutive victory at the expense of Emory and Henry 7-1; thus pushing their over-all record to 13 wins against a single defeat.

Pete Park, Cotton Lambert, and Alan Marshall led the Scots to these five victories as they won all of their respective singles matches. However, the "old pros" on the squad, seniors Lynn Howard, Rich Marshall, and Bill Gass each provided their share of victories. Howard and Marshall's best matches were against Emory and Henry, while Gass shone against Western Carolina. In doubles competition, the netmen won all but one match the whole week.

Tuesday the Scots travelled to Carson-Newman seeking number fourteen. East Tennessee State and North Georgia invaded the home courts Thursday and Friday to try to stop the Scots.

THINCLADS TAKE SECOND IN TWO THREE-WAY MEETS

On Apirl 22 the Scot tracksters ventured to Nashville to participate in a three-way meet sponsored by David Lipscomb. Fisk University was the third team involved in the meet. At the end of the meet the scorebook showed the host school collecting 82 points, Maryville a close second with 63 points, and Fisk taking third place, tallying 35 points.

The story for Maryville was a preponderance of second and third places. Greg Hallen and Bob Leech were the only Scots to manage first places for the struggling Scots. Had it been for two or three more 1st places, Maryville would surely have had the meet rapped up.

Leach Shines

As it was — in the 100, Dalton was second and Cropper was third. In the 220, Cropper could garner only second. The 440 yard dash saw Dick Craig of Maryville in fourth place and the 880 had Reed in 2nd and McCampbell in fourth. Bob Cooper also settled for second place in both the mile and the 2 mile, losing two very close races. Gathering more points for the Scots in these races were McCampbell (4th in the mile) and Evaul (3rd in the 2 mile). Maryville's one bright spot in the running events was Bob Leech who turned in a fine time (44.6) in the 330 intermediate hurdle event. In both the 440 and mile relays, events in which the Scots usually take first, David Lipscomb proved just a little faster and Maryville had to settle for second in both.

Field men Falter

The field events proved to be just as disappointing as the running for Maryville. In the shot put event, O'Brian and Worrell were third and fourth respectively. Brown and Piper were the scorers in the discus, but again could only manage second and third place. Maryville was swept in all three jumping events by Theron Cobbs of Fisk, the only triple winner of the meet. In the high jump Maryville scored third (Clark) and fourth (Dunsan) Malloy was third in the broad jump for the Scots as was Dalton in the triple jump. Malloy again scored in the pole vault jumping for second place, and McGowan was third. Greg Hallen was once more victorious in the javelin as he threw the spear 170-1 for five points. Styles and Eaton added depth to the scoring in this event by taking third and fourth places.

MAYFIELD'S
Ice Cream and Milk

Smoother, Richer, better Tasting

Mayfield's Dairy, Athens, Tenn.

Gee I never would have thought these boys missed their mothers this much . . . Cleopatra was taking a bath in milk—homogenized . . . I think I ate dinner in the third floor closet . . . We retreated all right—right into the woods . . . You mean you haven't told your mother yet that you're going to Africa? . . . Neighbors I'm sure I speak for all of us when I say something's got to be done about this garbage—It's definitely second-class garbage . . . We didn't call the hogs—they always ran over us . . .

Africa!

Last week Jack Noel and Carol Pusey received their assignments for work in Africa this summer. Jack will be working in Liberia, a West African country south of Sierre Leone. Liberia is famous for its rubber production and for its six months of heavy rainfall annually. Most of the Liberians speak French, so the Crossroaders have to communicate in this language.

Carol will help to build a youth center in a rural village in Uganda. Uganda is located in East Africa on the northeast corner of Lake Victoria. It is a beautiful country, famous for the Mountains of the Moon and the Queen Elizabeth National Park. Although Uganda is on the equator, it has a mild climate with temperatures ranging from 60 to 85 degrees. Heat and high humidity are prevalent in the jungle areas.

The Crossroaders will meet for orientation in New Brunswick, New Jersey on June 20.

Librarian Convention Held

Miss Virginia Turrentine Maryville College Librarian; and Mrs. Alice Crippen, Assistant Circulation and Reference Librarian, have just returned from the Tennessee Library Association's Annual Convention in Chattanooga.

Speakers at the meeting included Harry Golden, author and publisher of The Carolina Israelite; and Dr. Lawrence Clark Powell, Dean of the School of Library Service of the University of California in Los Angeles.

In Favor of the Socialist State

by Bob Hart

In America the history of the Socialist party has not been one of continuing success, at least on the surface. The Socialist party and its doctrines coming from Europe to America in the last century received a bad name and a poor reputation. In consequence, as socialism has begun to replace capitalism around the world, Americans have found it expedient to incorporate socialist principles into their conventional parties. In this way our country too has made progress towards the eventual socialization of the American democracy.

Despite the advances of the last few decades, the American public has been extremely reluctant, especially among some groups, to admit to the reality and the necessity of socialism in the United States. Even more the public has been reluctant to relinquish the deep seated capitalistic ethic. It is time the public gave up many of its misconceived prejudices concerning socialism and realized its value in furthering the advancement of humanity and the American democracy. The socialist state in the United States is still in the future, but it is a future to be hoped for and looked for. not to be feared.

Erich Fromm has said in The Art of Loving, "The principle underlying capitalistic society and the principle of love are incompatible." In this statement Fromm is speaking in an abstract sense. He does not mean that one cannot practice love in today's society. What Fromm is saying is that the capitalistic system with its brand of individualism and fairness ethics is not conducive to genuine love and responsibility, values much needed in our present crowded and confused age. The worth of the socialist state is to release men from a system of competition and selfishness to be able to practice more rewarding and fulfilling ethical values. In truth the capitalistic system is restrictive on the total personality in the context of one's community. The socialist state can in part release more people to find responsibility in a world which demands responsibility and interdependence.

Many faults have been found in socialist state for both political and economic reasons. Across the world from Russia to Great Britain, time is proving these practical problems can be and will be solved. Democracy can live with socialism, as can Christianity. Human rights are not violated by democratic collectivism but rather enhanced. The problem of motivation in work remains a question, but with the gradual emergence of a new ethic, an ethic in line with the collective and interdependant principles of socialism, a new source of motivation is replacing and will replace the old principles of fairness and individualism. Although the traits of selfishness and distinterest will always plague mankind, the state can work out the right balance of collective effort and new freedom under socialism.

The socialist state is a reality now in some countries. It will soon become a reality in the United States. We have an advantage, however, in that America is approaching this new order gradually. We are not carrying any of the old labels and hatreds as have accompanied the socialist movement in Europe, and we are not torn by vicious class struggles. With these advantages there is every reason to believe the new America will throw off the shackles of the outdated capitalistic system and be launched into a new era with a greater degree of interresponsibility and freedom.

This week's agenda has two important events taking place. Last Monday ten girls who had earned 400 or more points in the intramural program went through informal initiation. Orange "M's," whistles and "lowly neophytes" were the order of the day, and now tomorrow the neophytes will be formally initiated into "M" Club while on a swim retreat at Loudon Lake. Congratulations and best wishes to the newly initiated girls: Noreen Bouis, Sue Fershee, Judy Johns, Phyllis MacIntosh, Mary Paddison, Linda Reifenkugel, Mary Lee Roseborough, Becky Sankner, Betty Vincent and Maren Wright.

Second on this week's agenda is an awards breakfast which will be held at 7:00 A.M. Monday morning in the rear section of the dining room. Any girl who has participated in intramurals during the past year is invited to come and join with us.

Netters Winningest Yet

The Scot tennis team has just completed the most successful week of tennis in recent history. Taking the road last Tuesday, the netmen trounced North Georgia 8-1, before marching through three North Carolina opponents. Asheville-Biltmore was bombed 9-0, Western Carolina turned under by 6-3, and Mars Hill humiliated on their home court 8-1. Shields and Blair to Study Curriculum

by Frank Eggers

Maryville College has applied for a grant under Title III of the Higher Education Act of 1965. Under the provisions of this grant, money would be provided to pay the salary of replacements for several (the exact number depending on the amount of the grant) faculty members so they might be free of normal teaching duties for the school year 1966-1967. The purpose of this action is to conduct a joint study program with the University of Tennessee and the Federal Government to review the changes and innovations made in curriculum, especially core curriculum, at other institutions. In the process of this study, the classes conducted under any such new system would be visited and an opinion poll would be taken of both teachers and students affected by it.

After study of at least twelve to fifteen of these representative institutions, a core curriculum will be specifically designed for Maryville which will fulfill the purposes of this institution as stated by the board of directors. It is to be emphasized that in developing this new core curriculum, no courses or systems are to be lifted from any other school, but rather all will be studied and then a unique system is to be made for Maryville.

Due to the considerable importance placed upon this program by our administration, the board of directors has authorized, exclusive of the Title III decision, sufficient funds to free two professors to work on this program full time next year. They are Dr. Blair of the English department and Dr. Shields, chairman of the Biology depart-

~~Greenawald Elected~~ ~~Wolfe Installed~~ Mulholland is President

After repeated meetings of Student Council and its Election Committee, the election of Ed Greenawald as student body president was declared null and void. A discrepancy in Greenawald's academic standing was interpreted by Council to mean that he would not be a senior second semester next year and so was not qualified to act as a candidate.

Vice President-elect John Wolfe was installed as president at the annual Student Council banquet held last Wednesday evening. A reinterpretation of the Constitution and Robert's Rules of Order, however, led Council to declare his installation illegal.

In a repeat election held on Saturday, May 21, history major John Mulholland from Youngstown, Ohio, was chosen to be student body president for the year 1966-1967. Wolfe will serve as vice president.

Because of the abnormal character of this election, Mulholland was unable to present the student body with his intentions concerning next year's student government. The following is a brief summary of his proposals:

1. Student body meetings more frequently to keep the lines of communication open.
2. Student-faculty communication strengthened through various available means.
3. Work and study to continue into the establishing of a third set of social societies.
4. Greater interest in the academic life of the campus to be stimulated by whatever means available.
5. A faculty lecture series to be arranged.
6. Student participation in informal study seminars.
7. Possible Democratic and Republican Party clubs set up to develop serious interest in American politics.

WSGA Announces Rule Changes

In the revision of the handbook Cues for Coeds, the WSGA Coordinating Council has been making various changes in women's regulations. The major ones are announced as follows:

(1) Whereas formerly slacks were not permitted off campus, they are now acceptable for the areas surrounding the college, excluding the major business district and shopping center.

(2) In considering extending privileges for juniors and seniors, WSGA decided to make the 11 o'clock permission more flexible in order that an upperclasswoman may take an 11 o'clock once a week at her own discretion for the Maryville-Knoxville area. These weekly permissions are accumulative, however, and can be used, for example, all in one group if the girl so wishes.

(3) Also in connection with junior and seniors, the number of weekends away from campus has previously been limited to 5 for all classes. Starting next year, upperclasswomen have 8 weekends away, and, if a girl has a 3.0 academic standing for the preceding semester, she may take weekends at her own discretion.

(4) For Saturday nights next year, every junior and senior woman has six 1 o'clock permissions to be used whenever she chooses. Here too, however, if the girl has a 3.0 standing she may take 1 o'clocks on Saturday night at her own discretion.

(5) Closing hour for Friday night of the 5-day week is to be reconsidered as the first decision on the agenda for next year.

Experience is a Harsh Teacher

Student Council would like to use this space in the Echo to make formal apology to Ed Greenawald and John Wolfe for the turmoil, embarrassment, and general disorder of the past week. It seems as though at times it takes such things to make one realize the importance of prevention over cure. We're surprised that this point of qualification hasn't come up before, and we're sorry that it had to come now. We feel that this situation will never happen again, since as always, Experience is the best teacher.

Hunter Donates Dissertation Abstracts

The Maryville College Library is indebted to Dr. Edwin R. Hunter for donating the proceeds from the sale of his book This Man's Art toward the purchase of Dissertation Abstracts, a monthly compilation of abstracts from doctoral theses. The abstracts are compiled from dissertations submitted to University Microfilms, Inc. by more than 140 cooperating institutions. They come out in twelve volumes per year, and our library now has all the volumes for the years 1961-1965 on the shelves in hard bindings. The volumes for the years 1957-1960 are on order.

Those students involved in independent study will find this a particularly valuable addition to our library. Each abstract is a summary of a doctoral dissertation and is indexed under author and subject. Dr. Hunter states, "There is no better index of the trends and the expanding areas of advanced study. If there were no other use made of it, merely leafing through it and browsing in the field of his particular undergraduate interest will have an impact on the ambitious student who has graduate study in mind.

Dr. Susanne Hoeber Rudolph (third from left), University of Chicago professor, spoke recently under the auspices of the College Epsilon Chapter of Pi Gamma Mu, national social science honorary. Pi Gamma Mu leaders with her here are, left to right, Gerald Hughes, Florence Corbett, and Paul Millin. Dr. Rudolph is a consultant on Eastern studies in a program involving Maryville faculty. She spoke on "Relentlessness and Intimacy: Aspects of Ghandi's Leadership."

Class president Reed Tarwater has announced that this year's senior gift will be divided between the Highland Band and the Honaker Club. The band will receive $150 toward payment of the debt for its new uniforms; the Honaker Club has been given $100 toward formation of athletic scholarships.

EDITORIAL OUTLOOK

If this editorial had been written a week ago, it might have proved to be unprintable. But, the fight is over, the dust has cleared, and maybe now the whole student government election mess can be viewed somewhat objectively.

We have weathered various charges of political manipulation, senior machinery, and the like and are left with one major thought. It is a sad commentary on our student body if what has been charged is true. If a small, elite group of "influential" seniors actually did plan, plot, and execute the election of Ed Greenawald, then not much can be said for the integrity or intelligence of the majority of students who voted for him.

The panic-stricken Student Council, which installed and uninstalled, voted and revoted, was faced with a new problem—its first real business of the year. As a result of the experience of being in the limelight, many Council members seemed to forget that they were elected as representatives, not replacements, of the student body. Unfortunately, the general, run-of-the-mill student was thrown into a clump which was labeled by some as the "DUMB MASS." It is hoped that the other-than-the-dumb-mass people will remember in the future that our system is a democratic one and that aristocracy of the Student Council is only a figment of someone's hazy imagination.

We feel a mite sorry for next year's leaders, Mulholland and Wolfe. The latter has undergone a rather unforgetable week; the former is faced with the job of rewriting that Thing called the Constitution. Surely there will be no more last-minute elections when the student body is called upon to vote for a name, without having any real knowledge of the plans and principles behind that name.

* * * * * *

Remember that bit about the fiftieth anniversary of the Echo? it was a lie. Dr. Hunter has informed us that the paper was begun in 1914. Anyone for a 52nd anniversary celebration?

* * * * * *

We wish to thank several campus organizations who have been of much help in alleviating the Echo's rather precarious financial situation. UCCF and Student Council have contributed sizable sums of money. Especially to be thanked is the Senior Class, which donated $100 to defray the expenses of this graduation issue.

Baldwin Goodbyes

by Mary Lee Zorb, senior counselor

Baldwin Hall has quite a past —and two people who have had a real part in that past are Mrs. Beatrice Spears and Mrs. Louella Epting. Both of these housemothers are leaving Maryville for more peaceful environs.

Mrs. Spears plans to return to her hometown of Morristown to dabble, redecorate, and do all the other things she has wanted to accomplish. Mrs. Epting is looking forward to spending some time with her grandchildren. She will make her home with her daughter on Signal Mountain, Chattanooga.

We would like to suggest perhaps they should write a book about the fascinating and intriguing things which have occurred in Baldwin. Like —the first day of our freshman year when Lois and Marty arrived and were promptly appointed chief dusters of Baldwin.

—the creation of "Spear's Bunny Club."

—the day the keys were locked in the refrigerator.

—the night everyone just happened to be standing in their doorway tapping their heels at the same time.

—the morning after the night before when "Even the walls had Spears!"

—the night the buzzer stuck —anyone lose a hairpin?

—the real fire drill

—the continual surprises of room inspection—would you believe cats, ducks, moldy pies?

The list could go on and on. And we've only been here four short years. Small wonder that Mrs. Spears and Mrs. Epting are taking a change of pace. Best wishes to you both as you go!

SEEN

"They must have sent the wrong size—it doesn't fit over my cutoff . . . kilt?"

. . . AND HEARD

If I'm going to stay, I may as well have a hot dog . . . Dean Massey: "The wilder the better as long as it's pure" . . . Did you know that Carole Brownlee became editor of the Echo as part of a senior plot to elect Ed Greenawald? . . . How should I know what Robert's Rules of Order are? — we never used them before . . . We've voted on it eight times now — which vote do you think we should count? . . . I guess if I ever get out of college the army will be waiting for me . . . How come none of the seniors can find jobs? . . . And it seems like no time ago we just arrived here with four long years ahead of us . . . I wonder if I'll ever make my kids come here? . . . Well, by the time we sit through baccalaureate and the president's reception and graduation — I'll be glad to leave! . . . Today marks the end of exams — and the birthday of Irving R. Feldeman.

Gargoyle

Staring into the vast crepuscule flame
With leaden eyes now listless and aglow,
Sentinel of dark, fierce stone so tame,
It whirs above the minute throng that swarms below.
It shrieks the fitful requiem of flying stone,
As soot-blacked wings defend the Holy Throne
Of Sainte-Genevieve—her mantle white as bone.
It flaps against the dingy dusk of night alone.

Speaking and Listening: Keys to Maturity

by John A. Kerr, Jr.

The confusion rampant over the past month (and particularly during last week), relating to student government, is unparalleled in my three years at Maryville. The very fact of wonder rooster's election was an oddity in itself, but when his latent ineligibility was discovered, an even more spectacular farce ensued. So many ridiculous solutions (such as amending the constitution to fit the situation) were proposed, that if Harvey had been nominated, I wouldn't have batted an eye. But level heads prevailed, the constitution was maintained, and student government withstood the attacks upon its competence. Leadership of the student body is quite possibly in the best hands now available; and the first meeting of the new council has shown the brightest hopes yet for enabling us as a student body to reach the potentialities of 1966-67. My advice to anyone so "burned out" on Maryville College that he doesn't want to become a contributing factor in its improvement next year, is that he find a job, join the army, or change schools!

One further word concerning the recent confusion: A statement "sprung" upon the student body by a small group of fanatics at the meeting on May 19, advocated that the Vice President-elect had become President when he assumed control of student council after its banquet on May 17. Now there is no justification for considering this traditional banquet a legal installation of new officers, but this assumpttion was voiced in the statement read before the student body. This proposal, as well as several senseless testimonies, demonstrated the effects of a poor use of words upon the confusion of the situation. Because words are our most practical media of expression, we should be selective in their use and careful in their acceptance. Anyone can talk, but to speak requires having something to say . . . even a lowly dog can hear, but to listen requires an intelligent mind.

The Rape of the Student Body

Ollie Williams. Senior Student Council Member

From the besieged Ardea all in post,
Borne by the trustless wings of false desire,
Lust-breathed Council leaves the Student host,
And to The Hill bears the lightless fire
Which, in pale embers hid, lurks to aspire
And girdle with embracing flames the waist
Of The Hill's fair love, the Student Body the chaste.

The above sentiments, patterned after Shakespeare, embody my lament for the way the Student Body has been stripped of its rights.

All representative forms of democratic government are rooted in the power of the people. The governing superstructure maintains its power only in trust, it has no absolute powers. Basic to our form of government is the premise that the individual be protected from the masses, and, equally important, that the masses be protected from the individual.

Robert's Rules of Order specifically provides that the vote on an election cannot be reconsidered once the candidate has been informed of the vote and has accepted, and secondly that a motion to rescind an election cannot be made.

The contention might be made that the above rules apply only to valid elections. However, neither Robert's Rules nor our Constitution specify that an election be "valid" in order to be irrevocable. In the absence of any such defining clause the election cannot be thus interpreted. In addition, the ex post facto decision that a candidate who was eligible at the time of election is now, and therefore was then, ineligible is questionable.

At first this may seem to be an unjust protection of individual rights, but the balance of power is fully maintained by Article III, section 1 of our Constitution which provides that any member of Student Council may be removed by 2|3 vote of Student Council for "Inability to carry on Student Council duties because of illness or other reasons." If Council had chosen to define the lack of academic senior standing as an inability to carry on Student Council duties, no one would have just cause for complaint.

But, when twenty people may summarily dismiss the will of the majority of the Student Body, the democratic process and the rights of the students have been raped, and one has little assurance, except faith, that any election may not also be summarily dismissed by twenty council members.

I will instruct my sorrows to be proud; For grief is proud, and makes his owner stoop.

FIRST PLACE:

Fancy

Fancy's theme once stole the thought
Of the youth I was;
A graceful girlish shape
On some protrusion caught
While racing through my cluttered mind.
In terror-bent escape
She thrashed about:
And, bewildered,
I let her out.

Now there's dead serious thought
Where fancy's youth once was;
No longer fancy's shape
Or her intrusion sought;
No smiles race through my ordered mind.
Well-made was my escape —
No remnants left about:
For protection,
I threw them out.

—Richard Mahler

SECOND PLACE:

1.

God drowned
The other Day:
Because He Did not Notice
I Was Crying.

2.

They saw that tears were falling;
So they went to find
Their bright
Umbrellas.

3.

You must have known.
So I am left with Just one thing
To ask —
Where were You?

—Karen Keen

THIRD PLACE:

The Ridge Road

The last have left now, day has gone.
Nor an hour past the east shovelful of night
Splattered on the sunny casket, covering
It down to the east cloudy gold gliding.
So he comes, alone as he has been when loneliness
Was more than isolation, but a painful outcast emotion.

Loneliness on the dark ridge road,
To which he had come, held answers
Not plaintive questions
The world from the road was a broad arena
Forests of dark gladiators reared black against
The Black Horizon
And nosed their pronged branches
To the balcony of silent winking spectators, but
All that should have been nation was not.
He fixed his lonely eyes to the West
Though the dipper's silver thumb pointed North.
The West where his imagination brewed scenes of better times
Was waiting, but should he go?

To leave for something better one might there Something worse, but to him on the outside
What is loneliness among those once friends?
That is not a thousand times the pain of loneliness
Among the new and unknown.
The next mirage is down the road
Is better, better than the last,
And any pain the future holds
Is sweeter than all the bitter past.

A Look at Maryville College

by John Mulholland

Begun in March of this year after an idea put forth in a specially called meeting of the Student-Faculty Senate, expanded with a number of other students and faculty members not regular members, groups of students and faculty have been meeting to discuss those things that they feel relevant to the issues confronting us here in our particular college life. What is wrong with our college? By what means does one gain an education? What is the purpose of Maryville College? What is wrong with the chapel program? How can we change the present chapel program? How do we implement a better campus social life? What are the ingredients of an academic atmosphere, notably lacking here? What does it mean to be a student, to be a professor?

These are only some of the questions that have become part of rather lengthy and mature discussions in the past few weeks. If you see some people around here excited about the possibilities of this college in becoming a real place of learning, don't be surprised! A new spirit of communication has taken place which can mean great strides forward in the development of this college. We students have voiced our complaints and suggestions for years, now we find listening ears and persons willing to expriment with and put to work some of our ideas. Never before have we had such an opportunity to contribute to the life of this college, and never before have we had such a responsibility to acknowledge this opportunity.

Would you believe someone getting up for a meeting at 7:00 A.M. on Monday morning to attend a meeting to discuss such topics and skip breakfast? Its being done. Or meeting an hour or two some weekday afternoon? Yes, even then.

Instead of lonely griping begin to seek out others among the student body and faculty to talk over your ideas. Talk to your student council officers and members if you desire to be a part of any of these groups. Begin to think seriously of what the experience of college can and should really mean. Then, begin to talk to others of your ideas. Big things are happening here at Maryville; take your part in the contributions that are made.

ON THE POINT OF FOREVER

by Sandy Chittick

I'm going away at eventide, across the wide and the rolling sea . . .

And what will I remember of four years at Maryville College? Already forgotten are thoughts of tests and busy work . . .

Still vivid is the shock of the freshman mass and the all-college sing starring Bumble Bee Don Black, and the warmth of Johnny Appleseed told by Mike Garrett.

That first year recalls Dr. Blair's friendly laugh, the midnight writing of freshman term papers, of Dave Sawyer and Sandy Briggs and our own talent show — tramp, tramp, tramp . . .

A lot of memories have piled up since then — the realization that English History wasn't so bad after all when Dr. Walker giggled, a guitar case full of jelly beans, Dr. Jackson being a stamp collector, Dr. Swenson riding a bike and smiling happy, Ed Greenawald being chased by a wild boar, sneaking up a fire escape or over the wall, Dr. Campbell with twinkling eyes, pogo jumping, sweating over "No Sweat."

I remember warm rain, squishy mud, long grass, blue mountains — lovely to look at and hell to climb — waterfalls, flowers, and butterflies.

I remember people — 350 of them who cared (or were hoodwinked) to give up their Sunday sack suppers.

Forgotten is a test failed because of a beautiful movie. Remembered are hikes taken when there was no time for them, four leaf clovers found when none were sought, tootsie roll pops on chapel seats, a challenge—I love you.

College has taught me a lot—the fun of hitchhiking, bicycling at 5:30 A.M., camping on the beach, spring, I'll be a dandy, I'll be a rover . . .

But rover or not, I hope I never do forget:

* The magic of the search—the countless books to read, the mountains to climb, the seas to sail, or the flowers to plant in the back yard, . . . and

* People—people alive, people lonely, lost and unaware, people happy, singing, smiling—people just being people and needing other people.

* * * * * *

"I left you in the morning
And in the morning glow,
You walked away beside me
To make me sad to go.

Will you know me in the gloaming
Gaunt and dusty, gray with roaming?
Are you sad because you know me not
Or sad because you know?"

Full out along the Cherbourg coast-sailing, we lack a day
'Til the moon shall disc in the daylight sky
Above blue Cardiff bay.

How have I longed for Glamorgan?
I have painted it wild in my thoughts.
Yea, the Cambrian Mountains of Radnor
Have beckoned me more than they ought-
Have searched for me more than were sought.

But give me a ship to Swansea or Neath
And boots to measure the lea
God knows I'll be gone 'gainst the setting sun
For the Cardigan crags and the sea
Ah, yes
There's a corrie of Welsh in me, 'tis true
And a bundle of places to be.

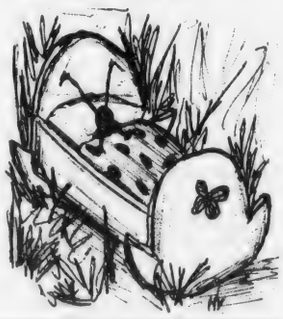
"We hope that what we said about women's hose last year hasn't had anything to do with affecting the change which has come over our little and big sisters. The feminine lot has actually been seen going around stockingless! Most of them have been freshmen, and from all appearance the freshmen have been setting an example for the rest of the outfit." — Sept. 23, 1933



"And then there are those young gentlemen in the (dining) hall who are at present considering a 'no shave' plan which will be under the NRA code...No Razors Allowed." — Nov. 4, 1933

"Mr. Burckhalter also gives dancing lessons to the boys (those who wish to learn) for fifteen cents a round." — Dec. 9, 1933

"The spirits of the seniors were raised at the senior class meeting when Celia Conover took the floor and, in the interest of the approaching senior party in the College Woods,... made a plea for dating couples to stay out of the bushes. The hilarity was not lessened...by a motion to the effect that the couples avoid the bushes. Mr. Kaufman suggested that they cut down the bushes." — Oct. 6. 1934

"Miss Johnson's freshman English class was having book reports last Thursday. One enterprising young freshman announced that he had read John Brown's Body. Asked Miss Johnson: "Don't you believe John Brown's Body is just a little too heavy for a freshman?" — May 4, 1935

"Many of Maryville's sons have figured largely in the political life of our country. Chief among the number is Sam Houston, Governor of Tennessee, and first president of Texas. He entered Maryville academy, the forerunner of the College but, finding Indian fighting more to his taste than Virgil, deserted the pursuit of learning to enlist in the Creek wars." — Apr. 16, 1938

Class Prophecy- 1966

It is now the year 1986 and the graduates of the class of '66 have returned for a class reunion, only to discover that there have been some changes made. Well remembering the changes started during their senior year, the graduates of the class of '66 may feel smug and complacent due to the instrumental part they played in being on the basement level of these alterations. Further investigation revealed that some people have not left at all. For instance, Buddy Stinnett stayed so long that he is now the President. Pres. Stinnett new regime is composed of M.C. graduates who, surprisingly, are graduates of the class of '66. Efficiency is the keynote of the new regime — for example, registration was held up three days by the new registrar Betty Lender. In order to keep the students well informed of administrative activities Dean of Students, Dale Schellenger, writes an open letter to the Highland Echo every week. Chaplain Greg Hallen has been working closely with President Stinnett investigation committee whose purpose is to Discover Undercover Defiance. The members of this committee are Terry Amon, Bill Covert, Rich Reed, Hank Seitz and Eric Bergman.

A stroll around campus reveals changes in many of the faculty and staff: Dwight Campbell has taken Miss Navratil job as Special Studies supervisor — practice makes perfect.

Miss Ellen Lankenau, who is the head of the P.E. department, has instituted a new program of Charm and Ettiquette. She is assisted in the beauty course by Michele McCroskey, who lectures on the "Value of Contact Lenses." Miss McCroskey is presently employed by her optometrist brother. Also on the staff is Sue Foreman, who is an expert on Far Eastern protocol.

Visiting home economist, Mrs. Dennis Miller, the former Sara Mason, is busily writing an autobiographical cook-book entitled "How I learned to cook at age 22."

Miss Karen Keen, one of the newer members of the English Faculty, has recently been honored in Saturday Review by having a selection of her poems published, the most famous of which is "Ode to a Comp."

Teaching "Marriage and the Family" this semester is faculty wife, Mrs. Jon Gresham.

Vibrations from the Fine Arts Center report that the department has recently been expanded. Chairman of the Department, Hugh McCampbell, announced that this spring Maryville will offer a major in country and western music.

Proctor of men's residences Ron Cheek is rumored to be moonlighting — his sideline — you guessed it — renting diamond rings.

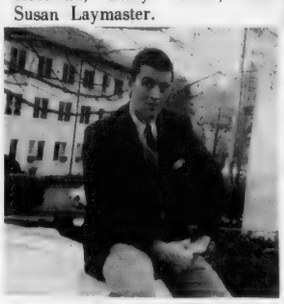
The food in the dining hall has been changed from cheese grits and cornbread to kosher dills and matz balls under the new dietition Ruth Hults.

The College has adopted a more liberal social policy as a result of the influence of the new dean of women, Sandy Haggart.

Sue Haldemen is now head librarian. She won't let anyone use the table where Eric gave her the engagement ring though — it's now a library shrine.

One of the first things the new administration did was to allow Johanne Ibsen to live off campus since she came back as a chemistry professor.

Adam Deveney who is head of ROTC here at M.C., is the only commander we know of who uses TR3's instead of jeeps.



Our only doctorial candidate, nightwatchman Dave Dye, has decided to take a morning class as UT. He feels that speaking Thai will be beneficial to his present position.

We've also noticed that there are some new housemothers. Marcia Bishop has been named Housemother at Fuhr Hall. Mary Lee Zorb sure has changed since she became Housemother of Baldwin. She confines her senior counselors to their rooms every weekend. Assisting Zorb is peppy Phyllis Evaul.

Admissions counselor Paul Millin reported from Fort Lauderdale that there are "no students here — they're all a bunch of toads." Mr. Millin plans to stay a few extra weeks just to make sure.

Miss Sherry Proffitt has been promoted to operator of Anderson Hall's new central switchboard, but we aren't sure how long it will last. It seems that Sherry was overheard debating (in French) with several of the would-be callers. Co-worker Corliss Vogel handles foreign calls from North Jersey.

Ann Layman and Chicki Rollwagon have taken over the Student Center, and several new attractions have been added. Dinner music is now head as Beth Mahler is featured as solo organist. Soon after smoking was legalized at the Student Center, the need for cigarette machines was recognized. Diane Kline, the new director of student help, saw her opportunity and made a new student-help opening for cigarette girls. Working in this position are Marge Waldon, Ruth Houser, Barbara Hortman, Patsy Burch, and Susan Laymaster.

Lupton Wood is in Africa — still looking for Carol Pusey, Jack Noel, and Fred Hope.

There has been a rush to the infirmary since Dr. Ollie Williams became the bachelor doctor in residence. Maryville's angel of compassion, Jane Stapp, is now the campus nurse. Those of her patients who survive are automatically eligible for Medicare assistance.

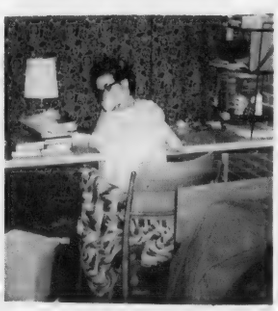
The Artist Series for this year was announced by Academic Dean, Denny McGowan.

Artists and lecture series found many of the class of '66 returning as performers and entertainers. Featured in Artists Series was old grad Joy Hutcheson and the Grand Ole Opry; the Maryville String Quartet composed of Gary Dutton, Helen Ryan, "Moon" Mullins, and Gene Dixon. Also appearing in this year's Artist Series was the comedy team of Mary Simpson and Sarah Doerschuk. These talented comics hold a soft spot for Maryville in their hearts because they formed their first comedy act, "the Heps," in Baldwin Hall.

Heading the lecture series this year will be Dr. Becky Koza, lecturing on "Life as a Rhodes Scholar," or "Rhodes Revels." Rumor has it that Becky, one of the nations' top electrical engineers, is soon to be appointed to the President's Council for Academic Excellence.

A recent addition to the Fine Arts Center is a painting donated by alumna Sara Parker. The painting is a self-portrait entitled "No-Doz" or "How to Sleep through Chapel without really Trying."

The President of the AFL-CIO, Keith Renne, was on campus recently to speak to Economics 101 on "The Place of Ruthlessness in Business."



It is a well-known fact that alumni are frequently called upon for donations. The Class of '66 has had quite a number of prominent businessmen who have been persuaded by Maryville Treasurer Clint Abbot to make generous donations.

Success hasn't spoiled Jim Pryor. Even though Jim is President of the Coke company, he still personally collects bottles from the girls' dorms.

Marty Van Miller gave up her Broadway stage career to reestablish a school of dance in Maryville.

Jerry Hughes is acting Counsel for Ann Fleming who is still suing the school for damages incured when she fell on ice.

Linda Horne, has become a famous Italian actress, although changing her accent caused some problems.

It is rumored that Dave Ellison's advice to the lovelorn column in the Knoxville Journal is so popular that it may become nationally syndicated. Dave, known to his readers as "Franny Farce" recently answered a letter from Sonny Hughes. Poor Sonny says he's really suffering under wife Barb Fitch's henpecking.

After 30 years in Chicago, Lewright Browning Sikes, IV, came back and established an underground dope syndicate in Maryville. Yes, and Steve LaVere's out to get him. He's Blount County Sheriff and President of the Maryville Christian Temperance Union. He and Chaplain Greg Hallen are campaigning against dope as well as liquor.

There is a new dry cleaners in town called "Chemically Cleaned Clothes are Cleaner." This noble experiment in the business world was started by Oliver Reed Tarwater. Mrs. Tarwater, the former Janice Best, is in charge of the accounting.

Maryville has a new dress shop featuring originals by Doris Price. The new shop, called "Kicky Clothes for Kooky Kids" is owned by Celia Tiffany. Fashion Board coordinator is Lee Orcutt. A frequent patron of Celia's shop is Miss Carole Brownlee, who recently was named to the Fashion Hall of Fame.

Rich Cleasby, Brenda Cox, Linda Keyees, Clint Abbott, Bo Henderson and Keith Bailey are all running the excursion boat concession stand on Pistol Creek.

After getting his M.D., Movses Hovespian started writing his prescription in Arabic and drove all the Maryville pharmacists wild.

Sandy Briggs, after studying two years in Alcohol Education, has returned to her job as waitress at the Log in Atlantic City for further research.

The Joy Motel has recently added 100 new rooms, an ad in the Highland Echo announced. Owner-operator George Derbyshire commented to the press that "the progress of the Joy Motel reflects the progress of Maryville College."

Maryville's newest night spot is The Shovel, a discotheque run by Louise Crawford. Owned by the Society for the Preservation of Anonymity, Discretion, and Enigma, the club features go-go girls, Marty Van Miller, Jan "Gypsy" Rose, and Flaming Faith Scotchmer. Recent performers also included Jane Brenckman and Eileen Wagner. After doing extensive research at the club, Lois Grinstead has finally answered the question, "Should a Gentleman offer a lady a Tiparillo?"

Maryville's most popular mountain hide-away is fast becoming Poore's Hostel for Pooped Hikers owned and operated by Miss Audrey Poore. Tired hikers soon recover after tasting mountain morsels from the kitchen run by Miss Majorie Wismer.

After eating out for four years, Dana Wyman, realizing a great need, has opened his own restaurant.

Maryville President Dr. Joseph J. Copeland will preside at the Commencement ceremonies scheduled for 10:30 a.m. June 1 in the Chapel. There are 127 seniors in the graduating class this spring.

Copeland Reports on Board Meeting

by Joan Paul

In a recent chapel service Dr. Copeland announced to the student body plans made by the Board of Directors with essential value to the future of Maryville College. The preceedings of the meeting of the Board included several details of interest to the concerned Maryville student.

Obvious to the eye are the three new dormitories being built on campus, but unknown to many are the minute plans and decisions necessary for this project. Action was taken by the Board to complete and furnish these buildings with power for completion being given to the Administrative Committee. The total finance involved in these three buildings is $2,050,000. Also discussed in relation to the building program were plans for the Science Building which will be an expense of $1,500,000. The plans are in the hands of an architect and he will determine the time for construction and completion.

A tentative working budget for maintaining the college in 1966-67 was adopted. The total suggested budget was $1,700,000, which is the largest in the history of the college. The building program budget was not included here but was reviewed by the Board. It was found that $190,000 alone was spent on the heating plant, new piping, etc., which are of essential value to residences in the winter. While speaking of monetary matters, the Board retired a $200,000 debt on the Chapel during the past year. As can be seen from the given figures, Maryville College is involved in a little "big business" of finance.

The major factor of general interest discussed, deliberated, and approved by the Board was the change to a five-day week of classes, taking effect in the coming year 1966-67. This change will take place on an experimental basis with an evaluation and report drawn up at the conclusion of the year, helping determine the permanence of the change and its effect on future calendar changes. In interviewing Dr. Copeland on this decision by the Board, he felt, "It will be good for all of us to have some time of our own that isn't 'scheduled.' This is a means of enhancing our academic, social, physical education, and religious life and whether it will . . . depends on how we use it." Therefore Maryville College is not only in the middle of financial planning and construction but also taking part in an experiment that enables more freedom in controlling time. The success and future of these three factors initiated by the Board of Directors depend on the concern and support from the faculty, administration, and students.

The Fallacy of the Socialistic State

by John Wolfe

The United States has chosen to step in the direction of government control of certain aspects of industry—not because socialism is a better form of economic policy—but to protect the American public, as a whole, from unfair business practices. True, some persons will prey on the public in an absolute capitalistic society, but those in power in a socialistic state may prey on the public to a greater extent. In a socialistic state, the economic status may be invested in a few governmental policy makers, who determine the commodities and services manufactured and offered, not on the basis of the supply and demand of the majority of consumers, but rather, on what these few believe to be best for the society.

The capitalistic system has proven itself as the system which opens the doors to greater fulfillment of human need. By competition the persons creating certain goods and services not only secure for themselves a material gain, but supply others in the society with goods, and services, and pecuniary wealth, which they would normally lack. By the gains one person makes, he enables others to pursue their lines of production, and creates a progression of interdependence. The socialistic state provides the needs of the people through the government which determines what the people will get, because it controls the economy. The greater the percentage of money in the economy taken from the public and given to the government, the less chance the public has to express their wants through supply and demand.

The socialistic form of government has not prospered well in any country. The doctors in Britain, under the Medicare program, have complained because the place of practice is government appointed and their fees are set by the government. Many have revolted against the socialistic form because of these restrictions on their practices. In Russia, the government has turned to capitalistic incentives for production because the government has failed terribly in management of agriculture and industry.

Max Weber, in his book The Protestant Ethic and the Spirit of Capitalism, expresses the thought that "Capitalism today, which dominates economic life, educates and selects the economic subjects which it needs through a process of economic survival of the fittest." Man is relieved of strife with his fellow man in a capitalistic society because each man is free to choose what he wishes to buy or produce, not just accept what the government produces.

Under socialism, man has only the responsibility of producing what the state wishes. He is not free to take his own ideas and personality and display them to others. In capitalism, that responsibility to others can be attained.

Our United States has prospered materialistically and spiritually under capitalism. No other nation has been able to challenge that under other forms of economics. May we always be open-minded and accept new ideas, but cast aside those that will hurt us, as surely the socialistic system will.

CURRICULUM,

Dr. Blair's job is to begin this summer when she will review various catalogues and decide which colleges and universities should be visited for study. Then in the fall she and Dr. Shields, accompanied by other faculty members if the federal funds make any more available, will begin their visits and the study.

In speaking with Dr. Blair, she stated that she was eagerly anticipating the visits to other schools because she hopes to gain new insights and new ideas for her own classes while performing her primary purpose of investigating the curriculum found there. She also re-emphasized the fact that no courses were to be brought intact to Maryville, but a tailor-made program would be designed from the findings of the study.

Dr. Shields said that he felt afraid of, but challenged by, the task confronting him, because whatever evolves from this study would determine in a large degree, the future of Maryville College. He also mentioned that he felt he would return as a better teacher because he would be full of new ideas and renewed in vigor and vitality.

In conclusion, regardless of the outcome of the federal grant which is pending, it is evident that our administration and faculty has taken definite steps to update the education opportunities available at Maryville and to assure it an advancing role in the changing world of modern education.

National Science Foundation Gives $10,000

Maryville College has received three National Science Foundation grants totaling $10,000. The money must be matched by the College and will be used to purchase equipment for teaching psychology, biology, and chemistry.

The chief item of equipment to be purchased is a physiograph machine which will be used by both the psychology and biology departments. The instrument is a much more complex form of the polygraph or "lie detector" machine and will be used for research and experiments on the campus. Dr. James Lytle of the Biology Department has had special training at Baylor University on the use of the instrument.

New balances and other equipment will be provided in the Chemistry Department under Dr. F. A. Griffitts, and the Psychology Department under Dr. Jerry Waters, and the Biology Department under Dr. Randolph Shields will also purchase additional laboratory equipment and supplies with the money.

Would You Believe All A's?

by Dr. David P. Young

What makes an ideal student? (Would you believe B's?) No, I hope it is safe to assume that we would not believe misty standards such as grades as being the answer to this question. Instead of trying to produce a definitive description of an ideal student I would like to throw out for consideration a few attributes which seem to me to be of fundamental importance. As a result these comments will be more from the point of view of the type of student rather than as to how he learns, how much he knows, or how well he does in classes.

Seek by Questions

It seems to me that the most important distinguishing characteristic of an ideal student is his ability to ask questions. I feel that basically most students on this campus are more concerned with the answers than they are with the questions. But what is the value of knowing an answer? To me the value is that it leads only to one more thing — another question. This is the mode of learning — asking questions. There are obviously many types of questions, and there is much more to questions than just the asking. Unfortunately, I suspect that most questions are of the kind that are seeking a factual answer to a problem for which the asker is either too lazy or too uninspired to find the answer for himself. However, I am concerned here with a different type of question. I am talking about the questions that are asked out of puzzlement over two or more facts or ideas. In other words, the kind that seek to determine or delineate the heart of a problem or to illuminate a relationship. The asker will have some facts at hand, but he doesn't yet see the relationship between them. He needs a question to lead him to an answer. In short you should expect to come to a question with knowledge and to leave it with more knowledge or direction for further questions. Certainly, however, some questions will cause you to seek more facts, but I feel that the efficacy of asking questions is too often missed by potential learners. The ideal student will be asking these kinds of questions of his teachers (and fellow students). And they are just the kind that often embarrass a teacher or send him back to his books or thoughts.

Use time, pace work

Time is essential to all students, and I would suggest that it is even more so to the ideal student. He sees it in a completely different light than most students as he views it as a treasure to cherish and use. Time is important because it is to be used to open doors of all types and sizes and not just the standard sized ones pointed toward in the ordinary classroom learning situation.

It seems to me that there are at least two aspects to this problem of the use of time. In the first place the ideal student will use it to be truly creative. The eternal complaint of all students is that there is never enough time. Unfortunately, this is a problem that cannot be solved because there is just so much time available to each person. Many students keep themselves busy with just that which is required in order to get by in regard to daily assignments. The rest of their time is usually spent unproductively either worrying about not working at the required assignments or guiltily escaping into another activity (which they rationalize as a healthful getting away from it all). In opposition to this concept, the ideal student makes use of his time so that he has some left over from the "requirements" which can then be used to refresh himself in a different creative pattern such as music, reading, thought, productive conversation, hiking, athletics, etc.

All of these areas may be totally unreleated to regular assignments, but the particular activity with which this student becomes involved is one which is an integral part of his way of life and not done as an attempt to escape or to avoid another duty. The point is that this type of student can get the "required" done and then have time to be productive in another area which provides him with a broader and deeper outlook and meaning for life.

The second idea concerning time is pace. I would suggest that pace is the ability to organize one's energies so that he is using them at near maximum capacity most of the time. There is a pace to learning, to playing, to concentrating, to creativity, and to every worthwhile activity. For some the pace can reach a furious height as they pursue a topic even to the exclusion of meals and sleep. And then at other times they may pace themselves with less forcefulness. In a real sense, this is the ability to stop and go, both at full speed ahead. The secret of pace is knowing how to get the maximum out of one's energies and abilities in the time available. Pace cannot be taught; it must be acquired by each person in his own way. There are times to concentrate and times to relax. The ideal student can do both with nearly equal vigor.

Look Ahead

There is a meaning to education. If there were not then we all might as well pack our lunches and go to the mountains (which may not be a bad idea anyway). I would suggest that the ideal student will be one who recognizes that meaning and has firmly in mind some values and goals for what he is doing. This is not meant to imply that the ideal student is one who decided at the age of five to be a doctor and then pursued the task with singlemindedness for the next thirty years. Rather I am saying that the ideal student will have a direction to his education. This direction may constantly change, and it should as his values and goals change, but nevertheless, he does have some concept of the long run. Too many people see only to the end of their noses and in their educational pattern take things one at a time — grade school, high school, college, graduate school and then life — that great something out there after one has been educated.

Find your style

As a capstone to this discussion I would like to borrow an idea from Alfred North Whitehead. He once wrote the following: "A merely well-informed man is the most useless bore on God's earth. This suggests to me that the ideal student will not necessarily be the most avid and perpetual gatherer of information, facts, and theories. Rather I am inclined to favor Whitehead's additional suggestion that style is an important mark of an educated man — and in our context, the ideal student. Style is the privilege of the expert and the product of the specialist. It is that attribute which sets the ideal student apart from the norm. It is that special thing that each individual brings to his own work. It is the expression of personal talents in the fashioning of power — creative and forceful in its impact. It is that characteristic which you can attribute to the professional, the one who can do the excellent job. This style is that which makes it so difficult to describe the ideal student. For each one who approximates this ideal brings something of his own self and talents to that ideal — thereby changing it.

The ability to probe with questions, the excellent use of time, pace in learning, a purpose, and an overriding style are some of the marks of an ideal student. What others would you add?

What Are We Going To Do Now?

The push to stay out of Vietnam is on, and the boys of this year's Senior class claim they are doing this and that — only Greg Hallen and Lupton Wood forsee the possibility of army life ahead. Hank Seitz, Dave Ellison, Terry Amon, and Adam Deveney are going to OCS and Bill Covert is joining the Air Force.

Some of the girls have marriage on their minds — like Sara Mason who is "Just going to be married, that's all," or Janie Brenckman who will be living in New Jersey. Sarah Doerschuk will be wherever on earth Barry gets stationed and Mary Ann Wilson will be in Illinois. Sara Parker and Annabelle Minear will be westward ho — to California!

Maryville College has evidently inspired somebody to teach—in fact thirty-one somebodies. Visiting the Smoky Mountains and teaching in between will be Carolyn Turner, Linda Keyes, Sonny Hughes, Denny McGowan, and Moon Mullins.

The thought of home-New Jersey-has prompted Ellen Lankenau, Nancy Hooven, Helen Griffin, Nancy Jane Muller, and Eileen Wagner to take teaching jobs there. Ruthie Hults will be married and looking for a teaching job in N. J.

Jane Stapp, married, will be teaching in Illinois. Edna Beaty also married, will be teaching in Ohio. Susan Laymaster and Helen Ryan are also going to be teaching in Ohio.

Lee Orcutt and Diane Klein are going to try out their teaching skills on Pennsylvanian pupils.

The South has claimed a few teachers—Ann Fleming will be in Atlanta, Hazel Lee Deweese in Decatur, Georgia, and Sue Ann Blair in Alabama.

Mary Lee Zorb is going to be in Virginia teaching Bible school —methinks she has ulterior motives!

The beaches of Jacksonville will never be the same after Barb Fitch and Marsha Bishop get through with them! They plan to teach during the week. Perhaps Lynn Howard and Bill Gass also teaching there, will give us a report.

Sunning and teaching in Florida will be Judy Jenkins in Riviera Beach and Johanne Ibsen in Ft. Lauderdale.

Why even Stanford Long has snagged a teaching job in the Maryville area!

Sue Sober, Betty Lender, Sue Foreman, and Margie Wismer plan to spend next year looking. (for teaching positions)

Five MC graduates will be packed off to seminary. Mary Simpson will be at Louisville, Keith Renne at Faith Seminary in Philadelphia, and Ruth Hauser at McCormick. Dale Schellenger is getting married on graduation day in the chapel aided by Dr. Campbell (and Barb), and next year he will be at McCormick Seminary. Wayne Frey and Jean Reynolds are getting married and Wayne will be at Princeton Seminary while Jean hunts a job.

Other husband study-wife work combinations will be the Tarwaters—Reed and Jan (Best) at Purdue, the Bergmans—Eric and Sue (Haldeman) at U.T., and The Showalters — Sandy and Tom at UT.

Linda Gresham may go to school or teach.

Maryville College students are moving out to all areas for grad school. Lewright Sikes IV is heading over to UT to plough through four years of history under a fellowship. Louise Crawford has a fellowship to UT. Mike Dalton will probably be at UT and Marty Miller hopes to go there too.

Brownlee has finally managed to get into grad school at the University of Maryland despite her reputation in English circles as editor of a scandal sheet. She will make a pilgrimage to Jerusalem this summer to atone for her past.

George Derbyshire will seek new learning at the University of Richmond; Rich Reed plans to attend the University of Indiana.

Celia Tiffany will represent her Alma Mater as she whizzes through Math at the U. of Kentucky where she has a traineeship.

After sweating through Chemistry lab for four years, Karen Keen will be studying English (and Artie) at UK.

Betty Robinson will be at grad school in Ohio, Chuck Meeker at Peabody, Doris Price someplace, Mike Shaver in Texas, and Ted Putnam at Auburn.

Joy Hutchison has an assistantship at Clemson, and Hugh McCampbell has a research assistantship "to study bugs" at Iowa State.

La grande dame Sarah Tompkins is aiming at grad school and marriage.

"Onward Christian doctors" will be the cry of Sandy Briggs as she rips into Temple Med School after a summer in Atlantic City, and Ollie Williams as he enters Ohio State Medical School.

After his debate with the Executive Council this spring, Steve Lavere decided to become a lawyer and has applied to UT law school. Good ol' Moby and Jerry Hughes will also be in law school.

Workers of the world—MC does have a few graduates for you! Betty Lou Sohocky is determined to make the government give her a job. Ron Cheek and Rich Marshall will be management trainees, Ron for the Kingsport Press, and Rich for Rose's Stores in Kingsport.

Becky Koza may venture to London to work for Pan Am airlines.

Ann Layman in Michigan will be a YWCA program director.

Dedicated to public service—social case work will be Audrey Poore in Memphis and Barb Hortman in Philadelphia.

Mickey McCroskey has a receptionist job with her brother in Maryville.

Chris Lim will grace the Curtiss Candy Company in Chicago — as a chemist.

This year's class has produced many searchers—Beth Mahler and Linda Horne are trying to find jobs. Buddy Stinnet claims he is going to work but confesses that he may just hunt coons and start a cattle ranch.

Jerry McNabb is looking for a research job and the person who sent him a Math GRE. Dave Dye has a twinge to become a pilot. Jim McDade, inspired by Snowflake's submarine scheme of yore, would like to start a restaurant.

Betty Brown is galavanting off to Scotland "to study."

Jan Rose, Faith Scotchmer, and Lois Grinstead are going to be working hard under the Red Cross in Korea, entertaining the U. S. Army, working with the odds of 1000 GI's to 1 of them.

Sherry Proffitt and Chittick, penniless, are hopping over to Europe with their motorcycles.

Sandy Haggart is waiting acceptance from Hell's Angels. Jim Pryor will be shouting his way to success as a circuit preacher. Barb Bullard wants to help the unwed.

Margie Shaklee has accepted a job as writer for the Polynesia News Sentinel.

Bill Erwin will try out as moderator for the U.N. next year.

Dot Heismeyer sees her future as the first full time Howard Johnson waitress with a B.A. Corliss Vogel has let her Maryville College movie debut go to her head and is leaving for Hollywood in June.

Chickie Wollwagen and Kathy Denow plan to play the harmonica and sell pencils.

And of course Siver and Powell have volunteered to come back next year and keep the College Community in good spirits!

MARYVILLE

SPRING SPORTS FINISH STRONG

Sonny Webb went 6-for-6 including a home run to lead the Scots' 23-hit attack as they shelled Cumberland College 8-5 and 10-3. Captain Sonny Hughes had four hits to boost his batting average to .417. Jack Llewellyn (4-4) and Jim Bachus (4-4) were the winning pitchers in the twin-bill and neither ran into any serious difficulty as the Scots won their eighth and ninth games.

Bryan College managed to push across eight runs, but MC scored ten as the Scots evened their record at 10-10 behind the superb pitching of Jim Bachus and Jack Llewellyn. Llewellyn was credited with the victory and became the Scots' winningest pitcher with a 5-4 slate. He contributed two hits to the attack and boosted his season total to three. Sonny Hughes got only two hits in five attempts and his average suffered to .405.

Top .500

The Scots got over the .500 mark with a win over Knoxville College. Jack Llewellyn went the distance for MC and upped his record to 6-4. Sonny Hughes managed three hits in this contest. Their record this year, 11-10, was the best in quite a while. On several occasions, the Scots came close but could not quite come up with the game winning tally as they lost six games by one run. To some, this might seem a negative factor, but it must be remembered that the starting line-up included three freshmen, three sophomores, one junior and only one senior. The team gained invaluable experience and a lot of poise. Prospects for next year look unusually bright. The only senior on the squad was Captain Sonny Hughes. Besides hitting .416, Sonny coached the pitching staff and provided the team with that all-important element—maturity. In losing Hughes, MC has lost one of the best catchers in small college baseball.

The Maryville College track team closed out its 1966 season with wins against Milligan and Bryan to bring its record to 5 wins and 6 losses. In the case of the Milligan Buffalo tally, the Scots had 10 first places and many seconds and thirds to squeeze out an 82-63 victory. Some of the highlights in the third-home contest of the season for Maryville included Dick Craig's performance in both the 100 (10.2) and the 220 (23.0) for first places. Bob Leach won the 440 yard hurdles again in somewhat slower than his usual time, 61.3, though he was not pushed at the finish.

Two mile record

In the two mile, it was freshman Bob Cooper all the way as he blasted the school record for a first place. The record time was 9:45.2 for eight laps. In the customary fashion, the 440 relay team (44.6) composed of Leach, Dalton, Cropper, and Craig, and the mile relay team of Leach, Piper, Reed, and Craig (3:33.1) each garnered five first place points for the team victory. Terry Amon won the 120 high hurdles in 16.5.

Dalton Shines

In the field events, it was Mike Dalton who monopolized the activity. He jumped a hearty 42 feet 8¾ inches to break his own school record and take first place. He also managed a 20 foot effort to win the running broad jump. Greg Hallen took the javelin with his best throw of the year (173' 9½").

Scots Blast Bryan

In the Bryan romp, Maryville scored first places in all but four events. Leach blazed to a victory in the 440 in 52.1 and McCampbell took the 880 yard run in 2:02.1. Bob Cooper swept both the mile (4:33.8) and the two mile (9:57), while Leach turned in another five points in his favorite, the 440 hurdles (59.6). The relay teams won again as usual.

Field Men Strong

The thinclads were also successful in the field events, dominating the high jump, triple jump, shot, discus, pole vault, and the javelin. Clark cleared 5'10" in the high jump and Joe Malloy vaulted to first place with an 11'6" effort. Hallen won the javelin again with a 170'10" throw. The weights were led by Pat O'Brien and Monroe in the shot and discus.

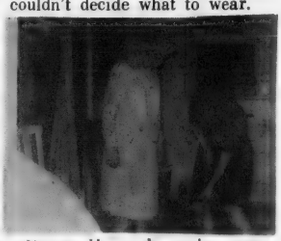
These are only the high points in a track meet marked by an excellent team effort. Without the numerous second and third place tallies by the Scots, the 103-42 final score could never have been amassed. It was a fine way to end a rather mediocre season.

PROPHECY, con't from p. 5, col. 5

Southern Cafe has blossomed into one of Maryville's most popular night spots. This elite establishment is now owned by Mr. and Mrs. Wayne Frey. It features the op-art paintings of Mrs. Frey (the former Jean Reynolds) and the gastronomic specialties of Mr. Frey, including "Plato's pizza," "Nietzsche's noodles," and "Kierkegaard's coleslaw."

A singing waitress has been added to Southern U.C., increasing the atmosphere of romance and mystery. Further investigation revealed that this waitress is none other than Miss Sarah Tompkins who is featured nightly.

On the international scene . . . Dashing Rich Marshall, the darling of Wall Street, was last seen escorting a swinging socialite to a society ball. Rich is frequently mentioned in gossip columns as a prominent member of the jet set.



Bill Gass and Lynn Howard have been hired as secret agents, but they are better known for their disguise as tennis players.

Three native uprisings have occurred in Cranbury, New Jersey, since the Peace Corps sent Jim MacDaid there.

Theodore D. Putnam has left for Stockholm, Sweden, to accept the Nobel Prize for his discovery of the First Watersoluble Swimsuit. Of course, Mr. Putnam was accompanied by Mrs. Putnam.

Many Maryville graduates found it hard to leave the thriving metropolis. For example, Herman Ramsey made a fortune as a race driver at the Maryville Speedway — maybe he'll send some of his earnings our way.

Susan Sober was recently initiated into the Maryville Doctor's Wives Club — she missed the first three meetings cause she couldn't decide what to wear.

Nancy Hooven's senior year sunburn never disappeared. She's been a cigar store Indian in Gatlinburg ever since.

Edna Beatty and her husband moved to Maryville where she's now head majorette for the Alcoa High School Band.

Betty Brown has a bee farm outside town. She now supplies the college with all its honey.

Helen Griffin recently became the first woman engineer in the Southern Railroad system. Finally the Knoxville to Washington trains are running on time.

Several Maryville graduates were unable to attend the class reunion.

Nancy Jane Mueller has established a mission in Thailand, but she keeps in touch with the college as this year's Fred Hope Fund was sent to her mission.

Dot Heismeyer set up a grapefruit farm in Florida and keeps the college well-supplied.

Bill Erwin couldn't make it either. Since being in the Marine Corps, he now has the chapel mice regimented and trained and he's taken the show on a cross-country tour.

Betty Robinson is in the Phillipines, but the college now has a beautiful Filipino musseum thanks to her yearly gifts. Stan Long is running for Governor of Pennsylvania. He wanted to run for Gov. of Alabama, but his wife wouldn't let him live in the South.

Sandy Chittick, assisted by Judy Jenkins, has established a home for "Wayward Yale Men" in Geneva, Switzerland.

Chris Lim has returned to Thailand after receiving her BS in chemistry — she finds her American Education handy in her new business venture — Chris' Pizza Palace.

Mary Ann Wilson, the world's only woman jockey, rode to victory in the Kentucky Derby last night Aboard "Chilhowee Champ" of the Orange and Garnet stables of Allen Fields.

Just released from the press is the announcement of a new Chief of Protocol — Miss Betty Lou Sochocky.

Chuck Meeker is captain of the Alumni Football Team.

Tom and Sandy Showalter had to leave early — they went to Atlanta to buy 3 quarts of milk — it's 1c cheaper there!

Ever since he was named to the board of directors Mike Shaver has been trying to get rid of the music department.

Mike Dalton is married and the father of seven sons — they call 'em the Dalton boys.

From the literary world comes word that Margie Shaklee has been named editor of True Confessions.

Kathy Denow has just published a new bridge manual, Smoker Bridge for the MC Student.

Jerry MacNabb is still looking for his GRE.

Miss Carolyn Turner has been elected President of NEA at its convention in Two Egg, Alabama.

Hazel DeWeese is on an extensive speaking tour of the U. S. — her topic — "Free Love."

Barb Bullard has set a record for staying 20 years at the Florence Crittendon Home for Unwed Mothers.

"Wait Sarge, this one's a girl underneath."

Term Paper Placement Bureau

A unique service for evaluating and marketing college research papers, called the Research Writers' Bureau Ltd., was established in the New York area recently in response to widespread demand amongst publishers for articles on academic subjects. The firm is reported to be the first organization of its kind to concentrate its efforts entirely on selling campus-written material.

According to Richard Fennelly, director of the literary agency, there are thousands upon thousands of periodicals, ranging from the smallest journals to some of the largest "slick" magazines, which need well-researched student manuscripts. He reports that some of these pay up to 10 cents per word for this material.

"Academic journals are usually the first and too often the last place students consider as an outlet for their work," Fennelly says. "This is lamentable because there are numerous semi-popular magazines which pay decent money for research writing. They cover a wide field of interest, including science, religion, history, medicine and business." Virtually every area of college study has some representation in this type of periodical, according to the firm's director.

The new agency, which does not return manuscripts unless first queried with a description of the paper, is located at 95-31 104 St., Ozone Park, N. Y.

Playhouse Awards Presented

Maryville College Playhouse awards have been given to student actors and actresses for the year's productions at the annual dinner meeting of the College Chapter of Theta Alpha Phi, national dramatic honorary society.

The Major Actor Award went to Andrew Ruhlin for his role as Androcles in "Androcles and the Lion," and Ibbie Ann Jack won the Major Actress Award for her performance as Maria Rainer in "The Sound of Music." Best Supporting Actor was Robert Young as Max Detwiler in "The Sound of Music," and Best Supporting Actress was Lynn Duke as Liesl in the same production.

Best Minor Actor Award went to Philip DerPilbosian, who was the Menagerie Keeper in "Androcles," and Nancy Arn won the Best Minor Actress Award for her role as one of the contestants in "The Sound of Music."

The Nita Eckles West Playhouse Awards went to Margaret Shaklee and Frederic Charles Callies, Jr., and the Bates Forensic Drama Award was presented to Diane Elizabeth Caylor. The Dr. J. W. F. Davies Technical Theatre Award was won by Virginia Proffitt, and the Playhouse Award went to John Myers.

Golden Stage Screws for work backstage were presented to Robert Hutchison and Michael Chomyk.

Snider Added to Development Office Staff

Linwood Frank Snider, Jr., a 1961 graduate of Maryville College who has been working for the Provident Life and Accident Insurance Co. in Chattanooga, has been employed by the College as Associate Director of Development and Executive Secretary of the Alumni Association, President Joseph J. Copeland announced today.

Snider, a native of Norwood, Mass., majored in Business Administration at Maryville, and was active in student government and in the YMCA. He served in the Army before going to work in Chattanooga in 1963.

His wife, Jane, a graduate of the Class of 1960 at Maryville, has been employed by the Tennessee Department of Employment Security in Chattanooga.

Mrs. McNiell Granted Danforth Fellowship

Mrs. Sarah McNiell, assistant professor in the History Department, will be absent from Maryville College for the next four years. She has been recently granted a newly established Danforth Graduate Fellowship for married women, which enables her, as a women with children, to pursue part time graduate study over an extended time period. Mrs. McNiell has applied for a four year extension, the first year of which has been granted. It will be renewed for the second year upon successful completion of the first year of study. The grant covers tuition fees, a stipend, and child day care expenses. Mrs. McNiell, a graduate of Maryville College, will be working toward her doctorate at the University of Tennessee where she also received her master's degree in 1955.

Peace Corps Seeks Volunteers For Micronesia

The Peace Corps, Monday, launched an intensive nationwide recruiting campaign on college campuses to seek Volunteers for its newest area of operation — the Pacific islands Magellan hailed as "paradise."

The new program for the Trust Territory of the Pacific (Micronesia) was announced by Peace Corps Director Jack Vaughn, Secretary of the Interior Stewart Udall and Ambassador to the United Nations Arthur Goldberg.

World War II left paradise with problems, they explained, and the islanders have asked for Peace Corps help to get ready for self-government. The 2,141 mountaineous islands and sand atolls in the West Pacific which comprise Micronesia are now administered by the U. S. Interior Department under a United Nations mandate.

The accelerated program calls for:

— A first group of Volunteers to begin Peace Corps training in July in Hawaii and arrive in Micronesia by October.

— A second group to begin training in October, also in Hawaii, arriving in Micronesia in January, 1967.

The chain of events leading to the new program:

On May 3 Secretary of the Interior Udall forwarded to the White House a request from Micronesian leaders for Peace Corps Volunteers to fill a shortage of teachers, health aides and community development workers now slowing development.

President Johnson then wrote Peace Corps Director Vaughn, urging "the greatest possible involvement."

Vaughn told newsmen Friday the Peace Corps was "delighted to respond to this request," and announced that teams of recruiters would visit college campuses to explain "this opportunity and this need."

Secretary Udall said "the move to put a strong Peace Corps team in the Trust Territory is the most important news that we have had with regard to our administration there in the last five and a half years."

Ambassador Goldberg noted that it was "a very big undertaking, because while the number of people involved is relatively small — 90,000 — they live on 97 islands scattered over three million square miles of ocean.

Vaughn said present plans call for sending "several hundred Volunteers" to the Pacific islands. The first group will be trained in elementary education, community development, public health and public works. The second group will concentrate on secondary education, agriculture, communications and transportation, public administration, and cooperatives and credit union organization.

Because of the special nature of the program, the Peace Corps has prepared a special application form for the Trust Territory and will notify all applicants within 15 days whether or not they qualify. The usual placement test has been suspended.

Books Discussions

An exciting new feature of the Orientation Program this year will be discussions of contemporary books.

Author To Visit Campus

We will have the privilege of having one of the authors present to assist in the discussions. Dr. Ina Corinne Brown, Professor of Anthropology at Scarritt College, Nashville, Tennessee, will discuss her book, Understanding Other Cultures. Dr. Brown has a delightful way of illustrating her points. At a recent conference she was describing the difference between ritual and literal behavior. When a mother picks up her child at a birthday party, the mother may say, "If you had a nice time, tell Mrs. Jones." This, said Dr. Brown, is literal behavior for it assumes that the child has thoroughly enjoyed himself, and that what the child says reflects the way he really feels. On the other hand, if the mother says, "Tell Mrs. Jones you had a nice time," this is ritual behavior since the child is expected to be polite even if he found the experience unpleasant.

In Dr. Brown we will have a person who not only writes lucidly but is also a captivating speaker. Her presence for two days on the Maryville campus will undoubtedly be remembered as one of the highlights of the academic year. She will lead the discussions on the book Saturday morning, hold an informal session with new and returning students on Sunday afternoon, and be the speaker at Vespers on Sunday evening.

Lettermen Here For Homecoming Concert

It was announced in Chapel on Friday, May 27, that THE LETTERMEN, nationally famed concert and recording artists, will appear, in concert, on Friday, October 7, as a part of MC's 1966 Homecoming festivities. This announcement marks the culmination of a year-long Council attempt to schedule a big-name popular show this fall.

Tickets will go on sale around the first day of classes. The price plan is at present incomplete, but Council's aim is to present the best possible programs at the lowest possible prices. In no case will any MC student have to pay more than $2 for a seat.

Plan now to attend.

Grant for Science Building Approved

A grant of $345,642 to Maryville College in Federal funds for the construction of a new science building on the campus was approved by the U. S. Office of Education, Sen. Albert Gore announced May 26 in a telegram to Maryville College President Dr. Joseph J. Copeland. The grant had earlier been approved at the state level by State Commissioner of Education J. H. Warf. The funds come under the Higher Education Facilities Act of 1965.

Result of study

The new science building, which will house complete new science facilities for the College, will cost an estimated $1,275,000. Funds for the building were assured last year after a successful development campaign, and the building is now being designed by Barber & McMurry of Knoxville. At the May meeting of the College Board of Directors, the Directors empowered the Administrative Committee of the Board to proceed with the completion of plans for the new building, including its location, financing, and letting the contract for its construction.

Student Body Elections Final

John Mulholland

After repeated meetings of Student Council and its Election Committee, the election of Ed Greenawald as student body president was declared null and void. A discrepancy in Greenawald's academic standing was interpreted by Council to mean that he would not be a senior second semester next year and so was not qualified to act as a candidate.

In a repeat election held on Saturday, May 21, history major John Mulholland from Youngstown, Ohio, was chosen to be student body president for the year 1966-1967. Wolfe will serve as vice president.

Because of the abnormal character of this election, Mulholland was unable to present the student body with his intentions concerning next year's student government. The following is a brief summary of his proposals:

1. Student body meetings more frequently to keep the lines of communication open.
2. Student-faculty communication strengthened through various available means.
3. Work and study to continue into the establishing of a third set of social societies.
4. Greater interest in the academic life of the campus to be stimulated by whatever means available.
5. A faculty lecture series to be arranged.
6. Student participation in informal study seminars.
7. Possible Democratic and Republican Party clubs set up to develop serious interest in American politics.

Shields and Blair to Study Curriculum

by Frank Eggers

Maryville College has applied for a grant under Title III of the Higher Education Act of 1965. Under the provisions of this grant, money would be provided to pay the salary of replacements for several (the exact number depending on the amount of the grant) faculty members so they might be free of normal teaching duties for the school year 1966-1967. The purpose of this action is to conduct a joint study program with the University of Tennessee and the Federal Government to review the changes and innovations made in curriculum, especially core curriculum, at other institutions. In the process of this study, the classes conducted under any such new system would be visited and an opinion poll would be taken of both teachers and students affected by it.

After study of at least twelve to fifteen of these representative institutions, a core curriculum will be specifically designed for Maryville which will fulfill the purposes of this institution as stated by the board of directors. It is to be emphasized that in developing this new core curriculum, no courses or systems are to be lifted from any other school, but rather all will be studied and then a unique system is to be made for Maryville.

Due to the considerable importance placed upon this program by our administration, the board of directors has authorized, exclusive of the Title III decision, sufficient funds to free two professors to work on this program full time next year. They are Dr. Blair of the English department and Dr. Shields, chairman of the Biology department.

Dr. Blair's job is to begin this summer when she will review various catalogues and decide which colleges and universities should be visited for study. Then in the fall she and Dr. Shields, accompanied by other faculty members if the federal funds make any more available, will begin their visits and the study.

In speaking with Dr. Blair, she stated that she was eagerly anticipating the visits to other schools because she hopes to gain new insights and new ideas for her own classes while performing her primary purpose of investigating the curriculum found there. She also re-emphasized the fact that no courses were to be brought intact to Maryville, but a tailor-made program would be designed from the findings of the study.

Dr. Shields said that he felt afraid of, but challenged by, the task confronting him, because whatever evolves from this study would determine in a large degree, the future of Maryville College. He also mentioned that

Design of the new facility is being based on a detailed study made by the Philadelphia consulting firm of Taylor, Lieberfeld, and Heldman. The consultants recommended totally new science facilities on the campus, and included preliminary drawings for the new building based on the College's enrollment projections and needs.

Site to be chosen

A site for the new building is still under study. When the new building is built, an alternate use will be found for the present Fayerweather Science Hall, which dates from 1898.

The site must be chosen and final working drawings prepared by the architects before bids can be asked from contractors and ground is broken for the new building. Its construction will be the second major building program on the Maryville campus since the completion of the Margaret Bell Lloyd Residence for Women in 1959.

Ready?

"Many students never really discover what education is all about until their junior or senior year of college." Did this, or could this, possibly apply to you? This was the comment of Dr. E. Fay Campbell, the Chaplain of the College. This problem was one of the sources for his new book, Getting Ready for College. "I am convinced," says Dr. Campbell, "that neither the high school, the church, nor the home is adequately preparing students for college." Getting Ready for College is an attempt to have the family and the church prepare students for college. It is hoped that the book will become a basis for discussion among parents, the minister, and the student.

Dr. Campbell has been associated with college campuses all his life. He was involved in the Christian Student Movement at Yale University for twenty five years. He has worked on numerous campuses during the last twenty years. He brings a wealth of knowledge and understanding together in his book. The college student, he says, needs to be ready for the kind of world which the college provides with its freedoms and problems. It is hoped that when he is adequately prepared, he can better meet the demands made of him.

Artist Series Announced

The 1966-67 Maryville College-Community Artists Series has been announced with the opening program on Nov. 4 and including a Metropolitan Opera soprano, the Beaux Arts Trio of New York, a family of four classical guitarists, and the Princeton Chamber Orchestra.

Opening the series, supported jointly by Maryville College and community patrons and season ticket holders, will be Helen Vanni, a mezzo soprano who has appeared at the Mteropolitan Opera and with the Philadelphia and Pittsburgh Orchestras. She is a veteran of eight seasons with the Metropolitan, and has recorded with the Philadelphia Orcestra for Columbia Records.

. On Jan. 13 the Beaux Arts Trio of New York, who won the Grand Prix du Disque last year in Paris for their recording of the Dvorak and Mendelssohn Trios, will appear in the Artists Series. The piano, violin, and cello group most recently have made a recording of the complete Beethoven piano trios.

Spain's first family of guitar, the Romeros, a father and three sons, will appear on Feb. 3 with a program of classical and Flamenco guitar music which has had widespread appeal in America. The family has appeared on the Ed Sullivan and Tonight shows on television, and has played at Philharmonic Hall and New York's Lincoln Center.

Closing the 1966-67 Artists Series on April 14 will be the Princeton Chamber Orchestra conducted by Nichas Harsanyi of the Westminster Choir College and Princeton University. His wife, Janice Harsanyi, will be soprano solist with the ensemble of 21 professional musicians. The performances are held in the Maryville College Chapel.

BOOK DISCUSSIONS

Religious Debate

On Friday, September 16, the widely discussed volume by John A. T. Robinson, Honest to God, will be presented by a selected group of faculty and students. In his book Bishop Robinson says:

"The Bible speaks of a God 'up there.' No doubt its picture of a three-decker universe, of 'the heaven above, the earth beneath and the waters under the earth,' was once taken quite literally . . . Moreover, . . . most of us still retain deep down the mental image of 'an old man in the sky.' Nevertheless, . . . it does not worry us intellectually . . . because we have long since made a remarkable transposition of which we are hardly aware . . . In place of a God who is literally or physically 'up there' we have accepted, as part of our mental furniture, a God who is spiritually or metaphysically 'out there' . . . This picture of a God, 'out there' coming to earth like some visitor from outer space underlies every popular presentation of the Christian drama of salvation . . . To be asked to give up any idea of a Being 'out there' at all will appear to be an outright denial of God . . . All I can do is to try to be honest—honest to God and about God—and to follow the argument wherever it leads."

Fenton Morley, a Vicar in the Church of England, has this to say about the book: "In general the clergy have readily acknowledged the effect of the book . . . as a challenge and a stimulant. They agree that the questions which the Bishop poses are real and important. But many of them doubt whether the answers he gives are adequate . . . From their pastoral experience . . . many clergy question whether mankind has so come of age as to be able to do without religion, and is so mature intellectually as to be in no need of signs or symbols."

Books to be Mailed

Copies of both books will be mailed to all students who have been accepted for fall and have paid their admission fees. Books will be mailed in late July. Payment for them will be made in the College Book Store after the students have arrived on campus, when text books for the first semester are selected.

New Dorm, Anyone?

by Alice Leeth

Very little Carnegie and no more Baldwin for incoming freshmen. No longer will the "plebes" learn to liye with mice, ants; banging radiators, creaking boards, and drafty rooms. The three new dorms on campus will be ready for this year's freshmen with all the comforts of modern living — even air conditioning. And to help them settle down to plush dorm living and also make adjustments to a whole new way of life is the corps of resident assistants and senior counselors.

What may come as a surprise to many is that the number of assistants and counselors have at least, if not more than, doubled to handle the unit system in the dorms. Having had only ten resident assistants in past years, this fall's frosh fellows will have 18-20 assistants to take their problems to. There will be 29 senior counselors in the women's dorms in contrast to this year's six. Nearly all of these will be in the new dorms with a few in Pearsons and Carnegie.

Quickly Oriented

The reason for so many assistants and counselors is the new unit systems in the dorms. Each floor is divided into four units with a lounge and a bath shared by two units. Each small unit, made up of eight freshmen and one counselor, has a study room and storage space. Thus, each freshman will have a better opportunity for closer acquaintance with an upper classman and, hopefully, to become oriented more quickly to campus life.

The resident assistants and senior counselors have a big responsibility ahead of them. There are four main goals for them to strive for in assisting the freshmen. Scholarship is the most important point; they must help the new students succeed academically by helping them organize their time for studying and even by showing them now to take good notes. Another important phase of the counselors' work will be on the personal side of life. They must make each new student feel a part of what is going on, and be always ready to listen to problems and questions. Organizing a happy, congenial living situation is also important by helping to coordinate roommates.

Assist Frosh

All through the school year, freshmen will be facing new problems, meeting new people, questioning goals and answers. The assistants and counselors will help with many decisions and values in their lives. The resident assistant program is indeed an important and necessary phase of campus work.

FIGHT SONG

On, Highlanders, down the field
Rolling up a high score!
Tear into the end zone,
Smash on through that line,
Highlanders!

Send a rousing cheer on high,
And our boys will shine,
Come on and fight, fight, fight!
Come on and fight, fight, fight!
For dear old Maryville

The Lantern Is Lit

by Bob Young

And the Lantern is the campus coffeehouse. And what goes on inside it next year should make it an interesting place to be occasionally, or maybe often, or maybe you won't like it at all. We who work there sometimes don't like it all ourselves, but we're going to try to make those times get completely lost among the good times, the hootenannies, the jazz festivals, programs on the War, the peace, love, hate of all kinds, many different things, and all of them relevant to what the student is thinking about today. And perhaps what he could be thinking about and doing something about if he knew what was going on around him. When the programs are over, and when there aren't any programs, the coffeehouse really becomes a coffeehouse. It's the place where a guy can come and sit over a cup of coffee of one sort or another, and look at the guy across the way. Maybe they've got a few words for each other about a program they saw there, or a painting on the wall, or a record on the stereo, or Life In The College, or what life is like Outside The College, or the draft, or free love. Maybe something that will make it worth each other's while to be there. Maybe play a guitar, or sit and brood, or read something in the reading room. The Lantern is a place where college people can come and be themselves, and have a good time doing it. But a coffeehouse is just a room with people in it, don't forget that. Remember the people.

Our room is behind the library, and we'll be open all through orientation week.

Leader of February Meetings
1965-1966

February Meeting Continue Long College Tradition

Each year the college sponsors a series of meetings which are set aside as a time designated for reflections upon what the church is saying to us, as a college community today. This series is known as the February Meetings and it usually takes place during the last week of February.

Leaders for this series are selected from outstanding laymen and ministers of the Christian Church. These leaders serve as sources of inspiration both as speakers and as counselors as they make themselves personally available to us.

When February meetings roll around next year, remember to keep yourself alert — experience shows that anything can happen!

Great Year in Store for Choir

by Sarah Tompkins

The College Choir, under the direction of Dr. Harry H. Harter, looks ahead to 1966-67 with enthusiasm and expectation for one of the most eventful years in its history. After singing in Beethoven's Ninth Symphony with the Knoxville Symphony Orchestra this past April, the Choir has been invited back for the production of Carl Orff's CARMINA BURANA on December 6, 1966. The performance will also feature the Atlanta Civic Ballet, and will be conducted by David Van Vactor.

During the Christmas season the Choir helps form the nucleus for the annual presentation of Handel's MESSIAH. The MESSIAH at Maryville is nationally known and draws its audience each year from Tennessee and many adjoining states.

Carnegie Hall in New York City will hear the voices of the Choir for the first time on April 6, 1967. The concert will highlight the Northeastern tour and will be the focal point of a large alumni meeting to be held in the city at that time.

Each year graduation leaves vacancies to be filled in the ranks of the Choir. Auditions for these positions are held in September and a any college student is eligible for membership. Out of the sixty-one voice membership in 1965-66, only one-third of the students were music majors, while twelve major fields were represented in the remaining two-thirds.

In addition to the various special events the Choir performs outside the campus, it remains an integral part of the college life through its participation in daily Chapel services and Vespers each Sunday.

Africa!

Two Maryville students are spending their summer in Africa working on the Crossroads Africa project. Student donations helped to send these two students to work in the Dark Continent. Jack Noel is working in Liberia. He will be helping build a YMCA youth center near Monroevia. Liberia is famous for its rubber production and its six months of heavy rainfall annually. Most of the Liberians speak French, so the Crossroaders have to communicate in this language.

Carol Pusey will help build a youth center in a rural village in Uganda. Uganda is located in East Africa on the northeast corner of Lake Victoria. It is a beautiful country, famous for the Mountains of the Moon and the Queen Elizabeth National Park. Although Uganda is on the equator, it has a mild climate with temperatures ranging from 60 to 85 degrees. Heat and high humidity are prevalent in the jungle areas.

The Crossroaders left in late June and will return in time for school next fall.

Sen. Jennings Randolph of West Virginia received the degree of Doctor of Humane Letters, Harry C. Wood, Executive Secretary, Department of Chaplains and Service Personnel for the United Presbyterian Church in the U.S.A. received the Doctor of Divinity Degree; and Ernest Dustin Mathews, missionary in the States of Yucatan and Campeche in the territory of Quintana Roo in Mexico, received the Doctor of Divinity Degree.

Sen. Randolph, who is a native of West Virginia, has been a journalist, college professor and dean, and member of both the House of Representatives and the Senate. He holds honorary degrees in law from Davis and Elkins College and the University of Pittsburg and a doctorate in the humanities from West Virginia State College. Salem College has awarded him an honorary doctorate in Aeronautical Science.

Wood, a graduate of Maryville College in the Class of 1933, holds the Bachelor of Theology Degree from Princeton Theological Seminary and has done graduate work at Union Theological Seminary. He held a pastorate in West Virginia before he was commissioned as a Chaplain in the United States Navy in 1939.

He holds the Bronze Star Medal for front line service on Iwo Jima, the Presidential Unit Citation, the American Defense Service Medal, and the Asiatic-Pacific Campaign medal with three Bronze Stars.

Mathews, a graduate of Maryville College in the Class of 1935, holds the Bachelor of Divinit Degree and the Master of Theology Degree from Louisville Seminary and has done advanced work in Biblical studies at Indiana University. He held pastorates in the United States briefly before going to Mexico in 1945, and for the past 20 years he and his wife have been missionaries in Mexico. They now live in Merida, Mexico.

Mathews has aided in the translation of the New Testament in Mayan and checked the Maya text with the original Greek. He is now working on a translation of the Old Testament.

Copeland Reports on Board Meeting

by Joan Paul

In a spring chapel service Dr. Copeland announced to the student body plans made by the Board of Directors with essential value to the future of Maryville College. The preceedings of the meeting of the Board included several details of interest to the concerned Maryville student.

Obvious to the eye are the three new dormitories being built on campus, but unknown to many are the minute plans and decisions necessary for this project. Action was taken by the Board to complete and furnish these buildings with power for completion being given to the Administrative Committee. The total finance involved in these three buildings is $2,050,000. Also discussed in relation to the building program were plans for the Science Building which will be an expense of $1,500,000. The plans are in the hands of an architect and he will determine the time for construction and completion.

A tentative working budget for maintaining the college in 1966-67 was adopted. The total suggested budget was $1,700,000, which is the largest in the history of the college. The building program budget was not included here but was reviewed by the Board. It was found that $190,000 alone was spent on the heating plant, new piping, etc., which are of essential value to residences in the winter. While speaking of monetary matters, the Board retired a $200,000 debt on the Chapel during the past year. As can be seen from the given figures, Maryville College is involved in a little "big business" of finance.

The major factor of general interest discussed, deliberated, and approved by the Board was the change to a five-day week of classes, taking effect in the coming year 1966-67. This change will take place on an experimental basis with an evaluation and report drawn up at the conclusion of the year, helping determine the permanence of the change and its effect on future calendar changes. In interviewing Dr. Copeland on this decision by the Board, he felt, "It will be good for all of us to have some time of our own that isn't 'scheduled.' This is a means of enhancing our academic, social, physical education, and religious life and whether it will . . . depends on how we use it." Therefore Maryville College is not only in the middle of financial planning and construction but also taking part in an experiment that enables more freedom in controlling time. The success and future of these three factors initiated by the Board of Directors depend on the concern and support from the faculty, administration, and students.

Young Team Looks to Future

The Roundballers suffered through a long and dismal 3-17 season. Of those games lost, six were by less than 10 points. The team was hurt at the beginning of the year by the loss of Captain Denny McGowan for six games.

Mid-season additions help

At mid-season, which coincided with semester break, the Scots had posted an 0-10 record. They lost Dave Alexander (11.6 point average with 7.5 rebounds per game) and Darrell Maietta (7.6 point average). But the loss was more than atoned for with the addition of Bill Padgett (26.7 points per game with 7.7 rebounds), Jon Hancher (6 points and 8 rebounds per game playing less than half of each contest), and Darrell Stoker (5.5 points, and 4.5 rebounds per game).

Netters Lead Scot's Sports

Tennis proved to be the most successful sport of the 1965-1966 athletic season. Facing very strong opposition, the team posted a 13-2 record. The team consisted of six boys with the addition of one girl.

Padett scores 45

The high point of the season was the second Bryan game where Bill Padgett shot 60% from the floor, putting in 45 points, within 10 of the school record. Senior Captain Denny McGowan closed out four years of excellent basketball with a 10 point average and 7 rebounds per game.

The Scots play a lively brand of basketball, often against teams that are, to a man, taller. The team should do better next year. losing only McGowan to graduation. As it stands now, with only two rising seniors on the squad, the young Scots should work more like a team next year, and reach their peak sometime in the following year.

The Scots played against such worthy opponents as Tennessee Wesleyan, East Tennessee State, Grand Rapids, Michigan, Carson-Newman, Western Carolina, and Emory and Henry. Their only losses were to Tennessee Wesleyan (1-8) and East Tennessee State (4-5). Their many wins were primarily by large scores—never being seriously challenged except in their two losses.

Lynn Howard, a senior, played the first position and posted the best won-loss record. Senior Captain Rich Marshall played second man and teamed up with Howard for the first doubles team. Pete Park, a sophomore, played the number three position. He was paired with freshman Cotton Lambert, the number four man, for the second doubles team. On the third doubles team were freshman Alan Marshall and Senior Bill Gass. Becky Sankner, a sophomore, substituted for either the fifth or sixth man when the occasion demanded.

The team loses three seniors to graduation; nevertheless, they are looking forward to another good year under the leadership of their able coach, Lauren Kardatzke.

Baseball Outlook is Good

The Maryville College baseball team finished the 1966 season with 11 wins and 10 losses. The Scotties had many fine starters this year, some with batting averages over .300. Sonny Hughes, a top-notch catcher, among the top fifteen college players in the nation, had an average of .420. Other baseballers with averages above .300 were Don Payne, Rob Nicholas, John Maietta, and Jon Hancher. Many top freshmen contributed to the team and were outstanding in the team effort. The pitching staff included Rob Nicholas, Jack Llewellyn, and Jon Hancher.

Next years team has a promising future with several returning lettermen. Coach Boydson Baird has high hopes for the Scots who will be facing several tough teams, including rival Carson-Newman and the University of Tennessee.

Matmen Look for Strength

The Maryville Wrestlers gave Coach J. D. Davis a 5-6 record for the 25th anniversary of his first wrestling team. They registered wins against Carson-Newman, Knoxville "Y" and Emory. Once again the Scots proved strong in the lightweight divisions, but, unlike before, there was an added punch in the heavyweight.

Junior Ron Pritts wrestling at 130 lbs., went undefeated for the season with a 10-0 record; then continued his steak through the SEC tournament and came out champion. Sophomore John Henderson was high point man with 39 points and a 9-3 season. He wrestled his way to second place in the SEC Tournament at 123 lbs. Sophomore Capt. Ralph Johnson, the 1965 SEC champ at 137, rose to 143 lbs. and came out this year with an 8-2 record and a broken finger. Sophomore Tom Wylie, wrestling at 137 took a fourth place in the tournament.

The outlook for next year is most promising: the Scots lose no one to graduation. Nevertheless, there is a great need for weight men—especially one who will wrestle unlimited (more than 191 lbs.).

Track Paces 5-6

The 1966 Scot Track Team started weak but finished the season strong. The Scots lost the first four meets then ran over the next three opponents by large scores. They also placed second in two triangular meets.

Standouts for the year included senior Milk Dalton—who set a school record in the triple jump and ran second leg for the record setting 440 yd. relay team. He was also a member of the 880 relay team that holds the school record. Rich Reed, another senior, ran the anchor leg on the mile relay record-setting effort —other members of the team include sophomores Dick Craig, Bob Leach, and Cole Piper. Dick Craig and Bob Leach were also members of the 440 and 880 relay teams. Alan Cropper, a freshman, was the fourth member of the relay teams. Freshman Bob Cooper set records in both the one mile and two-mile run. Bob Leach also set school records in the 330 and 440 yd. intermediate hurdles.

Record set

Records were almost set in the 440 by Dick Craig and in the 880 by Hugh McCampbell—both of whom missed by one-half a second; and in the high jump by sophomore Dean Clark, who missed by 1½ inches; and by freshman Monroe Brown who missed the discus record by less than two feet.

High hopes

The Scots have been stronger in the weight division than ever before—but there is plenty of room for improvement. The prospects for next year are good—but the team desperately needs two good hurdlers. Seniors graduating this year are middle distance men Hugh McCampbell and Rich Reed, Javelin thrower Greg Hallen, hurdler Terry Amon, pole vaulter Denny McGowan, and all around athlete Mike Dalton (relays, dashes, broad jump, triple jump, and high jump).

Gridiron Hopes

The Maryville College Scots, under the leadership of coaches Howard Tomlinson, Lauren Kardatske, and Wilbur Ramsey, are anticipating a fine year in 1966. The Scots have 24 returning lettermen led by co-captains Don Story, a bone-crushing Tackler, and Sonny Webb, an outstanding pass receiver.

The Scots expect to have one of the finest lines in Maryville history, while the backfield may be slightly hindered by lack of experience. The perennially strong defensive contingent will be paced by Story; Bill Carkhuff and Ernie Greeno are two other linebackers who will see lots of action. Up front there will be such stalwarts as John Forgety, a fine 207 pound tackle; Steve Worrell, a strong 210 pounder; Charles Berry, 220 pound standout tackle; and hustling Carl Gehman. The ends will probably be Webb and David Berry, two exceptional defenders. In the defensive secondary will be Steve Dockery, Ray Eaton, and Ralph McCambell, backed up by Jim Heck, Gary Phillips and Dave Ronco.

Maryville's pro-set offense will be be directed by either Harvey Crabtree, and accurate left-handed passer, or John Maietta, a scrambler. At fullback will be Alex Robbins, a devastating runner. Dave Belcher and Steve Byrum are also excellent fullbacks. The tailback post will be filled by hard-running Steve Dockery, or speedy Alan Cropper. Hard blocking Ray Eaton will be at wingback with help from Dave Ronco.

Up front, Don Story will be at center, backed up by Bill Carkhuff and Jim Mullendore. Leading Guard candidates are Joe Dawson, Frank Eggers, and Carl Gehman. Offensive tackles will be John Forgety, Charles Berry, Steve Worrell, and Cole Piper. Ends who are expected to see the most action are Sonny Webb, Gordon Higgins, Dave Berry, and John McLaughlin.

Between sixty and seventy candidates are expected to report in September to help put Maryville at the top of small college football.

Would You Believe All A's?

by Dr. David P. Young

What makes an ideal student? (Would you believe B's?) No, I hope it is safe to assume that we would not believe misty standards such as grades as being the answer to this question. Instead of trying to produce a definitive description of an ideal student I would like to throw out for consideration a few attributes which seem to me to be of fundamental importance. As a result these comments will be more from the point of view of the type of student rather than as to how he learns, how much he knows, or how well he does in classes.

Seek by Questions

It seems to me that the most important distinguishing characteristic of an ideal student is his ability to ask questions. I feel that basically most students on this campus are more concerned with the answers than they are with the questions. But what is the value of knowing an answer? To me the value is that it leads only to one more thing — another question. This is the mode of learning — asking questions. There are obviously many types of questions, and there is much more to questions than just the asking. Unfortunately, I suspect that most questions are of the kind that are seeking a factual answer to a problem for which the asker is either too lazy or too uninspired to find the answer for himself. However, I am concerned here with a different type of question. I am talking about the questions that are asked out of puzzlement over two or more facts or ideas. In other words, the kind that seek to determine or delineate the heart of a problem or to illuminate a relationship. The asker will have some facts at hand, but he doesn't yet see the relationship between them. He needs a question to lead him to an answer. In short you should expect to come to a question with knowledge and to leave it with more knowledge or direction for further questions. Certainly, however, some questions will cause you to seek more facts, but I feel that the efficacy of asking questions is too often missed by potential learners. The ideal student will be asking these kinds of questions of his teachers (and fellow students). And they are just the kind that often embarrass a teacher or send him back to his books or thoughts.

Use time, pace work

Time is essential to all students, and I would suggest that it is even more so to the ideal student. He sees it in a completely different light than most students as he views it as a treasure to cherish and use. Time is important because it is to be used to open doors of all types and sizes and not just the standard sized ones pointed toward in the ordinary classroom learning situation.

It seems to me that there are at least two aspects to this problem of the use of time. In the first place the ideal student will use it to be truly creative. The eternal complaint of all students is that there is never enough time. Unfortunately, this is a problem that cannot be solved because there is just so much time available to each person. Many students keep themselves busy with just that which is required in order to get by in regard to daily assignments. The rest of their time is usually spent unproductively either worrying about not working at the required assignments or guiltily escaping into another activity (which they rationalize as a healthful getting away from it all). In opposition to this concept, the ideal student makes use of his time so that he has some left over from the "requirements" which can then be used to refresh himself in a different creative pattern such as music, reading, thought, productive conversation, hiking, athletics, etc. All of these areas may be totally unreleated to regular assignments, but the particular activity with which this student becomes involved is one which is an integral part of his way of life and not done as an attempt to escape or to avoid another duty. The point is that this type of student can get the "required" done and then have time to be productive in another area which provides him with a broader and deeper outlook and meaning for life.

The second idea concerning time is pace. I would suggest that pace is the ability to organize one's energies so that he is using them at near maximum capacity most of the time. There is a pace to learning, to playing, to concentrating, to creativity, and to every worthwhile activity. For some the pace can reach a furious height as they pursue a topic even to the exclusion of meals and sleep. And then at other times they may pace themselves with less forcefulness. In a real sense, this is the ability to stop and go, both at full speed ahead. The secret of pace is knowing how to get the maximum out of one's energies and abilities in the time available. Pace cannot be taught; it must be acquired by each person in his own way. There are times to concentrate and times to relax. The ideal student can do both with nearly equal vigor.

Look Ahead

There is a meaning to education. If there were not then we all might as well pack our lunches and go to the mountains (which may not be a bad idea anyway). I would suggest that the ideal student will be one who recognizes that meaning and has firmly in mind some values and goals for what he is doing. This is not meant to imply that the ideal student is one who decided at the age of five to be a doctor and then pursued the task with singlemindedness for the next thirty years. Rather I am saying that the ideal student will have a direction to his education. This direction may constantly change, and it should as his values and goals change, but nevertheless, he does have some concept of the long run. Too many people see only to the end of their noses and in their educational pattern take things one at a time — grade school, high school, college, graduate school and then life — that great something out there after one has been educated.

Find your style

As a capstone to this discussion I would like to borrow an idea from Alfred North Whitehead. He once wrote the following: "A merely well-informed man is the most useless bore on God's earth. This suggests to me that the ideal student will not necessarily be the most avid and perpetual gatherer of information, facts, and theories. Rather I am inclined to favor Whitehead's additional suggestion that style is an important mark of an educated man — and in our context, the ideal student. Style is the privilege of the expert and the product of the specialist. It is that attribute which sets the ideal student apart from the norm. It is that special thing that each individual brings to his own work. It is the expression of personal talents in the fashioning of power — creative and forceful in its impact. It is that characteristic which you can attribute to the professional, the one who can do the excellent job. This style is that which makes it so difficult to describe the ideal student. For each one who approximates this ideal brings something of his own self and talents to that ideal — thereby changing it.

The ability to probe with questions, the excellent use of time, pace in learning, a purpose, and an overriding style are some of the marks of an ideal student. What others would you add?

Dr. Campbell first began to collect ideas for the book about two years ago. He began to write it in September, 1964. Last summer it was published by the Westminster Press. At the same time he was beginning to collect ideas for the present book, Dr. Campbell was also thinking about a defense of the liberal arts college, on which he is still working. He is very emphatic about the importance of the liberal arts college and feels that its function is more important today than ever before.

Debate Team Offers Opportunities

by Sherry Proffitt

If you like travel, excitement, eating out, staying in nice (?) motels, meeting exciting people, and intellectual challenge, answer this call for help! There are certain qualifications which you may think that you must possess to answer which you really do not have to have at all: you do not have to have a 4.0; you do not have to be able to speak proficiently right now; you do not have to be rich (i.e. you do not have to finance your own trips); and you do not have to be a windbag. To put it simply, the debate team needs new members next year and we are inviting you to talk to Dr. Walker (who really is a lot of fun, if you like that sort of thing) or any of the members of the debate team and find out what a debate team really is in spite of its image. It is challenging and rewarding, else I would not have stuck with it for four years. Moby likes it even — he says he wishes he had started as a freshman! But the problem is that Moby is leaving, along with two other seniors, and we need other students to fill the ranks. If the first sentence of this "plea" appeals to you, at least inquire about the possibilities of joining. Are we puttin' you on?

Ode To An Institution

by Dave Powell

In America the humble college dormitory stands as a living monument to the ravages of baser intellectualism. Time and countless epigrams are etched in its ageless scum-green wall. Scars of hard-fought battles streak its homely facade. Deep in its heart outmoded washing machines rumble on into the night. Aimless feet track the mud of earthy adventures through its ever-open doors. Ceaseless oaths echo down refuse-strewn halls, and the pitiful few who seek knowledge must escape to a barren study room — a room tantalizingly close to sticky Coke machines and guitar strumming goof-offs. Show me the soul who can resist that temptation.

The college dormitory is a loosely tied bundle of cyclic cliches— water balloons, Chinese fire drills, firecrackers, weekly search for the sacrificial victim to appease the gods of the fishpond, apple and orange flings, toilet paper decorations, furniture removals, door removals, banshee scream imitations, hall light globe fallings and crashings, house mother hatings, bridge tournaments, ping-pong tournaments, dog chasing tournaments, crowding the mailbox stuffer, proctor evasions and bike borrowings.

From the rooftop sunbather to the solitary stoop sitter, the lifeblood of the dorm is people — residing people, visiting people, tired people, loud people, machine filling people, newspaper delivering people, couple people, single people, sneakered people, shirtless people, greasy people, watchman people — all shapes, sizes, races and denominators and no two alike though some alove.

Cold in winter, hot in summer, noisy always, never complaining, unbigoted, staunch and proud it stands. Home to the homeless, hideout of wandering minstrels, defender against the elements, keeper of secrets and friendships, heritage for generations of roaches, please no smoking in your room, and guardian of fermenting knowledge — quietly serves the dorm.

And quietly the inmates accept growth, change, fate, failure, loneliness, mononucleosis and cold showers. Gradually an older and wiser, if not more confused, individual comes to realize that his dorm has been but one more home on the journey, and in nesting there he has learned to love it, and leave it after four years with a stronger constitution and no regrets.

Immortal dorms we love you.

This year's birds are good as last; so the squirrels. Do only people worsen?

Playhouse Season Announced

The Maryville College Playhouse announced another exciting and dramatic season for the coming year. This past year Eugene O'Neill's Mourning Becomes Electra, George Bernard Shaw's Androcles and the Lion and a musical, The Sound of Music were presented. In addition a film festival was presented by the theatre department. During the past year the MC Playhouse was the recipient of several awards for its outstanding work. The Playhouse is indeed proud and grateful for its fine director, Mr. Tom Jones.

Next year the Playhouse will present Thornton Wilder's Our Town on October 21-22. On December 9-10 a movie, Hans Christian Anderson will be shown. In March Jean Anouilh's Becket will be presented, and on May 12 and 13, and on May 30 during Commencement, Robert Anderson's The Days Between will be performed before being released to a Broadway theatre in New York.

Campus Gets Face-Lift

Upgrading of facilities for looks and increased efficiency, plus routine maintenance, provided a changed and more attractive aspect in many areas of the Maryville College campus as the students returned this fall.

The Library in Thaw Hall underwent the greatest change. An additional floor was added in the stack area to add many square feet to the stack space, and old partitions were torn out and new ones built to make the work areas of the Library larger and more efficient. The extremely high ceiling with clearstory windows in the stack area allowed for the construction of a mezzanine floor which is supported by structural steel extending to the basement in order to hold the weight of the books on the shelves. Additional work in the basement, taking in most of what was the College Maid Shop, gives the Library still more storage space and study area. Almost every book in the Library had to be moved for the new arrangements, the Librarian, Miss Virginia Turrentine, said. However, the new arrangement will be much more convenient, especially for the periodicals and reference works. There is a separate check-out desk for periodicals and the main desk is used for books and reserved publications.

The work in the basement provides for adequate storage of the Library's extensive newspaper files plus an additional 24 carrels which increases the study area capacity. When the work is finished, the Elizabeth Gowdy Baker art collection will also have new quarters for permanent display.

The remodeling will leave the central lobby area in the Library much more open, while the reading room arrangement will stay much the same.

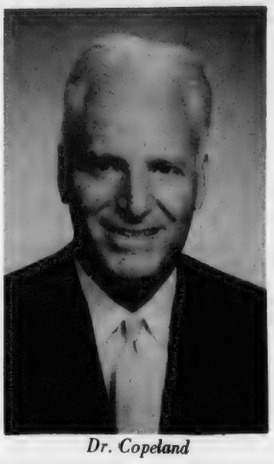
Other work in Thaw includes a new floor and stairs in the lobby outside the Library, new front doors, and new light fixtures in the lobby and outside. In addition, a newly renovated office and classroom are being provided for the Education Department in the classroom section of the building on the second floor.

languuage lab installed

In the dormitories, Memorial has been repainted outside and extensive painting and renovation done inside. All the hallways have been repainted in Carnegie, and the apartment where the new Dean of Men now lives has been extensively remodeled. In Pearsons, carpeting is being installed on the second-floor hallways and in the society rooms. A new range and ovens and deep fat fryers have been installed in the kitchen.

The third floor of Anderson Hall has almost a completely new look after extensive work done to provide for the new language laboratory. The work has included construction of a number of new faculty offices, remodeling of classrooms, and opening up one large room for the language laboratory. New ceilings and floors and new lighting have been installed throughout. The language laboratory has been fitted out with the latest electronic equipment, with 48 student stations and a control console which will allow the language faculty to use the newest techniques for language instruction.

In the central campus area, three new aluminum poles and lights have been installed with underground wiring leading to them. Mercury vapor lights have been used throughout. New walks have been built around the new dormitories, with new roadways for the service entrances. Existing campus roads, damaged by heavy construction equipment, were also repaved.



"Why, I hardly knew the place!" mused one upperclassman.

Gresham to Give Trumpet Recital

The opening Faculty Recital of the 1966-67 Fine Arts program will be by Jonathan Gresham on Friday, September 30, at 8:15 p.m. in the Music Hall of the Fine Arts Center. Gresham, who plays the trumpet, will be accompanied by Robert John Bonham, pianist and member of the music faculty.

Gresham, who is the director of the Highlander Band this year, will play the Haydn Concerto for trumpet, a Hindemith sonata, the "Concert Etude" by Alexander Goedicke, and Handel's "Sonata for Trumpet." The program will also include two pieces for Renaissance instruments transcribed for the modern trumpet by the soloist.

President Leads Founder's Day

Dr. Copeland

In commemoration of the 147th year of Maryville College, on Tuesday, September 27, the student body, faculty and administration gathered for the annual Founder's Day and Convocation. After referring to the obvious disappointment—in light of Dean Rusk being here last year—because a political disagreement had prevented the college from getting the President of the United States we would have to settle for "another" President, Dr. Copeland made the address.

President Copeland spoke about the role of the church-related liberal arts college, saying that there must be a reconciliation of the best possible education with the conservation of basic human values. "Being a liberal arts college compels us to deal with knowledge and human values . . . there can be no separation between mind and spirit."

Know believingly

He also stated that any college that neglected either of these qualities—knowledge or human values—was not being true to itself. A college must have a philosophy of education and a faculty that is willing to pursue it; a student body committed to learn; and a church allowing the college the freedom to inquire.

Dr. Copeland ended his address with a paraphrase of Harvard President Nathan Pusey: "Believe knowingly, and know believingly."

New Faces on Faculty

Ten full-time new faculty members and five who will be teaching part time, plus a new Dean of Men, an Admissions Counselor, and four new housemothers have joined the College faculty and staff this fall. In addition, Dan Kinsinger will be returning to the music faculty after a two-year leave for work on his advanced degree in music at the University of Illinois.

New members of the faculty include Dr. James O. Swain, Visiting Professor of French; Mr. F. Mark Davis, Assistant Professor of English, who will receive the PhD from Duke in August; Dr. Clarence A. Carder, Professor and Chairman of the Department of Education; Dr. Charles B. Blair, Jr., Professor of Biology; and Mr. James F. Corlett, Instructor in Art.

Other full-time faculty members will be Mr. David R. Cartlidge, Assistant Professor of Bible and Religion now completing advanced study for the ThD degree at Harvard Divinity School; Mrs. Ned Sherer, Assistant Professor of Education; Mrs. Raymond W. Beck, Instructor in English; Miss Sharon J. Matti, Instructor in English; and Mr. W. Jonathan Gresham, Instructor in Music.

Part-time members of the faculty will be Mrs. Robert D. Proffitt teaching speech and coaching the debate squad, Robert C. Clark teaching mathematics, Mrs. Denny E. Mobbs teaching history, and Rev. Raydn O. White teaching Greek, and Mr. John Mitchell teaching English.

Dr. Swain is former Professor and Head of the Department of Romance Languages at the University of Tennessee. He holds the BA and MA from Indiana University and the PhD from the University of Illinois. Dr. Swain has taught at the University of Kentucky and at Appalachian State Teachers College. During the past summer he traveled in South America to gather materials for a book he is writing on a Chilean author. Dr. Swain is the author of many magazine and other articles and is the author or co-author of one French and three Spanish textbooks.

Mr. Davis, who is a graduate of William Jennings Bryan College and holds the MA from the University of Tennessee, comes to Maryville from Northwestern College at Minneapolis, Minn., where he was Assistant Professor of English and Dean of Students.

Dr. Carder, a graduate of Tusculum College, holds the ThM from Southern Baptist Seminary and the EdD from the University of Tennessee. He will direct the teacher education program at Maryville, with particular emphasis on secondary education. Dr. Carder comes to Maryville from Carson-Newman College,

Lettermen Concert Next Friday Night

The Lettermen, three young men who can take a song that was a hit 20 years ago and make it a hit all over again, are coming to Maryville College October 7. They will perform in the Chapel at 8:15 p.m. under the sponsorship of the Student Council.

The trio, now one of the most successful groups in the country, have recorded more than a dozen hit singles and albums, including "The Way You Look Tonight," "When I Fall in Love," "Once Upon a Time," "Silly Boy," "Again," "Theme 'From a Summer Place' " and others.

The successful records established a demand for the group on television and in colleges throughout the country. They were voted the No. 1 college attraction in a Billboard Magazine poll, and they have appeared recently on television on the Red Skelton Show, Hollywood Palace, and with Jack Benny, Ed Sullivan, Dean Martin, Sammy Davis, Jr., and with many others.

The Lettermen concert is part of the Homecoming activities on the Maryville College campus this year.

Photographs by Roy E. Lindahl of Drayton Plains, Mich., are now on exhibit in the Art Gallery of the Fine Arts Center. The photographer is the father of Roy E. Lindahl, Jr., Assistant Professor of Classical Languages and Bible at the College, who is on leave this year for further study. The pictures will remain on display for the rest of the month, William H. Swenson, head of the Art program, said.

The photographs are black and white, and mostly of nature subjects. They have been shown in a number of exhibits in the United States since 1950.

Parker Receives Doctorate

Russell D. Parker, member of the history faculty received the Ph.D. in history from the University of Tennessee. Dr. Parker is a graduate of Lincoln Memorial University and holds the master's degree in history from U-T. He came to the Maryville faculty from Knoxville after extensive teaching experience in public schools.

Playhouse Season Announced

The Maryville College Playhouse presentations for the year have been announced by Director Thomas E. Jones. Three plays and one special motion picture showing are scheduled.

The first play will be Oct. 21 and 22 and will be Thornton Wilder's "Our Town." The Playhouse will use a new staging approach to this American classic, giving the play an element of universality.

On Dec. 9 and 10 the motion picture "Hans Christian Andersen" with Danny Kaye will be shown, with a special matinee for school children.

Jean Anouihl's "Becket" will be produced March 17 and 18.

And the final play of the year will be Meredith Wilson's "The Music Man" on May 12 and 13 and for the Commencement Play May 30.

Students Nominated for Drama Awards

Nine Maryville College student actors and actresses have been nominated for the annual Malcolm Miller Awards to be presented Oct. 1 at 8 p.m. at the University of Tennessee Music Building Auditorium. The students are William Klingener, Keith Jones, Andrew Ruhlin, Harold Laster, Diane Caylor, Nancy Vann, Sue Anthony, Ibbie Ann Jack, and Margaret Miller. Each took part in recent Maryville College Playhouse productions under the direction of Thomas E. Jones.

EDITORIAL OUTLOOK

Happiness is old friends, chapel, favorite (and some not-so-favorite) profs, conflicting schedules, and even short tempers and long lines.

Happiness is an armload of books, waiting in line at the Treasurer's Office, running down the stretch to beat the bell before chapel.

Happiness is a bull session at 1:00 am, a Coke at the student center, and helping the "green frosh" get adjusted—and remembering when you first arrived.

Happiness is a crowded hallway, a heap of coats and umbrellas outside a classroom, a friendly smile—even on a dreary day.

Happiness is a term paper, or outside reading or—would you believe—independent studies.

Happiness can ever be a thoughtful question or a well-thought answer, looking forward to finals, and, of course, comps.

But most of all, happiness is being challenged, confused, frustrated, disappointed, elated, and knowing that it is here that YOU belong.

Scots Drop Opener

Playing before a wet homecrowd, the Scots of Maryville dropped their first game to the Lynx of Southwestern of Memphis by a score of 5-0. The statistics put Maryville in the lead in every regard but the score. Maryville outgained Southwestern 198 yards to 178 yards.

SOUTHWESTERN SCORES

The first Southwestern score came early in the second quarter. Driving from their own 33 yard line, the Lynx were finally stopped on the Scot 14. From that point Randall Mullins kicked a field goal. A second field goal attempt late in the same period failed—leaving the halftime score 3-0 in favor of the Lynx.

In the third quarter Maryville, in a third down situation from their own 6, decided to kick. The hike from center sailed over punter Dave Garner's head and out of the end zone for a two-point safety.

SCOTS DRIVE

The fourth quarter proved to be the most exciting of the game. The Scot defense was holding, and, late in the fourth quarter, it looked like the offense was finally clicking. Freshman quarterback Sullivan passed to Sonny Webb. The Lynx defender almost intercepted but instead deflected the ball into Webb's hands. Sonny ran to the 5 before being brought down.

With first and goal from the five, the Scots looked like they were in a good position to score—the stands came alive. On the first play, Kleim ran to the right side of the line for one yard. Garner then ran to the left side for no gain. A pass from Sullivan to Berry was incomplete — the ball knocked down at the last minute by the Lynx defender. On fourth down, Maietta threw a similar pass to Berry, but this one was intercepted on the 3.

The Lynx kept the ball for two plays. Then, on third down, they kicked from inside the 5. A short kick by Bill Hendrick gave the Scots another chance with a first and 10 from the 34. With one minute to go, Crabtree passed to Webb for 15 yards. But the next three passes, alternating between Webb and Garner, were incomplete. On fourth down Lynn Dodez ran for 4 yards up the middle, but the ball went over to the Lynx who proceeded to run out the clock with two plays.

Sox 'n Sneakers

In spite of the early monsoon season, W.A.A. has managed to begin its first fall sports—field hockey and tennis. The first field hockey game should prove to be interesting due to the enthusiasm coupled with inexperience of many players.

Tennis will begin as soon as someone manages to set up workable singles and doubles tournaments. There will also be a mixed doubles tournament??? (Congratulations Becky and Pete for signing up.)

A volleyball team consisting of only the best will be heading to East Tennessee State University in November. Here's hoping the traditional losing streak is broken.

The "M" Club will be retreating to Cades Cove this week-end to re-examine, reorganize, and replan this year's intramural program.

John also announced that the Junior Class must have a meeting to complete their slate of Council representatives.

Tex Harris, chairman of the Organizations Committee, reported that the Inter-Society Council had met and drawn some rules concerning the actions to be taken before Rush Week. The regular Friday night parties (notice the change from Thursday) at the society houses will be open to the freshmen on alternate weeks. Freshmen watch for announcements! Each society can invite the freshmen to one weekly meeting, and the freshmen are more than welcome to play on an intramural team of any of the societies. Freshmen are not allowed to work on any society float, and any violation of this ruling will be brought before the Student Council. There is a Freshman float that will need plenty of help.

Al Cropper, Programs Committee, announced that the ticket sale for the Lettermen is going well. He also reported that he is trying to keep in touch with interesting events in the Maryville-Knoxville area and will post a schedule of events in a central place on campus.

Rob Nicholas has the new MSG constitution ready for Student Council's approval. It is a change for the men's government and is similar to the organization of WSGA.

The UCCF is planning a retreat sometime in October.

Student Council thanks Dan Mitchell for his work as editor of the Student Activities Calendar. A fine job!

Scots Swamped By Georgetown

Georgetown College took its twelfth straight victory by defeating the Scots 28—6. The Scots now have a string of 13 consecutive winless games.

Georgetown was in complete command, its offense piling up almost 350 yards while its defense held Maryville to a mere 83.

Georgetown scored in the first period on an 8-yard pass from Stevens to Gallaher. Seals added the extra point. In the second period Georgetown scored again on a spectacular 53-yard run.

Maryville came alive late in the second quarter and showed signs of trying to stay in the game when freshman Paul Johnson took a punt on his own 47 yard-line and ran for a touchdown—53 yards total. The kick for the extra point failed. At halftime the score was 14—6.

In the third quarter Georgetown, looking very impressive, buried the Scots as they hit for two quick touchdowns and then clamped down on the Scot offense for the rest of the game.

Forward, Etc.

by Lib Doran

A special meeting of the Student Council was called on September 30 at 7:30 p.m. The dining room situation and the Thanksgiving holiday (what Thanksgiving holiday??) were discussed at length. Each council member threw in his own personal joke or philosophy on these two topics and eventually the business at hand was discusssed. Jim Reynolds, Doug Gamble, Al Cropper, Tom Marston, Lib Doran, Dave (Tex) Harris, Craig Rigell, and John Wolfe were elected as representatives to the Student-Faculty Senate. The other item of business was the approval by Student Council of the new MSG constitution. This was done by a unanimous vote of the members present.

October 4, 1966

7:30 p.m.
John Mulholland called the meeting to order and led in a short devotional.

In Concert Tonight: The Lettermen

Homecoming, when alumni make a nostalgic return to the Alma Mater, is being held this weekend with a parade, football game, and the traditional Alumni Barbecue.

The festivities will get under way tonight with a concert by The Lettermen, popular recording and television group, in the College Chapel. Their appearance is being sponsored by the Maryville College Student Council.

Alumni will register starting at 9 a.m. in the Chapel Colonnade on Saturday, and the Homecoming Parade through downtown Maryville will get under way at 10:30 a.m. The parade will have floats constructed by campus organizations and will be led by the Highlander Band directed by Jonathan Gresham. A number of area high school bands have been invited to participate.

Game time for the Homecoming football game with Emory & Henry is 2:20 p.m. on Honaker Field, with a special halftime show and crowning of the Homecoming Queen.

The Alumni Barbecue will be held on the baseball field at 5:30 p.m. A special presentation by the Maryville College Playhouse, a reading of parts of the "Spoon River Anthology" will be presented in the Theatre at 7:30 p.m., and the Homecoming Dance for students and alumni will be at 8:30.

The Alumni Executive Board, which deals with College-Alumni relations, will meet at 7 p.m. on Friday and again at 9 a.m. Saturday.

College Council Meets on Maryville Campus

The Mid-Appalachia College Council, Inc., an organization of 13 area colleges, met on Friday, September 30 on the college campus. The presidents of the institutions, deans, members of science faculties, librarians and representatives for artists and lecture series were included in the sessions.

Colleges which are members of the council are Cumberland, Pikeville, and Union in Kentucky, Emory & Henry in Virginia, Carson-Newman, King, Knoxville, Lincoln Memorial University, Maryville, Milligan, Morristown, and Tusculum in Tennessee, and Warren Wilson in North Carolina.

The council has been formed so the colleges can cooperate in the use of their resources and in obtaining Federal or foundation funds. The council has a $15,000 grant from the Danforth Foundation, and a representative of the foundation, Dr. W. Max Wise, Director of the Danforth Graduate Fellowship Program, met with the representatives.

Areas of cooperation include summer school programs, the sharing of library resources, a joint biological station which is now being set up on Norris Lake, and joint use of artists and lecturers.

Corlett Art Shown

An exhibit of the paintings and prints by James Corlett, member of the Art Department faculty is being shown in the Art Gallery of the Fine Arts Center beginning Oct. 6.

Corlett joined the Maryville faculty this fall after graduate work at Tulsa University and doing his undergraduate work at Oklahoma State University.

A reception at 8:15 p.m. last evening opened the show, and all of the work on display is for sale.

Dottie Sansbury Elected Homecoming Queen

Dottie Sansbury, a senior art major, has been chosen by the student body to be the Queen of the 1966 Homecoming festivities. Dottie was chosen from among five candidates in an election on October 3. Nominations were made by a meeting of the student body on Thursday, September 29, in which seventeen girls were nominated and five chosen to be the final candidates.

The court for the Queen will be four senior girls: Alice Leeth, Fran Lantz, Tina Lundstedt, and Paula Nielson.

The Queen will be crowned during the halftime of the football game.

Former President Returns To Campus

Maryville College President Emeritus and Mrs. Ralph W. Lloyd, who now live in Bradenton, Fla., arrived on the Maryville campus Monday September 26. Dr. Lloyd has been commissioned to prepare a new history of Maryville College for the Sesquicentennial in 1969 and will be doing preliminary work on the new voluume.

Dr. and Mrs. Lloyd were the guests of Maryville President and Mrs. Copeland at Morningside, and he led Chapel on Tuesday morning.

Dr. Lloyd, President of Maryville College from 1930 to 1961, was honored during Commencement ceremonies in the spring of 1965, when an endowed teaching position, the Ralph W. Lloyd Chair of Philosophy and Religion, was named in his honor. The Chair was established by the College's Board of Directors, and $100,000 has been placed in the fund by the Board. The fund will eventually reach $500,000 and will enable the College to employ an outstanding scholar and teacher in the field of philosophy and religion.

Some of the income from the investment will also be used to set up a special lecture series to bring other leaders in philosophy and theology to the campus.

Dr. Lloyd will be making trips to Maryville from time to time in the future as work progresses on the historical volume.

EDITORIAL OUTLOOK

This past week many persons—college students, businessmen, factory workers, housewives, and those in the outer limits of a "lost generation"—all alike, have been witnesses to one of the most degrading and shameful episodes in American political history. Who would have thought—no, even dared to speculate—that a fiery segregationist who had received a super-abundance of scorn from all fifty states would now be the Democratic candidate for governor of one of the Southern states?

Most every one remembers a few years ago when Lester Maddox, then a high-spirited restaurant owner in Atlanta, defied a Federal court order to desegregate his restaurant. Many agreed with his position that anyone operating a business had the right to serve whom he desired—but could not agree with his policy of racial discrimination. Some even applauded—silently or other wise—when Mr. Maddox, rather than obey the court order, willingly closed his place of business. But there was a far greater number who looked with disgust on what had happened to human rights and dignity in Atlanta, Georgia. Now, a great segment from those two widely diverged groups have met on common ground and have just recently witnessed the results of bigotry and enmity.

Perhaps the question arises, "Will the state of Georgia rise—or rather, sink—along with the fiascos of Mississippi and Alabama?" or "How could this state, which apparently was making such good headway in the struggle to assure the civil rights to all its citizens, pull itself back into a cave where everyone stumbles over his own sholaces in the darkness? Perhaps only the electorate can decide what it wants for its own government.

What does this have to do with the "average student" at Maryville College, snuggled back in the foothills of the Chilhowee mountains where all are equal? Outside of a few students from that state, what does the political scene in another state have to do with little ol' unbiased and complacent you and me? Perhaps the moral—if that could possibly be the right word—of the story is to never feel that a reactionary group or candidate whose whole policy is based on the fallacious theory that one race, viz. WASP, is superior to any other could wrench political control out of the hands of reason and moderation. But whatever the result of the future election, for the present, people across the country are looking on with embarassment and shame. Maybe we will realize that the road ahead is still long and steep.

In an attempt to keep the lines of communication open between the administration and the students, the editor recently talked to President Copeland about a matter which concerns every student of the college. In response to several complaints, questions, and rumors, it was felt that the students, should know what is going on in the dining room. This is what Dr. Copeland had to say . . .

Many of the students are wondering why the college dining room has changed from the family style meals, which it had always used in the past, to a buffet style. We realize that many students, upper-classmen especially, prefer the family style meals. However, this was no longer practical . . .

There are now more students (888 to be exact) and more iving in the dorms and eating in the dining room than ever before (approx. 90%). It was no longer feasible to continue as we had done before . . .

Last year was a period of experimentation and evaluation: two separate eating periods were used. But this was too rigid and not satisfactory. It cost more money to feed each student; and the shifting of eating times by individual students caused an undue burden since the dining room was set up for a certain number each period . . .

The reason for changing to the buffet style meals was an attempt to allow the student to eat at any time he choses. A cafeteria was considered, but the total cost ($30,000) was impractical in the present building . . .

Because of the messiness of the present buffet meals and because of the desire of most students to have at least one meal family style each day, it was decided to make the evening meal family style and have two periods, 5:30 and 6:15. This will already be in effect when the paper comes out, but it is important to stress that its success or failure depends on the students' responsibility to eat at his assigned period and not shift to the other period . . .

We hope that this will be more satisfactory.

Marty Frazier Elected Sweetheart

Xi Rho Chapter (Phi Mu Alpha Sinfonia), a men's music fraternity, was chartered on February 5, 1966. The fraternity is a professional organization with the purpose of perpetuating music of all types.

One of the traditions of the fraternity is to elect a sweetheart. This year, the brothers of Xi Rho Chapter have elected Miss Marty Frazier as their sweetheart.

Marty is a senior elementary education major from Knoxville, Tennessee. Having been active in choir for the past three years, she has gone on tour, sung in the Madrigals, and studied voice. She has also been active in theatre and the opera workshop.

After graduate school, Marty plans to teach. She is now secretary of SNEA. Marty will represent the fraternity tomorrow in the Homecoming parade and throughout the year.

What's to come out of all this — a new student council constitution. A meeting Monday morning at 7:45.

PEP: Ralph Johnson. Plans are moving well for the best Homecoming yet at Maryville College. A reminder — Dress for the game is Sunday dress! The Freshman boys, pardon me, MEN will be asked to form a funnel at the beginning of the game. Be prepared.

ORGANIZATIONS: Tex Harris. Who's Who elections are coming up soon. This committee will meet at a time to be announced next week.

PROGRAMS: Al Cropper. Only a few tickets left for The LETTERMEN!! Now considering the Town Criers from Georgia Tech for November 25.

SOCIAL: Jenny Jett. One open date for a dance after the football game — October 15.

ACADEMIC: Doug Gamble. Working on a student teacher-rating program. Also any other phases of academic life on campus.

NEW BUSINESS:

Keep an open mind about the dining room!!!

Girls should be careful when going to town at night. Some girls have been accosted and it could be a serious problem.

Frank Eggers brought up the problem of smoke in the Student Center. Student Council will see what can be done about getting an air purifier or some such thing to eliminate the smog.

John Mulholland attended a meeting of the Tennessee State Student Legislature last weekend at Vanderbilt. Maryville College is one of the 10 schools represented in the Legislature and can send 2 senators and 2 representatives to the Legislature meeting on November 18 and 19.

Frank Eggers is interested in seeing Dr. Calerone of the Sex Education Information Council of the United States come to Maryville College as a lecturer. She had a 5-page spread recently in Look magazine and Doug Price says it is better than Playboy ever did.

Whop the Wasps

Forever

by Jim Gifford

It was amazing how little things had changed since he'd been gone. It had only been two years since he'd left the campus — two years; it could well have been two lifetimes. The breeze blew in his face; it reminded him of the day when he'd left her — it made him stop and think how all his physical sensations and all his memories linked him to her. Her smile was the light of his life, the one pure, sparkling spot in, what could have otherwise been, a very dull existence. And yet, when he had stood there with her that last day, his future was bright. He had graduate school to look forward to, and look forward he did. He was a throwback to the old days; he loved to learn. He had often told himself, in the days before he left, that, were he as smart as she was beautiful, he might well be conceded a Ph.D.

And so they had stood there — she, eager for him to find his dreams and fulfill his potentialities — yet more sorry to see him go than she'd ever been in her life; he, eager to go and search and find and grow and succeed — yet more sorry to leave her than he'd ever been in his life; for she was his dream and with her — her just being there, her smiles, . . . holding hands, warm kisses — her, her, her, — he knew he could do it all. Life was a flower to be picked at his leisure.

How rudely awakened they'd both been when the draft call came — patriotism wasn't lost in him — or her — Yet . . . it just didn't seem fair — not them. Why God?

But that was long ago . . . Still he drifted across the campus, seeing things in a new light — cherishing things which before had been taken for granted, and, almost as if in a dream, she was there . . . walking alone down those quiet, leaf-strewn sidewalks, kicking her way along like a little girl — lost in a dream.

Suddenly, she felt his presence and looked up and smiled — yet the smile was only momentary — for none of her daydreams could ever make her forget the day that she'd read the words "missing in action."

Yet the smile was enough, in that one instant when he'd looked upon her smiling face, a thousand lights had flashed and angels sang, and God — merciful, omniscient, all powerful and all wise God — called home a dead soldier who could never have been happy, even in Heaven, had he not seen her smile — once more — forever.

The difference between an Irish wedding and an Irish funeral?— One less drunk.

Scots Shut Out Lions

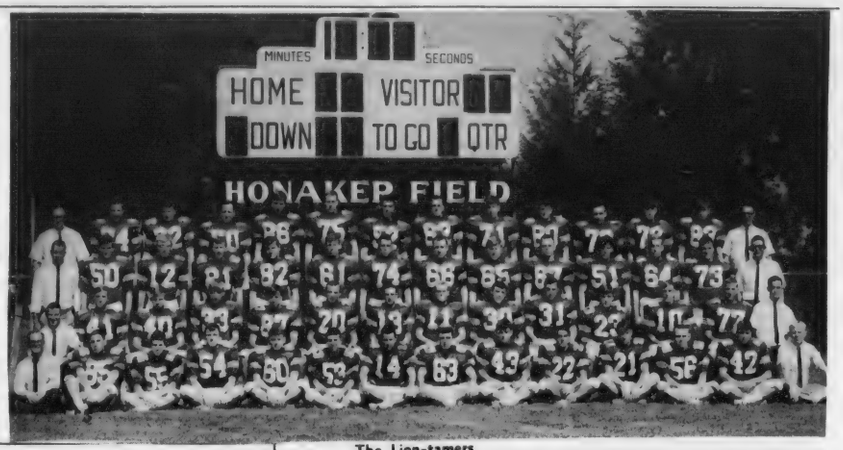
The Maryville College Scots chalked up its first victory in 14 attempts by downing the Mars Hill Lions 17-0 last Saturday. Now boasting a 1-2 record, the Scots are preparing for the annual Homecoming game, on Saturday, this year against the Emory and Henry Wasps of Emory, Virginia.

The victory last Saturday was impressive, with very few mistakes made by the Scots. Coach Tomlinson, when asked to name a few of the standouts, said, "It was a team effort; all should be named as standouts."

Maryville started the scoring in the first quarter. With the ball on their own 20, the Scots moved 80 yards, going across the goal line on a 5 yard run by Freshman quarterback Jimmy Sullivan. Jimmy Cannon added the point-after-touchdown.

Scots lead at half

In the second period, another freshman, Wally Saz, recovered a Lion fumble on the Mars Hill 18 yard line. Two plays later, Paul Johnson switched fields, broke a few tackles and scampered 15 yards for the second score. Cannon once again kicked the extra point.



The third period passed without a score, but in the fourth quarter, Wally Saz intercepted a pass and set the stage for the Scots final score. After three plays, the Scots settled for a field goal from the 17 yard line by Jimmy Cannon. A later attempt for a field goal failed because of a bad hike from center and the general wet condition of the ground.

Players recognized

Even though this was a great team effort, special recognition should be given to Co-captain Sonny Webb for his all around playing (which included catching three passes for 59 yards), to Jimmy Sullivan for his outstanding job at quarterback, to Paul Johnson, Alex Robins and Lynn Dodez for their finerunning game, to Co-captain Don Story and Walter Saz for their excellent play of the line, and to the entire defensive team. Coach Tomlinson also added a word of thanks for the support of the team given by the band and the spectators who travelled from Maryville to see the game.

Qualifications for New Society Rigid

Something new has been added to the regular activities around campus this year. It is the organization of the Maryville College Married Students Society. It has been initiated to welcome newly married couples to Maryville College and to help them establish themselves in the community. Aside from the social benefits of this new group it will also serve as a sounding board when any special problem arises between the married student and his or her studies.

Mrs. E. C. Thomas, wife of the Dean of Men, will be the sponsor.

The next meeting will be held on October 8th and will be a pot-luck supper held after the football game and before the Homecoming Dance.

Any interested students may contact Mrs. Thomas or Linda Cleasby at 982-8639.

MC Becomes Charter Member of Tennessee Intercollegiate State Legislature

by John Mulholland

Meeting at Nashville, capital of the State of Tennessee, students representing ten Tennessee colleges and universities gathered on th campus of Vanderbilt University for the first meeting of this academic year of the Tennessee Intercollegiate State Legislature on October 2, 1966. Students representing Austin Peay State College, East Tennessee State, Middle Tennessee State, Milligan College, Peabody College, Tennessee Tech, U. of Chattanooga, U-T, Vanderbilt, and Maryville made this first meeting quite a success.

With a proposed Constitution before us we concentrated our efforts on revising that document so that it might be a workable tool for the use of the Legislature. The better part of three hours was spent in this way, but this was no wasted time for the whole concept of this intercollegiate legislature was involved in the discussion. Completing our work on the constitution, we turned our thoughts to planning for the first meeting of the Legislature in the State Capitol on November 18 and 19. As a part of those plans, we elected provisional officials — Governor, Phil Moffitt, U-T; President of the Senate, Conrad Slate, Tennessee Tech; and Speaker of the House, Charles Bone, Vanderbilt.

Initiated last spring due to the diligent efforts of U-T student Phil Moffitt, the Tennessee Intercollegiate State Legislature was conceived. Using his own money, Phil corresponded with a great number of the colleges and universities in Tennessee in attempting to get this off the ground. With a slightly disappointing response last spring in a meeting only representing three schools, Phil was still convinced of the possibilities and planned the meetings this fall.

Purposes recognized

Assisting Phil has been Dr. Douglas Carlisle, professor at U-T and advisor in organizing intercollegiate legislatures in South Carolina, Pennsylvania, Michigan and now Tennessee.

Embodied in the Constitution are these statements as to the purpose of this organization: (1). To provide an intercollegiate agency in which students can learn and practice parlaimentary procedure; (2). To provide an intercollegiate agency in which students can learn the operation and practical problems of state government; (3). To provide an agency for leadership training; (4). To provide an agency through which student representatives in the several colleges in Tennessee can meet and know each other; (5). To provide an agency through which the students can be represented and through which they can express their views on the problems and issues that are current in a responsible manner; (6). To provide an oganization that is essentially a student group that is composed of and conducted by college students; (7). To provide an agency in which student ability and character will be represented and demonstrated at its best."

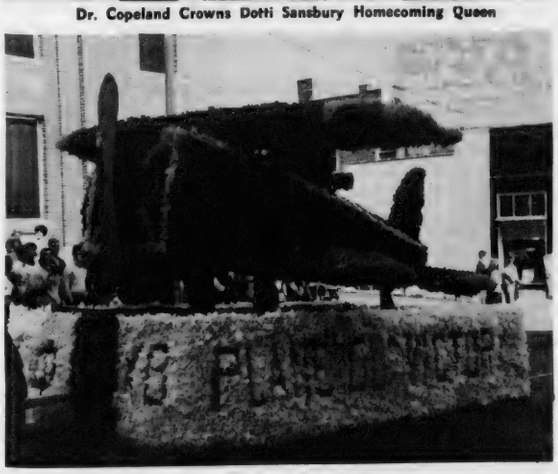
Kinsinger Gives Recital

Dan Kinsinger, tenor and Assistant Professor of Music presented a Faculty Recital in the Music Hall of the Fine Arts Center Friday, Oct. 14. Kinsinger has just returned to the faculty after two years of study at the University of Illinois.



He was accompanied by Mrs. Sallie W. Schoen on the piano and by student Bill Rumsey on the oboe. The oboe was used for a presentation of the "Quonian" from the Bach Mass in G Major for tenor, oboe, and continuo.

Other highlights of the program were the aria "O Soave Vision" from the opera "Edgar" by Puccini, along with music by Mazart, Brahms, Schumann, Pierne, Suzlc, Poulenc, Faure, and Rorem.

At the University of Illinois, Kinsinger has just finished studying voice under the renowned teacher Bruce Foote and under voice coaches Paul Ulanowsky and Eric Dalheim.

The Winning Float: Plane Ol' Victory

Homecoming is Best Yet!

The year's Homecoming Week end was said to be, by both students and faculty alike, the best and most enjoyable one to date.

Appearing in the Chapel on Friday evening, October 7, were the Lettermen. After the Wilson Brown Trio had opened the show, the Lettermen came on stage and began with their version of "More." Throughout the show each member of the group displayed his individual talent—comic and musical. When time came for the show to end, the Lettermen came back for an encore, singing a medley of some of their greatest hits, and remained for forty-five minutes, finally closing with "You'll Never Walk Alone."

On Saturday morning the Homecoming Parade proceeded through downtown Maryville with the Highlander Band and area high school bands playing.

The day was warm and sunny —one could hardly have asked for a prettier day. On Honaker field the Scots played the Emory and Henry Wasps in a hard-fought, but losing duel—the Wasps won 15—0. At half time the float contest was won by Kappa Phi-Chi Beta, and Dotti Sansbury was crowned Homecoming Queen.

That night the M Club sponsored the Homecoming Dance in the Alumni Gym.

The Student Government, the football team, M Club, the societies, and many other organizations and individuals should be congratulated for making this year's Homecoming the "best yet."

The Student Council met for its regular meeting on Tuuesday, October 18, at 7:30 p.m.

Mrs. Carle Davis presented a program which she has proposed to be included in the future curriculum of Maryville College. Her project is called the Creative Use of Leisure Activities Program.

David Miller proposed that the Student Center be opened for a few hours on Sunday. He is working on the details of this project, and it will be presented before Student-Faculty Senate soon.

Freshman Class elections are Wednesday. Those nominated are: President — Jim Mackay and Steve Horning; Vice President — Donald Hickman and Diane Humphries; Secretary — Mary Harris and Allan Davis; Student Council Representatives — Kathy Stone, Shep Spear, Pat Lavender, Steve Ellis, Sue Ellen Fleming, Alice Weber, John Ribble, and Ruth Morris.

Playhouse Presents Our Town

Our Town, a play written by Thornton Wilder, will be presented Friday and Saturday evenings, October 21 and 22, in the College Theatre under the direction of Tom Jones.

The play takes place in Grovers Corners, New Hampshire, a typical small town. The first act outlines the history of the town and something of the character of its citizens. Then the scene moves into the houses of the Gibbs and Webb families, substantial homes containing substantial people.

The second act concerns the love affair between George Gibbs and Emily Webb. It culminates in a moving wedding scene, which contains all those elements of sorrow and abundant happiness that make for solemnity and impressiveness.

In the third act the action takes place in a cemetery on a hill where many of the townspeople are patiently and smilingly awaiting, not "judgement," but greater understanding. Into their midst is led the bride Emily, a little timid at first, wishing a little to go back to life, to live again with her memories. But she is shown how impossible and futile it would be to return. The past cannot be relived. Truth is to be

In Memoriam

On Sunday, October 16, Brownie, the beloved brown dog who was always seen around the campus, was struck by a car on Washington Avenue and killed. According to some sources, it was learned that Brownie had been around the college campus for more than ten years. He was a favorite among all Maryville students, and will be greatly missed.

MC Hosts Forensic Tournament

The 1966-67 Inter-collegiate Debate season moves into full swing on October 22, as the Maryville College Debate Team plays host to other area colleges for the annual Novice Tournament. Three rounds of debate are scheduled for Saturday morning in Thaw Hall on the national debate topic for the year: "Resolved: that the United States should substantially reduce its foreign policy commitments."

Representing Maryville in this tournament will be six squad members in their first year of inter-collegiate debate. Varsity members Wanda Hannah, Fred Abramoff, Alice Barton, Penny Proffitt, and Bill Cox will manage the tourney, also serving as judges for some of the rounds. Time keepers are needed, and those interested should see Mrs. Proffitt.

Novice members of the squad include

Ray Phillipi,

Wayne Patterson, a freshman from Sugar Creek, Ohio,

Monroe Brown, a sophomore transfer from Norwich University in Vermont,

Steven Horning, a freshman from Indianapolis who was recently seen in the Playhouse production of Spoon River Anthology,

Bill Beasley, a freshman from Alcoa who also appeared in Spoon River Anthology, and Sandra Graham, a freshman.

LBJ's Gettysburg Address

by ROBERT EWEGEN
editor of the Colorado Daily

(As presented by Little Boy Johnson, president of the United States and grandson of a former President whom we all know and love. The address was delivered at the dedication of the American military cemetery "Gettysburg East," outside of Saigon in the year 2052.)

Mah fellow Americans:

Foah score and seven yeahs ago, my grandfather brought forth upon this continent of Asia a new political concept, conceived in expediency and dedicated to the proposition that we are better dead than red.

Now we are engaged in a Great Society (oops, I mean a Great Civil War), and for that matter have been engaged in that Great Civil War for four score and seven years now, testing whether that concept of a permanent American military presence in Asia or any concept so ill-conceived and so ineptly executed, can long endure.

We are met on a great battlefield of that war, a battlefield where General Ky was overthrown by General Hee, where General Hee was overthrown by General Me, where General Me was overthrown by General Wee, where General Wee was overthrown by General Gee, and so forth through the 56 different coups that finally culminated last spring in General Flea's government, which we are now convinced is in a position to bring to this nation the political stability that is so necessary if we are to begin to effectively roll back the aggression from the north.

Excuse me folks, I just received an urgent note. (Oh no, not again.) Hrrumph. What I meant was the 57 coups which finally culminated in General She's coup three minutes ago which we are finally convinced is in a position to at last offer this nation the political stability that is . . .

Hmmrph. Be that as it may. We have come to dedicate this battlefield as a fitting memorial to the light to moderate losses that our forces have sustained over the past 87 years so that my grandfather and his successors could test the theory that the way to bring Hanoi to the peace table was to escalate further.

It is altogether fitting and proper that we should do this, and anyone who thinks otherwise is a nervous nellie and probably a traitor besides and simply helping to prolong the war.

The world will long note and long remember what we did here, probably because we will still be long doing it, but the world will probably never understand WHY we did it.

And frankly, I'm fed up with that kind of idiotic questioning emanating from the capitals of the world over the last nine decades! I DON'T CARE WHY WE ARE HERE! THE POINT IS WE ARE HERE AND ITS TOO LATE TO PULL OUT NOW! WE ARE GOING TO STAY HERE: WE ARE GOING TO ESCALATE! THIS UNPATRIOTIC PRACTICE OF DEFERRING GRANDFATHERS HAS TO STOP SO THAT WE CAN BUILD UP OUR TROOP COMMITMENT TO 68,000,000 MEN. ONLY THEN WE WILL HAVE AN ADEQUATE STRENGTH RATIO OF 84 to 1 NECESSARY TO PUT DOWN THIS INSURRECTION.

And as long as I am president, mah fellow Americans, I promise you this: we shall not withdraw, I promise that this nation, under me, shall have a new birth of conformity (boy will we shut up those peaceniks) and that government of consensus, by manipulation for the sake of saving face, shall not perish from the earth, although admittedly the population might.

EDITORIAL OUTLOOK

by Doug Gamble, Assistant Editor

When we received the Good News about MC's new class attendance policy, after Joy, we wondered what the reaction of the Community would be. The results are by no means conclusive yet, but the trends we expected to develop are developing.

A portion of the students eligible for freedom of attendance is doubtless being too enthusiastic. And it will show up in January. It seems, though, that the cutting is being done, for the most part, with some degree of selectivity. The classes generally considered "good" (just what is that?) are remaining crowded. Others, though, considered unworthy of the climb, are less and less stuffy. The classes which are not offering are being cut. Those that have obvious value (and we are the first to realize that true value is obvious many times only in retrospect) are being attended.

A percentage of the instructors who are having the most paperwork are faulting "The System." Here, then, is where "The System" should do the most for the General Good. It is clear to us that some introspection, or at least a little dismay, is the order of the year for those in charge of the emptier rooms.

"Why" might be the response of the conscientious; "damn the System" is that of the unconscious.

A plea, then: Students, be careful. Staff, a recognition of the beginning of an effective criticism by those who have had some "success"?

And just how are we supposed to prove that we are sick enough to be legally ill? Would you believe Barf? But only one at a time. And quietly.

Letter to the Editor

Dear Editor,

How are you? I was fine, until the other night. A strange thing happenned in the Lantern. One of our happy campus couples was sitting there, in the usual arm-over-shoulder non-talk attitude, enjoying being there I guess, I didn't ask, when one of the "authorities" of the college entered and told them to break it up, and accused them of "conservative love-making," whatever the hell that is. Now, as everybody knows, getting this sort of obnoxious and unwarranted news is the common lot of many couples at Maryville. The reasoning given is that "it looks sloppy and makes a bad impression," which reasoning disgusted and insulted students have rejected for years. Their disgust would not be so complete if they were allowed to be together, relatively unmolested, somewhere on campus. Yet couples are still accosted by the various deans for sitting together too closely on a bench. I retch at this ignorance of human emotions, but retching is not my point. I want it known that the coffeehouse by its very nature does not abide by this bit of making good impressions on other people, or keeping up the artificial social front, just because the administration thinks these are the nice things to do. Societies Prepare for Rush Week

The members of Kappa Phi and Chi Beta would like to announce that their Rush activities for this year will be on Monday and Tuesday and they cordially invite all Freshmen to participate.

On Monday afternoon Chi Beta will hold a tea for all Freshman women at 3:30. Monday nite there will be a dance in the Intramural Gym. Then on Tuesday about 6:00, there will be a Rush banquet with plenty of Free Food, followed by the Kappa Phi and Chi Beta Rush Show. (You won't have to cut your Biology lab; if they don't change the lab, we'll change the show — to Wednesday.

An Ode To Freshmen

It's the cat's pajama
To yell "Yama Yama,"
And to be a flapper
Is very dapper.

So with a "23 Skidoo"
Sig and Theta say to you—
Don't be shy, don't be meek,
Come and join us in Rush Week

We've been working hard, working long,
A great show for you we're going to put on.
"The Roaring Twenties" is our theme,
A lot to you we hope it'll mean.

An exciting era we've found ourselves in,
Our only drawback—no bathtub gin!
But there's flappers and gangsters both good and bad,
And the clothes they wear are now the fad.

Thursday and Friday are the big days of action,
We hope we'll see an eager reaction.
For 2 big days our Rush will last,
And as Sigs and Thetas the whole year's a blast.

We're filled with spirit and all excited,
So come and join us, you'll be delighted.
Ja da, ja da, jing, jing, jing,
Sig-Theta Rush is the greatest thing!

To my knowledge, no one has yet acted improperly in the Lantern, and as long as this continues, the people who choose to come over now and again should not feel the hot breath of a moral censor over their shoulders. I invite those who enjoy such sniping to restrict themselves to the rare instances of genuine impropriety, and in the meantime to mind their own business when in the coffeehouse. found only in the future; for living people, humans occupied with their petty occupations and small thoughts, know little of true joy or happiness.

Director Tom Jones has made a few changes in Our Town in relation to the stage and scenery. The use of a "raked stage" attempts to make the audience feel more like actors rather than an audience.

The scenery is called a "space stage" — a few chairs, tables, and benches. Two ladders and a painting of Grant Wood's "The Midnight Ride of Paul Revere" give the play a certain effect or mood.

Lighting also plays a major role in this production, as there are extensive freezes and breaks and follow-ups throughout the entire production.

The concept of the play itself was borrowed by Wilder from the Kabuki Theatre in Japan; and this concept will be carried out in the Playhouse production.

Scots Drop Homecoming

The Maryville College Scots dropped their Homecoming game to the Emory and Henry Wasps by a score of 15-0. The Wasps scored in the second quarter, then blitzed Paul Rankin and Doug Faris to keep the Maryville offense rushing its plays. The Wasp offense was spearheaded by Timmy Sarver's running, 14 carries for 152 yards, including a 65 yard touchdown run. For the Scots, key defensive plays were turned in by Charlie Berry, Bill Carkhuff, Ernie Greeno, and Ralph McCampbell. Quarterback Jimmy Sullivan was the leading offensive player, along with Paul Johnson and John Klein. Johnson carried the ball 13 times for 51 yards and caught a pass for 22 more; Klein carried 5 times for 65 yards—one of them a 45 yarder that almost went for a touchdown.

Wasps score

The Wasps scored with 5 minutes left in the second quarter on a 5 yard end run by quarterback Sonny Ward. The score capped a drive from the Scot 43 yard line. Ellis put the extra point on the score board for Emory and Henry. At half-time the score stood 7-0 in favor of the Wasps.

It looked like the Scots would control the second half as they came out of the break with three quick first downs. But the drive stalled on the Wasp 39 yard line and they were forced to punt. The Scots lost an opportunity to regain control by not pouncing on the free ball that resulted when Gardner's punt touched the Wasp safety man. Nevertheless, Emory and Henry took over on their 4. Timmy Sarver gained 18 yards in two carries. Then Conner gained 7, followed by a 19 yard pass completion to Pruitt. The Wasps at this point were momentarily stalled by an illegal receiver penalty that put them back on their own 35 yard line. From this point Sarver ran a trap play and sprang loose for 65 yards and the touchdown. Bales ran for the two point conversion. The score at the end of the third quarter was 15-0.

Scots Threaten

The Scots threatened to score late in the fourth quarter. Starting on their own 30 yard line, they drove to the Emory and Henry 4 before they bogged down. Higgins caught two passes for 17 yards, Cox caught a 13 yard pass, Webb handled one for 7 more, and Sullivan carried twice for 11 yards. A pass interference call on the Wasp defense helped sustain the drive. But the Wasp defense held where they had to—on the 4 yard line. In four plays, the Scots could do no better than lose 5 yards, and the Wasps took over and ran out the clock, leaving the final score in their favor 15-0.

This being Homecoming, halftime festivities included not only the performance of the band, but also the presentation of the Homecoming queen, Miss Dottie Sansbury, and her court, and the announcement and display of the winning float in the morning's parade competition. This year's winners were: third place, Sophomore class; second place, Alpha Sigma; first place, Kappa Phi's Plane Ole' Victory.

Intramural Football Draws to Close

As intramural football enters its last week of regular season play, only one team remains undefeated. The Alpha Sigma Sledgehammers lead the league with a 7-0 record, followed closely by the Independents, 5-1. Kappa Phi's Red Wave is in the third position, 4-3, followed by the Grapplers, 3-3. The D. B.'s, the Adamants, and the Spartans round out the remainder of the league. Two big games were played this week: Monday's Red Wave—Sledgehammer game, won by the Sledgehammers 32-18 and Friday's Sledgehammer — Independent game. Next week playoffs will start for all the winning teams. The championship, which will be decided in the playoffs, will be followed by the annual Stinking Shoe classic featuring Alpha Sigma All Stars vs Kappa Phi All Stars.

MC to be active

With our presence at the October and November meetings, Maryville College will become a charter member of the Tennessee Intercollegiate State Legislature. Providing a new voice for responsible student leadership, this body can be of great value. Efforts of the South Carolina intercollegiate legisture resulted in amending the law forbidding voting by absentee ballot (enacted in S.C. because of misuse of this procedure), enabling college students to vote by absentee ballot while the other residents of that state do not have this priviledge.

The meeting on October 2 was excellent with discussion on a plane of superior quality with outstanding students from the represented schools. The Intercollegiate Legislature could become one of the most dynamic bodies in this state with the dedicated response of students from the various colleges and universities of this state. Student government at M.C. is dedicating itself to making this effort a valuable one to our campus and the state of Tennessee.

Interested students may still contact John C. Mulholland, Box 495. Do so quickly, for plans must be completed soon.

For those with two left feet, a special invitation is out to come and try the great sport of soccer under the leadership of Kathy Bishop. Sign-up sheets will be posted in the Intramural Gym, and introductions to the game and practice essions were held Tuesday and Thursday, October 18 and 20. The tournament begins on the 27th. For all girls who are interested in officiating at the games, a soccer clinic will be held Thursday, October 24 at 4:30 in the large Bartlett classroom, and the officiating test will follow on Monday, October 24 at 4:30.

Faculty Reacts to New Cut System

by Carol Cocke

The new attendance policy initiated this fall on our campus was new to the faculty as well as to the students. At first it was greeted with some amount of confusion on both sides, but now, having been accepted as standard procedure, and having been explained to both faculty and students at length (in chapel and elsewhere), it has become part of Maryville's academic life.

Dean Fuhr and several faculty members were questioned as to their opinions regarding the new cut system. While some of those interviewed refused to comment, the rest were quite willing to answer. Here are some comments:

Dean Fuhr: The new system has gotten off to a smoother start than seemed possible at first. The students seem to be grateful for the new 2.5 option, and pleased that the additional graduation requirements will no longer be a factor. There has been good cooperation by the students with the health service regarding absences due to illness. As far as unexcused absences are concerned, there have been only seventeen warning notices and only one attendance probation notice issued for the entire student body to date (October 27).

Dr. Lytle: It entails keeping track of the number of cuts taken by individual students, but involves no more paper work than the former system did. I am in favor of it!

Mr. Dees: The thing that concerns me in regards to any absence policy is that a college has courses and|or students which make compulsory attendance necessary. Those students who take (not necessarily those who advocate) the unlimited cuts are many times the ones who need an absence policy.

Mr. Gresham: It seems to be well set up, but I think it will need more time to prove itself. It is good that each faculty member has a record of excused absences.

Mrs. Cummings: It hasn't been in use long enough for us to be really sure about it. The students don't seem to be missing class any more frequently than they did formerly, but recording their absences now makes more work for the faculty.

Dr. Mark Davis: Since I am new at Maryville, I have no basis for comparison in evaluating the new ruling on class attendance. Having taught, however, for the past eight years at a college in which class attendance was not mandatory, I personally feel that compulsory class attendance is not necessary. Most college students when given adult privileges behave responsibily. Those few who do not should not clutter college campuuses. Ideally, the quest for knowledge, the stimulus of more mature minds, the interaction of ideas are sufficient to motivate class attendance. And if a student on his own initiative seeks out that knowledge he might gain from my lecture, I do not feel that he need be compelled to hear me. The ultimate goal of liberal arts education is independent, self-motivated scholarship. Classroom experience is but one means to that end.

Miss Borkhuis: As far as this new system is concerned, these lists are a nuisance. It might help to have the students list classes missed rather than just recording "all day." Actually, the whole idea of compulsory class attendance is troubling. I would prefer having only three students in a class, who were there because they were interested, to having forty in a class who were

The student council met for a regular meeting on Tuesday night, November 1. The committee reports were considered.

Ralph Johnson reported for the Pep Committee that arrangements are being made to take the entire student body to the big game at Carson-Newman. Watch for publicity.

Jim Reynolds is now setting up discussion groups of students and faculty members to discuss any issues of interest at Maryville College. Tom Marston is working on the idea of Hospitality Nights to be sponsored by faculty members at their homes for students.

There was much talk about the purpose of student council and life at Maryville College in general. Nothing was decided but plenty was said.

Debate Team Participates in Dixie Tournament

The Mrayville College Debate Team participated last weekend in the annual Dixie Debate Tournament at Mercer University in Macon, Ga. A total of 59 teams were entered, representing universities and colleges throughout the southeastern United States.

In the Novice Division (first-year debaters), 1st place school awards went to the University of Alabama, who won ten debates and lost two; 2nd place was Emory University, with a 9-3 record. The Maryville College novice team, composed of Ray Phillippi, Stevan Horning, Sandra Graham, and Bill Beasley, tied for third place with an 8-4 record, along with Vanderbilt, Miami Dade Junior College, and the University of Kentucky, with the trophy going to UK on the basis of speaker points.

The Varsity squad, composed of Wanda Hannah, Fred Abramoff, Alice Barton, and Penny Proffitt, placed about mid-list in one of the most competitive varsity divisions ever assembled. The winner of this division was Florida State University.

Mrs. Robert Proffitt, Director of Debate, who accompanied the squad to Georgia, expressed optimism for the coming season and pride in the team's showing at Mercer. "Even though we were unable to bring home a trophy, it was a source of triumph for Maryville College to be a strong contender among the South's giants of debate."

MR. EISMANN

Eismann First Lecturer in Series

Wherever the "hot" news is, at home or abroad, there you'll find Bernard Eismann, dashing young ABC-TV and radio correspondent.

Viet-Nam, Laos, the Middle East, Israel, the Dominican Republic, Africa, Central and South America — these are just a few of the places from which this enterprising correspondent sends his reports.

In fact, he returns regularly to Israel (where he lived from 1955 to 1957) for "in-depth" on-the-spot coverage, and he is particularly well acquainted with Israeli life.

From 1955 until 1964, Bernard Eismann was with CBS News, covering major stories at home and abroad, and becoming CBS News' Bureau Chief in Chicago. He left CBS to join the American Broadcasting Company, over which network he reports major news on both radio and TV.

A regular contributor to the New York Sunday Herald Tribune and other publications, he is the author of two books: "The Far Right" (1963) and "Two Chinas in American Foreign Policy" (1959).

Married and the father of two children, Bernard Eismann has a marvelous sense of humor, a terrific platform personality, and just the right kind of realistic approach to put headline-making events into proper perspective.

MC Directors Meet

An additional $5,000,000 in new resources will be sought by Maryville College before the College marks its 150th year in 1969-70. Announcement of the supplemental goals for the Sesquicentennial Development Program was made 1 November by President Joseph J. Copeland. The $5,000,000 supplements $7,000,000 already received or committed in the first six years of this decade, making a new total of $12,000,000 for the ten years.

The supplemental goals were approved by the College's Board of Directors, meeting last Thursday and Friday on the campus. Included in these financial objectives is immediate preparation of a campus master plan to accommodate all projected building and campus improvements for the next two decades. With the campus developing as fast as it is, the Board felt a master plan was a necessity in order to locate the new buildings projected for completion by the end of the Sesquicentennial year.

Projected goals

An additional sum was also approved to beautify the Washington Ave. entrance to the campus and make it the main entrance. This work will be done after the new science building, now being designed, is completed.

The extension of the goals through the Sesquicentennial celebration is based on an enrollment of 1,075 students in 1969-70. In order to accommodate this number of students, the College is planning to provide a physical plant completely modern and up-to-date. This will call for the building of a new physical education complex, and remodeling the present Fayerweather Hall for a student center or building a new student center. The estimated total cost of those two projects is $2,000,000. This represents the bulk of the proposed $2,280,000 which will be spent on capital improvements during the next four years. With the construction and renovation of these buildings, the campus plant will be basically complete for the projected enrollment.

May meeting anticipated

In addition to $2,280,000 for capital improvements, the financial objectives include $749,500 which is to be sought in gifts, $400,000 for addition to the endowment funds, $162,800 in new income from endowment, and $1,212,700 which is anticipated revenue from student fees. These funds will be used to maintain the high academic quality of the faculty, provide increased student aid, and meet the current operating budget, which now exceeds $2,000,000 a year.

While the Sesquicentennial represents a landmark in the life of Maryville College, the Board of Directors and the administration will continue to project income and enrollment figures for another ten years through 1975-76. At the May meeting of the Board of Directors it is anticipated that the new ten-year projections will be approved.

Margaret B. Gross, organist, will give a Senior Recital on Thursday, November 17, at 8:15 p.m., in the Music Hall of the Fine Arts Center. The program will include the "Toccata and Fugue in F Major" by Bach, two noels by Daquin, two chorale-preludes by Brahms, "The Celestial Banquet" by Messiaen, and the "Medieval Suite" by Langlais. There will be a reception afterwards in the Fine Arts Center Lounge.

Want a Job in Europe?

Grand Duchy of Luxembourg — Every student in America can get a job in Europe by applying directly to the European headquarters of the American Student Information Service in Luxembourg. Jobs are much the same as student work in the U.S. with employers offering work periods ranging from three weeks to permanent employment.

Lifeguarding, office work, resort-hotel jobs, factory, construction, camp counseling and farm work are only a few categories to be found among the thousands of jobs ASIS has on file. An intresting summer pastime not found in America is tutoring. Numerous well-to-do European families are inviting American college students to spend the summer with them and teach their children English.

Wages range to $400 a month, and in most cases neither previous experience nor knowledge of a foreign language is required. ASIS, in its tenth year of operation, will place more American students in jobs in Europe this year than ever before.

Students interested in working in Europe may write directly to Dept. II, ASIS, 22 Avenue de la Liberte Luxembourg City, Grand Duchy of Luxembourg, enclosing $2 for the ASIS 36-page booklet which contains all jobs, wages, working conditions, etc., job applications, and to cover the cost of handling and overseas air mail postage.

Dink Week, Frosh Hazing, What-Have-You

by John Mulholland

Suggested for a number of years recently by a majority of the Student Council, the concept of freshmen hazing has been proposed often to the Deans and the Executive Council. Lacking overwhelming support of students and facing the resistance of the Deans and the Faculty, 'Dink Weeks' have never become a policy of M.C.

When the proposals were made, this writer was much in favor of a civilized form of this tradition. To his disappointment, at the time, few of the administration agreed with the idea of unifying the Frosh and giving them some spirit in this way.

Disappointment was experienced at those times in the past. But as it was the priviledge of this writer to address the Frosh during Orientation week, he found that it was with pride that he could truly welcome the freshmen to the M.C. community as a fellow student. The only requirement was that one demanding their sincerity and integrity in the academic effort consisting of the college experience. Yes, we have still to find some more exciting ways of building spirit and enthusiasm among the "frosh," but in need not be in a way that sets them on some low point with Dink caps and hazing.

As this writer has matured in his ideas and attitudes, it no longer seems necessary to use such a ridiculous method as mentioned above. As we assume the responsibilities of adulthood, there are better ways of introducing freshmen to the experience of college.

So, again a hearty welcome to the new students of Maryville College. No, quite often this school does not meet your desires and expectation. But chances are that no school would have, for in your idealistic view of what college is you see all the wrong things. Look at the experience of college as one in learning, not in raising 'hell' (though even that must be done once in a while), and you may stand some chance of surviving here or elsewhere. Oh yes, there are many that only get by and graduate from college, but they are no different than a high school graduate.

Join with upperclassmen in this experience of learning, as together we move to the goals which make life worthwhile.

This is a FILLER. Do you know what a filler is? A filler is something you put in when you haven't got something to put there.

LAMENT OF A FIRST-TIME, BIT-PART PLAYER

by R. H.

After
The last bubble of light has burst and blackened
And the final appreciative slap of palm on palm has echoed in the darkened wings.

I remember

A play that lived breathed and groaned, shouted whispers,
laughed tears.

A play raised in lingering agony loving agony.
Carefully trained, groomed,
Neatly dressed
For its appointed moment,
Its brief flaming-star point of glory.

I remember.

The stage is a tomb,
darkly hollow.
The body is torn,
dismembered.
I am the bereaved,
inheritor of memories.

... AND HEARD

Men, women and ministers . . . there's just one thing wrong with this Marriage and the Family course—no lab . . . the cheers at a game between Jesus College, Oxford, and Christ College, Cambridge . . . and we were having, uh, uh, uh, a "beverage" . . . and then Dr. Copeland said, "What's a campus?" . . . burning doubt and burning difficulty, by the bye.

Playhouse Brings to Life Familiar Play

by Meta Robinson

Thornton Wilder's Pulitzer Prize winning play, "Our Town," was presented Friday and Saturday nights, October 21 and 22, by by Maryville College Playhouse. Thomas E. Jones assisted by Fred Callies directed the play.

In the leading roles were Kathy Smith as Emily Webb, Gary Hamway as George Gibbs, Linda Palmer as Mrs. Webb, David Nighbert as Mr. Webb, Margaret Miller as Mrs. Gibbs, Jon Lutz as Dr. Gibbs, and Mr. Edwin J. Best as the Stage Manager. Although it is hard to separate personalities from characters, each of these portrayed believable persons. Emily's role was especially effective as she depicted both humorous and serious moods. Mrs. Gibbs and Mrs. Webb were realistic as the two mothers who faced similiar problems. Dr. Gibbs' performance at the grave was particularly moving and made George's visit to Emily's grave somewhat anticlimactic.

Adding to the realism, the stage manager's conversational tone made the audience feel a part of "Our Town" by bringing them into direct contact with the players. The "raked" stage also brought the audience closer to the actors. Dramatic lighting, music and scenery produced an appropriate atmosphere of simplicity and intense feeling.

A striking innovation, approved by Thornton Wilder, was the "live" picture by Grant Wood during the wedding scene. In view of the soleminity and impressiveness of the ceremony, this perhaps detracted from the meaning, although it allowed for a release of pent-up emotion through laughter in preparation for the final scene.

"Our Town" was a significant play for the Maryville College campus. It brought to life a familiar play, thus giving it additional and deeper meaning.

The night I found you gone
Went on and on and on
And morning never came
And the still air stayed the same
And Gray God never moved
And the song that I had loved and longed to sing remained unsung.

Then I heard your ship slide small Against the coal-dust wall of always night.

And the seagulls all turn back
The gulls they all turn back.
And the quilted sea
And the goddamn ship
And the falling moon turn back.

Maryville College, along with nearly one hundred other accredited colleges and universities, is a participant in this cooperative program with The American University. It enables students to spend one semester in Washington studying American national government in action through a seminar, an individual research project, and regular courses at The American University. Anyone who has had a course in American National Government and whose overall grade average is not lower than 2.5 is eligible for consideration in this program. Interested persons should seek further information and application forms from Dr. Ainsworth, Washington Semester Representative on this campus. Nominations for the Spring Semester must be submitted by Maryville College by November 11.

Goals surpassed

President Copeland, commenting on the supplementary goals and the Board's action, said, "We were able to complete our original $7,000,000 goal ahead of time, and I am confident we will meet these new goals with the same interest and support our Alumni, the church, and the many friends of the College displayed so admirably in the original phase of the campaign.

"With the completion of the new science building and the proposed physical education complex and student center facility, Maryville's campus will be as good as any small college in the country. These new buildings will enable the College to tear down every temporary wooden building erected on the campus at the end of World War II. This is a dream we can all be a part of, and no more fitting tribute to the celebration of the College's 150th anniversary can be made than by erecting these much needed and long overdue facilities."

It was announced in June that new resources totaling $7,098,699 had been received or firmly committed to the College since Jan. 1, 1960. The over-all goal of $7,000,000 was surpassed in six years instead of ten, and at that time the Board of Directors initiated action to establish supplementary financial objectives for the rest of the decade.

The Sesquicentennial Development Program is a comprehensive effort which includes new income from student fees, gifts and grants, loans, and additions to the endowment.

This evening for a quiet moment
I paused to think.
Of God?
No. God does not exist.

Of a golden flower
On a vast meadow's edge;

Of a dress pocket
Torn in childish frolic;

Of a face
Grown dim with separation;

Of a gift
Conceived in joy;

Of a bronzed leaf
Dying to autumn;

Of an unexpected
'I Love You';

Of God?
No. God does not exist.
God only is.

Harding Defeats Scots

The Maryville Scots travelled to Searcy, Arkansas, on 22 October for a game with Harding College. Rated as 26-point underdogs, the Scots almost came out topdog but were put down by the score of 21-10.

Harding scored first late in the opening period on a one-yard plunge by Kenny Glass. The Scots fought hard to keep from being put down and retaliated with a field goal by Jimmy Cannon in the second quarter. As both teams went into the dressing rooms at halftime, the score was 7-3.

The Scots were in control of the ball in the third quarter until a pass thrown by Jimmy Sullivan was intercepted by a Harding defense-man, David Wofford, who ran for a touchdown. Still hoping to save the game, the Scots started back on a long drive capped by passes for 7 and 13 yards to Sonny Webb and a 33-yard run by John Klein. Sullivan then pushed across from the 4-yard line for the score. Jimmy Cannon then added an extra point to make the score 14-10.

Nevertheless, Harding was not about to be upset, and late in the fourth quarter they added a touchdown on a 14-yard run by Randy DeLaet. James Street added the extra point to make the final score 21-10.

Standouts on the Scots offense were Paul Johnson, who rushed 47 yards in 19 attempts, and John Klein, who gained 36 yards in 3 tries. Jimmy Sullivan succeeded with 13 pass completions out of 24 attempts for 130 yards. On the receiving end of the passes were John McLaughlin with 5 passes caught for 55 yards, Sonny Webb with 5 for 40 yards, David Garner with 3 for 27 yards, and John Klein with 1 for 27 yards. The defense must be given a word of praise for forcing the highly-rated Harding team to punt nine times.

Sledges Win Flagball Championship

by Lin St. Clair

Last Friday the Alpha Sigma Sledgehammers defeated the Independents 21-14 in overtime. The victory gave the Sledges the League championship and maintained their perfect record of 7-0.

The Sledges drew first blood as Bucky Hartinstine smashed over from the 3 yard-line early in the first quarter. The pass for the PAT to Bob Kusick was good. The Independents wasted no time in tying it up. Don Hickman ran for the touchdown and Roy Ries took the conversion pass. The second quarter was scoreless, leaving a 7-7 tie at the half.

In the third period the Independents took the lead with Hickman passing to Ries on a sleeper play. The extra point was good. The Sledges finally caught up late in the fourth quarter. Hartinstine again ran for the score. He passed to Rip Van Agnew for the extra point. The touchdown was set up when the Sledge's defensive line, led by Garry Steigleman, got in to block an Independent punt deep in their own territory.

Sig emerged victorious in overtime on a Hartinstine-to-Bacchus pass. Kusick again scored the PAT to round out the scoring.

All were appreciative of the outstanding job done by refrees Gifford and St. Clair.

"Swivel-hips" Stoker, who was nullified throughout the game, was not available for comment afterwards.

MC Coeds Aid Baker Campaign

KNOXVILLE—Two Maryville College coeds have been named to lead a Young Tenneseans for Baker Club among Maryville College students, Bob Bonitati, director of Young Tennesseans for Baker, announced today.

The two are Miss Martha Frazier of Knoxville, who will serve as membership chairman, and Miss Alida McArthur of Maryville who will serve as co-chairman.

The purpose of the YTB Club is to mobilize broad support for Republican senatorial nominee Howard H. Baker, Jr.

"I am pleased that Miss Frazier and Miss McArthur are helping to lead a Young Tenneseans for Baker Club," Mr. Baker said. "There is a great deal of work to be done, and the role of young people in my campaign is important. The leaders who are elected in November will make the plans and programs which will shape many of the events of tomorrow. The young People of the Volunteer State have a stake in the kind of men selected to lead this nation."

History Faculty Attend Meeting in Memphis

Three members of the Maryville College faculty attended the meeting of the Southern Historical Association in Memphis on November 10, 11, and 12.

They were Dr. Arda S. Walker, Professor of History and Chairman of the Department of History; Dr. Russell D. Parker, and Wallace Lewis, members of the history faculty.

Council Considers Cars

Tuesday night, November 15, the student council hashed over some old problems and brought some interesting new information to light.

The Academics Committee reported that appointments were given for members to interview faculty for preliminary opinions about the Teacher-Course Rating. Each faculty member was then interviewed for their suggestions about the methods of the evaluation. The plan is to have the evaluation ready in time for a rating this semester. The major problem will be whether to publish the information or not. Most teachers are in favor of some sort of a Teacher-Course evaluation.

The committee discussed the problem of Frosh apathy, low grades, etc., and appointed Bob Hart to lead an assault on Frosh mid-semester GAP's. They also discussed ways to try to help Frosh find some direction academically. The problems of lack of motivation and study methods were especially talked over.

The committee also heard Drs. Shields and Blair report on some of their travel conclusions, mainly Curriculum and Calendar. They plan to meet weekly with the Academics Committee (anyone is invited) if necessary to keep the committee posted on latest details. The results of their recommendations concerning Maryville College's curriculum, etc., are to be published in the Echo next week.

Alice Barton Wins Speaker Trophy

At the Smoky Mountain Invitational Debate Tournament at Boone, N.C. last weekend, Alice Barton, M.C. sophomore from Maryville, Tennessee, received a trophy as best affirmative speaker. Miss Barton, and her partner, Penny Proffitt, also of Maryville, placed second to Cumberland College of Kentucky, in the affirmative division, missing the first place trophy by only two points. Both Cumberland and Maryville teams won five debates and lost one. Miss Barton and Miss Proffitt registered their only loss against Duke, the overall winner of the tournament. Both girls were praised for their understanding and presentation of a difficult topic, Resolved: that the United States should substantially reduce its foreign policy commitments. Miss Barton was an Alcoa Scholarship winner.

After a two week rest, four Novice members of the team will journey to Carson Newman College on Nov. 18 & 19 for the Carson Newman Invitational Tournament, a difficult assignment requiring each person to debate both sides of the question. Making this trip will be Stevan Horning, Ray Phillippi, Wayne Patterson, and Bill Beasley.

Admissions and Academic Standards Questioned

FROSH PROFILE SENT TO GUIDANCE COUNSELORS

In view of the fact that the College's admission and academic standards are coming under questioning from many sources, the Hihgland Echo has sought to inform the students of one of the many indications of the present admission standards. Many have expressed concern, fearing that academic standards were being lowered at the same time that admission standards were being lowered. However assurances come from the administration that this is not the case. The Academics Committee of the Student Council has begun to study the present admission standards involving those students with a lower than average ability. The present Resident Assistant-Senior Counselor program is being questioned with the concern as to whether Maryville College is doing justice to those students that it has accepted and put on limited load.

A small pamphlet prepared by the Admissions Office is now being sent to high school guidance counselors showing the "statistical information relative to the Freshman Class that entered Maryville College 13 September 1966." Following are excerpts from that pamphlet:

Maryville College operates on the "Rolling Admissions" system. Applications are accepted at any time and are acted upon by the Admissions Committee just as

Experimentation Process is Used by Joan Michaels

As both faculty and students are well aware, Maryville College is in a process of experimentation and change in an attempt to keep up with the growing amount of high school graduates seeking a college education. There is an increasing gap between the number of high school graduates and available vocations, according to Dean McClelland, chairman of the Admissions Committee. This means that since there are more people graduating from high school today than ever before, the opportunities for those with only high school diplomas are decreasing. Clearly something must be done in order to give these people a chance to go on to higher education. This is the problem that faces not only Maryville College but all institutions of higher learning.

"modern" approach

The Admissions Committee at Maryville is experimenting this year in accepting a higher percentage of "borderline" people than in previous years. These are people who, in the opinion of the Committee, have the potential to benefit from college work but who have not necessarily met all the academic requirements set by the school. The usual admission requirements are based on the applicant's high school record and class standing, his SAT or ACT scores, and recommendations attesting to his character, personality traits and leadership ability. Initially, Maryville College accepted all high school graduates. Thirty years ago the college was accepting those in the top two-thirds of their class.

DEAN FUHR SPEAKS OF ACADEMIC STANDARD

by Beverly Minear

Dean Tom Fuhr stated in the last meeting of the Student-Faculty Senate that college board scores have little relation to college performance and that "Maryville College has a responsibility to those of less than normal standard ability." When asked to elaborate, Dean Fuhr explained Maryville College's standards in accepting students and its policy toward the below average student.

advanced precautions

Before admitting the applicant as a student of the college, the Admissions Office considers and compares the following: Student Aptitude Test score of the College Board Examination, letters of recommendation, high school record, and degree of motivation (determined most accurately by a personal interview). Maryville College regards the college board score as a "hint" of the student's ability to perform well in college. As a starting point, the college considers a total college board score of nine hundred to one thousand as average. But this score is relevant only in relation to the student's past record and to his desire to learn. It follows that, although a greater percentage of students accepted are above standard ability, the below average student "deserves a right to try." According to Dean Fuhr, "every college has a responsibility to the student who wants to try."

CUES Results Given

Last spring Maryville juniors and seniors took a questionnaire known as the College and University Environment Scales, or CUES. It is the tests and study of Dr. C. Robert Pace of UCLA. The statistics on the questionnaire are now available and will be studied in the future.

The nature of the CUES is this. Colleges and universities differ from one another in many ways. Some things that are generally true or characteristic of one college may not be characteristic of another. The CUES are designed to describe the institutional climate of the campus. CUES consist of 150 statements about college life; features and facilities of the campus, rules and regulations, faculty, curricula, instruction and examinations, student life, extracurricular organzations, and other aspects of the institutional environment, all of which help to define the intellectual-social-cultural climate of the college as students see it.

By indicating which statements are generally characteristic of their college, students act as reporters; their aggregate judgment provides an opinion poll

New Music Fraternity Organized

by Marilyn Rankin

Maryville College can now boast of a chapter of Delta Omicron music fraternity for women. The sister organization of Phi Mu Alpha Sinfonia has been formed this fall and will hold their formal initiation and musicale on December 1. At that time, officers, charter members, and patrons will be recognized. The national president from Washington will be present and, along with the chapter members from Carson-Newman, will install the Maryville College chapter, Alpha Zeta. Delta Omicron is a member of the Professional Panhellenic Association.

The national president, Helen Downie Bishop, was on campus last month and was honored at a reception. While here, she explained the purpose and history of Delta Omicron and was impressed with the facilities at

EDITORIAL OUTLOOK

Now that Mid-Semester has come and gone, a great cry of anguish is being heard around the campus—especially in the vicinities of Dorms I, II, and III. Many are now finding that half the semester has passed and that their grades have not totaled their aspirations or expectations. Many on campus have expressed their concern for the dilemna of the freshmen. This year's class has seemingly more academic problems than any of its predecessors. Thus the standards which have permitted so many students to enter who would not have been permitted to enter before is now coming under criticism and questioning.

The Deans tell us that this approach is "modern." Just how modern is the idea that getting through college with a sheepskin is the Formula for an education? If a person is unable to adapt to the academic community, is it disgraceful for him not to go to college—just because someone has said that he must have a college degree —not an education—in order to succeed? The chief concern with the critics of the admission— (pardon, the "modern" admission)—policy of the college is the fact that the pamphlet which is now being sent to high school guidance counselors does not present a good picture of the Maryville College academic standards. Needless to say, most high school students of superior ability would not find the most advantages in a school whose admission standards were below average. If the administraton hopes to attract superior students it can hardly continue to advertise its present admission standards.

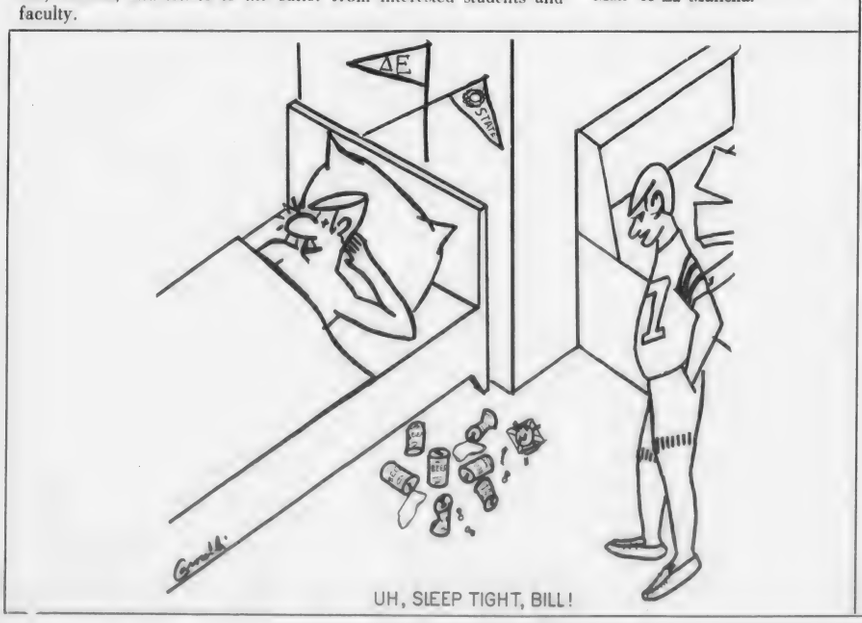
Early Manuscripts on Display

An exhibition of manuscript leaves and examples from printed books of the 15th and 16th centuries is on display in the Art Gallery of the Fine Arts Center at Maryville College throughout the month of November.



Manuscripts included in the exhibition range from small inexpensive pages from Medieval books of hours to the large music sheets and illuminated leaves, plus some Indo-Persian minatures and manuscripts.

Among the items of incunabula (books printed before the year 1500), the emphasis is on the early woodcut illustrations, ancestors of the modern illustrated book and the source of all modern original prints.

Fall Serenade Presented

The Maryville College Women's Choir and Men's Glee Club, under the direction of Dr. Harry H. Harter, presented their Fall Serenade Friday, November 11, in the Chapel.

Selections included popular music from recent Broadway hits sung by both the mixed chorus and the individual groups composed of men's and women's voices. Some of the arrangements were by Dr. Harter, the Director. Included was music from "The Fantastiks," "South Pacific," "The Music Man," and "Man of La Mancha."

Concerning a Third Pair of Societies...

by John Kerr

An evaluation of campus life with respect to the present societies leaves something to be desired. For one thing the societies are too large; and partly because of this, membership tends to become meaningless. Granted there are countless reasons for disinterest, and many center around a lack of personal initiative, but isn't there always more unity, more of a sense of belonging in a smaller group?

An even greater fault with the present society situation is the stereotypes they induce. A male is either a "Phi" or a "Sig" (of course Independents don't even count); it is the same with the women. A person who doesn't necessarily want to choose either The one or The other is restricted to Independent sameness. Even though society membership could have served a useful purpose in that person's life, it is declined because of the limited choice.

Committe formed

Most glaring of all among the faults of the present society system is the animosity which exists between the two sides. Healthy competition and spirited rivalry have their place; but when these feelings change to overt hate and ill will, it is time for either a deus ex machina or a third society. Throughout my three and a half years here I have seen and felt this hatred until I am fed up with it. It is no more on one side than the other, but it is there — in unmistakable black and white. And until some measure is taken to relieve the bitterness, it will continue to darken any concerned person's image of Maryville College life.

It is the feeling of many people that the addition of a third pair of societies to the social program of the college would be an effective solution to the animosity, limitation of choice, and undue size concerning the present societies. For this reason the Organizations Committee of Student Council has formed a Third Society Committee to examine the situation and take appropriate action.

Nucleus needed

As chairman of this committee, I am convinced of the need for creating these new societies. I am also aware of definite problems facing their establishment. There is, for one thing, the question of a meeting place. Couldn't the school build us another house? Well, it's doubtful. But even if a separate building seems far fetched, why couldn't a room in Bartlett, Fayerweather, or the Student Center lounge serve the purpose, at least temporarily?

Another problem, I am told, would be the schedule complications, that is, the provision for a third prom, rush, and initiation. But do these inclusions really seem so difficult to overcome? It seems to me that the benefit to the social life these activities would yield would more than account for inconveniences in their scheduling.

Finally, the greatest problem of all appears to be locating a responsible nucleus to head the new societies. The greatest need of all is the need for a group of able students concerned with the betterment of the life of the campus, who would be willing to work out a constitution, select a name, set standards of membership, and plan activities. Naturally, it would be best for this leadership to be supplied primarily by underclassmen, whose interest would lie in the future, as well as the present. But the nucleus would do well to include students from all four classes, since the more inclusive these new societies are, the greater is their chance of continued development.

Suggestions urged

So, the challenge is obviously out for any interested students. The opportunities are impressive and exciting to anyone with the patience and willingness to take part in planning these new societies.

If you might be interested in forming a third set of societies, or even if you just have some comments or suggestions concerning the society system in general, I would appreciate your contacting me, John Kerr, anytime at your convenience.

The need is urgent; the opportunities are waiting. Don't let the chance slip by.

EXPERIMENTATION

Now, the upper half of the class is the standard. However, both Col. Taylor, Director of Admissions, and Dean McClelland stress the fact that the Committee does not judge an applicant on any one determining factor but considers the complete file. It is this more modern approach to college admissions with which the Committee is experimenting this year.

potential recognized

As a result, the big question that comes to mind is: Will the admission of so many borderline cases in any way lower the standards of the college? Dean McClelland points out that the standards of Maryville College are set by the students themselves who go on to graduate school. The function of the college is to prepare people for graduate and professional school, and in this respect Maryville stands out in its superior rating as a source of baccalaureate degrees. This year's freshman class has a commendable combined math and verbal SAT score of 956.9. Of the 698 applications received by the Committee this year, 63 were rejected, as compared with 116 rejections out of 680 applications from last year. The present freshman class numbers 320—a 45 person increase over last year's freshman class.

Since there are obviously more students applying every year, and since competition for jobs is becoming keener each year, colleges must make provisions to educate as many capable people as possible. In an attempt to solve this problem, the Committee is faced with two alternatives. (1) It can accept borderline cases and allow the teachers to make it easier for a student to pass; this would in effect constitute a general lowering of the college's academic standards. Or, (2) the college, recognizing the potential of these people, could accept them, reduce the load they are to carry, and keep the passing level the same. This is what the Committee has chosen to do. In keeping the rating system the same but by reducing the academic load from 16-17 semester hours to 12-13, the Committee has given these students a chance to prove their potential by slowing them down, granting them more time to devote to fewer classes while they are keeping up with the same standards set by the college. The Committee is hopeful that not only will these students benefit themselves by upholding the standards of the college, but that they will benefit the college itself by their presence here.

Choir Sings Gloria in Vespers

The Maryville College Choir under the direction of Dr. Harry Harter presented the Vivaldi "Gloria" last Sunday at 7 p.m. in the College Chapel as part of the Vespers Service. The service was led by Dr. E. Fay Campbell.

The "Gloria" is a musical setting for a passage of Scripture, and since its publication it has become one of the most popular Baroqhe works for chorus and orchestra. The work was sung in Latin.

Soloists were Ibbie Ann Jack, soprano, and Mary Rucker, alto, accompanied by the Maryville College Chamber Orchestra with Robert McKaskell as Concert Master and Jonothan Gresham as trumpet soloist. Mrs Sallie Warth Schoen played the harpsichord and Dr. James A. Bloy, organ.

Christianity is an alternative to reality.

Change In Vespers Planned

by Bob Hart

For several decades now the Sunday Evening Vespers in the College Chapel has been a valuable asset in the worship life of the Christian community on the campus and in the city of Maryville. More than a good share of the credit for the quality of the vesper hour has been the order of worship employed by the College. The service has always maintained a proportionate amount of dignity and ease so necessary to aid any such diverse body of worshipers as we have here. So many changes, however, have occurred in the liturgical life and understanding of the Church recently that many on campus realized that the vesper service was not being used to its full potential. With this in mind a committee consisting of Dr. Campbell, Dr. Harter, Dr. Bloy, Geoffrey Skrinar, Jerry Weeks, and Robert Hart was convened by Dr. Campbell at the beginning of this semester to discuss revision of the liturgical structure of the Sunday Vespers.

The prime motivation of the committee was simply to improve the potential for corporate worship for the campus in the light of the increased understanding of worship on the part of the Church in the past three decades. A revised order has been drawn up, and the committee in conjunction with the President of the College, Dr. Copeland, has approved the changes. The new revised service is scheduled to go into effect on Sunday, November 27, the first Sunday in Advent.

The revision includes several important alternations. The call to worship and the prayer of Adoration, formerly separated by the Introit, are now placed together preceding the Introit. The Introit and the sung Benediction have been changed for the sake of increased content, and new words and music will be used for both. A Prayer of Confession and a Declaration of Absolution have been included to aid congregational participation. Both anthems by the College Choir are now to be sung before the Sermon. In order to give the place of the Sermon a better perspective in the total experience of worship and to emphasize the importance of prayer, the Sermon has been moved forward in the order and the Evening Prayer has been placed after the Sermon to be followed as usual by the Lord's Prayer sung by the congregation. A rather new innovation for the College has been employed to introduce the Evening Prayer, sung versicles which involve a short series of one line verses of scripture said or sung responsively between the minister and the congregation.

In making these changes a great deal of latitude was left for future innovations in order that progress in our worship life may be continued and experimentation always be possible. None of the former dignity or ease of the service has been sacrificed, but hopefully it has been enhanced. Both the committee and Dr. Copeland are convinced the Vesper service has been substantially improved. It is hoped the worshiping community of the College will see the wisdom of these changes and continue to find the Sunday Vespers a valuable experience.

rapidly as files are completed and all required credentials are received.

While either the Scholastic Aptitude Tests of the CEEB or the tests of the American College Testing Program are required the Admissions Committee continues to view the applicant's high school record and class standing as the most reliable indicators of the applicant's ability to do college work.

Although academic ability is a primary factor in the selection process, the Admissions Committee also gives serious consideration to character, personality traits and leadership ability.

Again this year a group of students have been accepted with records somewhat below the established selection criteria. These students were accepted on the condition that they would undertake a limited load of academic work, 12-13 semester hours instead of 16-17 semester hours, until such time as they achieve a minimum 2.0 overall grade average.

The college is always unsure of a number of students they accept each year. Last year only twenty-four of these began the fall semester on limited class loads. At the end of the semester, many more were placed on limited loads due to academic probation. This year, the college "took precautions in advance" and placed eighty-four of these questionable students on limited loads at the start of the semester. Considering the desire of these students to learn, but understanding their below average comprehension rate, Dean Fuhr stated that "this is the humanitarian thing to do."

responsibility cited

But it is not always the below average students who have academic problems. Of those students "considered for academic failure" last spring, sixteen were of above standard ability according to their college board scores; thirteen were of below standard ability. There were, however, fewer below average students than others; therefore, a higher percentage of students below average than above were dropped from the rolls of the college. In quite a few cases, college board scores have little relation to college performance, as Dean Fuhr said. It is a person's motivation that makes him a successful college student.

Also as Dean Fuhr stated, Maryville College does have "a responsibility to those of less than normal standard ability." Eventhough the college accepts a substantial number of below average persons, "we are not," however, "going to lower our standards for these ten or twenty percent." Instead, Maryville College is raising her academic standards. One should, according to Dean Fuhr, "judge the standard (of a college) by curriculum, facilities, and faculty, not by the number of marginal students it admits." Maryville has improved and is improving its curriculum, its facilities, and its faculty.

Applicants for the graduate awards will be required to take the Graduate Record Examinations designed to test scientific aptitude and achievement. The examinations, administered by the Educational Testing Service, will be given on January 21, 1967, at designated centers throughout the United States and certain foreign countries.

Although any eligible person may apply in the Graduate Fellowship Program, applicants should be aware that the competition for these awards is intense. In 1966, of 9,153 applicants, 1,998 extremely well-qualified condidates were selected for awards.

The annual stipends for Graduate Fellows are as follows: $2400 for the first level; $2600 for the intermediate level; and $2800 for the terminal level. The basic annual stipend for Postdoctoral Fellows is $6500. Dependency allowances and allowances for tuition, fees, and limited travel will also be provided.

Further information and application materials may be obtained from the Fellowship Office, National Academy of Sciences-National Research Council, 2101 Constitution Avenue, N. W., Washington, D. Scots Yield to C-N Eagles

The Maryville Scots lost their last regular football game of the year to Carson-Newman 13-0. The game was Carson-Newman's Homecoming and dedication of their new stadium. Carson-Newman scored once in each of the quarters in the first half then hung on against 2 drives deep into their territory by the Scots.

The first touchdown came on an 88 yard drive. Larry Hester put Carson-Newman on the scoreboard with a three yard run to finish the drive. The kick for the extra point went wide. The big play of this drive was a 27 yard run by Larry Hester on third down to the Scottie 38. The outstanding Maryville defense can be seen in the fact that it took nine plays for the Eagles to go the last 38 yards.

In the second quarter the Eagles took the ball on the Maryville 41 and drove for their second touchdown. Most of the yardage on this drive came from fullback Bobby Delozier's 21 yard run. Halfback Ronnie Medlin took the ball the last 8 yards for the score. David Pitts added the extra point. At half-time, Carson-Newman held a 13-0 lead.

Maryville came into the second half determined to score. But the Eagle defense was too much for them. The first drive was stopped on the Eagle 9 by one of Benny Booher's two interceptions. The second drive was stopped at the Eagle 24 as the Scots ran out of downs. In this last drive the blitz of Linebacker Robert Lee and end Eddie Bodine proved too much for the Scot backfield.

The Scots played a good game against a fired-up Eagle squad. Jimmy Sullivan was 8|28 and 128 yards passing but 6 or 7 of the incompletions should have been caught. Paul Johnson picked up most of the Scot 43 yards rushing. Don Story, center co-captain, also played a good game on offense. On defense Bill Carkhuff was outstanding on the always good Scot defense.

This Saturday the Scots play Concord from West Virginia in its own Honaker Bowl. Named after the great Maryville coach Lombe Scott Honaker, and sponsored by the Honaker Club, the profits of the game provide athletic scholarships for deserving Maryville College athletes.

has been studying the problem of cars on campus. It was felt that the reasons given last year against having cars on campus were poor and that the rule should be changed.

There is the worry of the administration that Maryville will become a "suitcase college," and of "dead" week-ends. However, the feeling was that this challenge to the social activity on campus should enhance more and better activities. Another great worry is that it will be an alternative to study. Parking space is really no problem.

Every organization will be asked these questions: What do you feel should be the policy concerning automobiles on campus? What are the reasons that your organization feels we should or should not have cars?

Student body seems to be much behind having cars on campus; consequently, with the favor of many of the faculty also, there is a much better chance of accomplishing something this year.

Jim Reynolds is head of a committee to set up discussion groups similar to those on campus last semester. These informal groups of students and faculty members would meet and discuss anything, mainly, the concept of education and what this school in particular is doing.

The problem is that there is a need for students with the experience of last year to aid teachers in leading discussions with these new groups. People should be prepared to go and say something concrete, rather than turning the meetings into only gripe sessions.

Several suggestions were made as to how to get these groups started once more. Publicity is the important thing, and more will be said on these groups later. Anyone may attend these meetings. If interested or curious, see Jim Reynolds.

Dean Fuhr reported on the CUES questionnaire that juniors and seniors filled out last spring. The questionnaire contained statements which were to be answered true of false if it was or was not characteristic of Maryville. The report had interesting news and will be studied in relation to Maryville College's future in the academic world. (See article on CUES on front page.)

The Programs Committee has been looking at possibilities for a winter concert. Possible artists are Chad & Jeremy, Jay & the Americans, Zi Zentner, The Smothers Brothers, Stan Getz, The Everly Brothers, The Platters, and Nancy Ames.

The Elections Committee reported on Barnwarming election finals. The Barnwarming king is Wayne South, and the queen is Zeta Jones. Class sponsors are as follows; freshman—Barb Grinstead; sophomore—Judy Hannah; junior—Laurie Waller; senior—Barb Good.

which reveals characteristics of the college. CUES provide a measure of the environment along five dimensions, which appear to reflect certain ways in which colleges differ from one another. These dimensions are:

(1) Practicality: the degree to which personal status and practical benefit are emphasized in the college environment.
(2) Community: the degree to which the campus is friendly, cohesive, and group-oriented.
(3) Awareness: the degree to which there is a concern with self-understanding, reflectiveness, and the search for personal meaning.
(4) Propriety: the degree to which politeness, protocol, and consideration are emphasized.
(5) Scholarship: the degree to which competitively high academic achievement is evidenced.

Dean Fuhr will report on the CUES in chapel, Tuesday, November 22.

Faculty-Varsity Basketball Game on November 25

The Faculty All-Stars will challenge the varsity on Friday night, November 25. Last years classic featured the fearsome five of Young, Ramger, Tomlinson, Kardatzke and last, but not least, Mr. Hileman. This year, the varsity might be pressed to stop the faculties' play combinations and super-offensive. Pre-season opinions predict the faculty cagers may narrow the gap, with Hileman scoring more points. Sponsored by Circle K for Boys Club of America, the game will be played in the Alumni Gym.

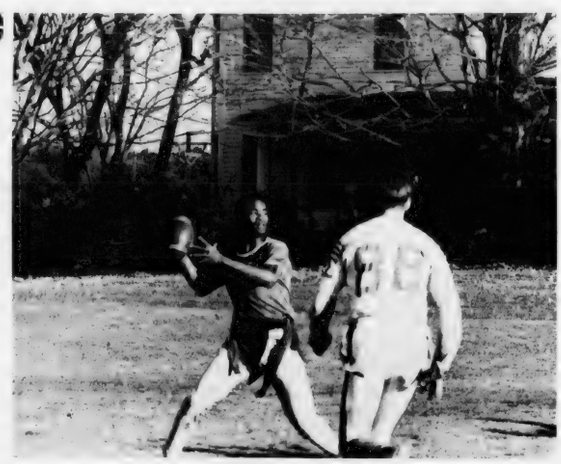
Societies Prepare for VC

with editorial comment

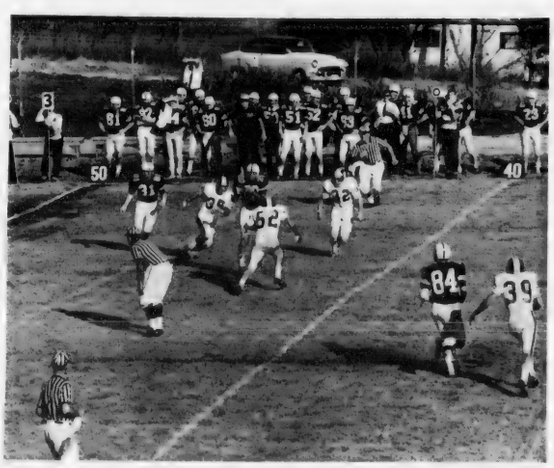
by Bill Evaul

The annual Phi-Sig flagball struggle this year turned into a full-fledged war. The only resemblance to other flagball games was the use of the football. The ball was only an excuse over which the two societies could work out their emotions in a legalized manner. What had been in past years a hard-fought game with some (but very little) unsportsmanlike conduct this year became the hard-fought quest for the title of unsportsmanship, with very little game thrown in to disguise the dirty exhibition. Before the game even started, yells were heard coming from one of the benches, "Does anyone hate them as much as I do?" To which a thundering chorus answered, "I do!"

Once the "game' started, it looked more like a sparring session at Cassius Clay's training camp from the amount of fist-fighting and yelling that went on. And to carry the analogy a bit further, the refereeing was about as good as that in the Clay-Chuvalo fight. There were a few players who tried to keep the game legal.But otherwise there was no attempt to hide the disregard for the rules that marked the play of both teams.



If this annual game is to continue without it turning into a farce, I would suggest the following revisions:



1. Professional referees or faculty members (preferably coaches—no football players, please) to officiate the game.
2. A reading of the rules and their explanation to both teams (together?) sometime before the game begins.
3. Expulsion from the game (either immediate or after one warning) for fighting, abusive language, unsportsmanlike conduct, or any other flagrant violation of the rules—with no exception—and a penalty assessed the violating team.

Oh, by the way, Alpha Sigma won by a score of 34-25.

Millsaps Squeezes By Scots

On Saturday, November 5, the Maryville Scots came within one minute of their second victory of the season. The Millsaps Majors scored a touchdown with one minute left in the game and squeezed by the Scots by a score of 21-17. In every other game this year the Scots could have used five more minutes and would have won half-a-dozen games. But this time they wish the game had ended five minutes sooner.

The Scots scored first in the contest on a 19 yard field goal by Jimmy Cannon. The Majors came right back with the ball and scored a touchdown on an eight yard pass from Danny Neely to Jim Massey. Pat Amon added the extra point and the half time score was 7-3 Millsaps.

In the third quarter the Scots took the ball on their own 35 yard line and marched 65 yards for a touchdown. Lynn Dodez pushed his way across from the one for the score. Cannon added the extra point and the Scots led 10-7. Early in the fourth quarter Maryville scored again on a 25 yard pass from Jimmy Sullivan to John McLaughlin. Cannon once again added the point after touchdown and the Scots held a commanding 17-7 lead.

But the Majors were not put down easily. They swept down the field in nine plays and scored on a 25 yard pass from Neely to Ted Weller. The kick failed leaving the score 17-13 Maryville. With just six minutes left the Scots took the ball and started moving the ball downfield, grinding out the yardage and the clock on the ground. Around mid-field the drive momentarily stalled and Sullivan had to take to the air. Mike Coker intercepted the pass and went to Scot 41 yard line. Five minutes later Neely threw a seven yard pass to Massey for the score. As insurance against a possible Maryville field goal, Neely ran for the two-point conversion. With one minute to go in the game, the Majors led 21-17. The game was not yet over, though. The Scots looked like they might still win as they started driving downfield. But the time ran out with Maryville in control on the Millsaps 45.

Standouts for the Scots were once again the entire defensive team and quarterback Jimmy Sullivan on offense. Others on the offensive team that looked impressive were Johnson (18 carries for 95 yards with 2 passes for 40 yards), Dodez (6 for 15 yards rushing and one touchdown), Webb (4 passes for 52 yards), Garner (5 passes for 52 yards), and McLaughlin (1 pass for 25 yards and a touchdown).

Student Council - Alcohol off Campus?

First on the agenda of the Student Council meeting, Tuesday, November 29, was a report from Pete Park, vice-president of UCCF, on an evaluation of chapel, vespers, and Bible-religion-philosophy course requirements. Pete had given a questionnaire concerning these to some faculty members and students, about sixteen altogether. However, he stressed that the evaluation was already rather out of date due to changes and improvement of chapel and vespers now being considered.

Some points brought out in the questionnaire about chapel were that, from an academic point of view, chapel adds nothing; chapel is not worship as it stands now.

Vespers was rated somewhat more favorably. The community is visible on campus only at vespers; educated people need to worship — how and where is not necessarily so important, but the need for an outlet for worship is important; and vespers is relevant to academics in that current religious and theological ideas and their relevance to current thought and actions are brought out.

"American Studies" Offered Second Semester

The Second Semester of the 1966-1967 academic year Maryville College will offer an Honors Seminar entitled "American Studies: 20th Century Interpretations" under a grant from the Lilly Endowment, Incorporated. This seminar, open to students in the Departments of Bible, Philosophy, and Religion; Economics; Education; English; History; Political Science; and Sociology, who have an overall grade average of 3.0, will give three semester hours of credit. Meeting twice weekly on Friday afternoons and Monday evenings, it will be conducted by seven visiting scholars in the seven fields participating. The Consultant for the program is Dr. Robert E. Brown, Professor of History at Michigan State University. The local Coordinator will be Dr. A. D. Ainsworth of the Maryville College faculty.

Visiting scholars will include, in addition to Dr. Brown, Dr. Nathalia Wright, Professor of English at the University of Tennessee, Dr. Robert L. Cunningham, Associate Professor of Philosophy at the University of San Franisco, Dr. Gottfried Dietze, Professor of Political Science at The Johns Hopkins University, Dr. James Koerner, who is with the American Council for Basic Education and formerly at the Massachusetts Institute of Technology, Dr. James Wiggins, Professor of Sociology and Associate Dean of the College of Arts and Sciences at Converse

Helen Vanni to Appear in Artist Series

"Versatility" is the key word that comes to mind in describing the beautiful young American mezzo-soprano Helen Vanni, who will sing in the Chapel tonight at 8:15 p.m. as the opening program in the Maryville College-Community Artists Series.

The star, combines a rich, creamy mezzo voice with flawless musicianship and a warmly gracious stage presence. She has mastered an impressive variety of operative roles, oratorios and recital programs which have won her enthusiastic critical praise and wide popular favor.

The Metropolitan Opera has found Helen Vanni an almost indispensable performer who can fill any mezzo role in the company's repertory. Last season she scored an outstanding personal success as Dorabella in the much praised production of Mozart's "Cosi fan tutte." The New York Times noted that "Miss Vanni was all that could be desired, a perfect foil for Leontyne Price's Fiordiligi."

So adaptable and dependable a performer is naturally much in demand by companies throughout the country. For several summers she has been leading mezzo-soprano of both the Central City (Colorado) and the Santa Fe (New Mexico) Opera companies. In the summer of 1965 she returned to Santa Fe to sing Rosina in "The Barber of Seville," Cherubino in "The Marriage of Figaro" and Suzuki in "Madame Butterfly." Summer 1966 again found Miss Vanni at Santa Fe to sing the title role off "La Cenerentola" and in Richard Strauss' "Capriccio." She also traveled to Chicago's Grant Park last summer to recreate her famous Octavian in "Der Rosenkavalier." In May 1966 she returned to San Francisco for their spring season in performances of Thomas' "Mignon" and Rossini's "L'Italana in Algeri." At the Cincinnati Summer Opera, July 1966, she again sang in "Cenerentola." Noted critic Paul Hume of the Washington Post has hailed her as "a new singer of the highest order."

As a concert singer, Miss Vanni appeared last season with the Boston Symphony Orchestra under Erich Leinsdorf in Boston, New York, and New Haven, singing Stravinsky's delightful "Pulcinella." She has sung with the New York Philharmonic under Thomas Schippers, and with the Philadelphia Orchestra under Eugene Ormandy, and she has made numerous television appearances for both CBS and NBC networks.

Helen Vanni has performed as soloist with nearly every leading symphony orchestra in America, and she is a great favorite at the summer festivals. In the summer of 1964 she appeared as featured soloist at Tanglewood with the Boston Symphony Orchestra. Highlights of her 1964-65 season included New York appearances with the Festival Orchestra in Bach's "Magnificat" at both Carnegie Hall and Philharmonic Hall, and a performance of Berlioz' "Benevenuto Cellini" with The Little Orchestra Society.

Recently Miss Vanni has recorded two specal albums for Columbia Records of Schonberg works with pianist Glenn Gould.

Barnwarming and Turkey Makes for Happy Thanksgiving

The annual Barnwarming festivities, with wild and sexy shows through peepholes, hay on the gym floor for seats, and a display of hidden talent, were held last Thursday evening November 24, in the Alumni gym. After an hour of touring the booths and eating donuts, everyone settled down for the opening of the talent contest. First the queen and king of Barnwarming were presented: Zeta Jones and Wayne South, both seniors. The Barnwarming court was made up of freshman Barbara Grinstead, sophomore Judy Hannah, punior Laurie Waller, and senior Barbara Goode. The girls were

Curriculum Planning Gains Momentum

Dr. Randolph Shields and Dr. Carolyn Blair returned to the campus the second week in November after visiting ten liberal arts colleges in Florida and the Midwest, where they studied recent developments in curriculum with the object of making recommendations for curriculum changes at Maryville. They studied catalogues and course syllabi, audited classes, and talked to administrators, faculty, and students to try to determine the strengths and weaknesses of the various programs.

In reports first to the Faculty Curriculum Committee and then to the Academic Committee of the Student Council, they discussed the variety of calendars, including the trimester system as it operates at New College, Sarasota, Kentucky Southern, and Beloit, and the use of the interim period at Florida Presbyterian and Hanover. They discussed the trend toward more independent study, the use of area examinations, and extensive off-campus study programs. At each school they found experiments in interdisciplinary courses, some designed to bring together all areas of study and others aimed only at integration of the disciplines within a particular area. They cited as outstanding Cornell's two-year humanities course and MacMurray's one-semester course in the fine arts.

more independent study

Also of particular interest was Earlham's Program II, an experiment with sixty freshmen representing a cross section of the freshman class. Divided into groups of twelve, the freshmen are left free to plan, with the help of a faculty tutor and two fellows (outstanding juniors and seniors), a program that will pre pare them to pass area examinations. After taking diagnostic tests to determine their needs, they are provided with booklists, outlines, questions, and lists of courses that they may audit; but the emphasis is on an individualized program for each freshman. Earlham's experiment, begun this fall and financed by the Lilly Foundation, is one of a number being carried on to explore the possibilities of more independent, unstructured study.

Four MC Students Attend Intercollegiate State Legislature

Four Maryville College students, Dave Hutchison, Jane Blanchard, Harry Burnette, and John Wolfe, were amoung 75 campus leaders from 12 Tennessee colleges and universities who attended the Tennessee Intercollegiate State Legislature meeting in Nashville Nov. 17-20.

The delegates, representing more than 40,000 college students in Tennessee, studied a number of bills which will go before the 1967 Tennessee General Assembly.

The TISL provides an opportunity through which all students can be represented and through which they can share their views concerning Tennessee laws, statutes, and issues. It provides an organization in which students can learn the legislative processes and practical problems of state government. The TISL is also an assembly through which students in the represented colleges can meet and know each other for leadership training.

New Officers Chosen

Bills that were passed by both the House of Representatives and the Senate of the TISL were: 1) a bill to repeal the Tennessee anti-evolution act; 2) a bill to abolish the $25,000 limit on campaign expenditures in state elections; 3) a resolution to support an enforceable closed primary in Tennessee; 4) a bill to lower the voting age in Tennessee to 19; 5) a resolution for reorganization of the state educational system; 6) a traffic safety resolution; 7) an air and water pollution resolution; and 8) an anti-secrecy bill which will ensure that meetings of all state agencies will be open to the public.

Officers for the next year were elected in a joint session in the Science Papers Presented by Students and Faculty

Three Maryville College students and a professor of mathmatics recently read papers at the Tennessee Academy of Science Meeting, held at East Tennessee State University at Johnson City, Tenn.

On Friday, November 25: Dr. Townes presented a paper on "The Contest of an n-Dimensional Sphere in Terms of the Gamma Function."

On Sat., November 26 the following students presented their papers:

Betty Currie, "Effects of Alkenylsuccinic Acids on Water Permeability of Bean and Tomato Roots,"

Frank Eggers, "Protein Synthesis: Mechanism of Chain Termination,"

Edward D. Smith, "The Michael Addition of Phosphines to Alkynes."

According to Dr. Young, "I can say without reservation that they were excellent papers which represented Maryville College in fine fashion."

EDITORIAL OUTLOOK

The last edition of the Highland Echo carried an article pertaining to the possibility of obtaining a third pair of societies on campus. It has been said by many that the only solution to the dilemma of the societies is for another set to be introduced. This, of course, follows the logical pattern that since party A and party B do not fulfill their said purposes, then naturally the intrusion of party C will cause the illness to be cured and everyone will be happy and the problem is solved.

An additional pair of societies is definitely needed on campus. Because enrollment increases each year, so do the demands for a means of social activity increase. No longer does a YMCA-YWCA organization provide all the "wholesome, inspirational" activities needed. Nor does the social life of the hallowed anscestors seem to appeal to very many. More societies would not necessarily increase the total time given to social events, but they would provide more avenues of social expression.

But, two more societies are not the social salvation for the poor Maryville College student. The two existing pairs of societies have become so weighted down with tremendous numbers of members—remember, no selectivity!—and have become, as one upperclassman put it, "nice for freshmen and sophomores." This problem has become apparent in recent years. Almost all enthusiasm for the societies fades away after the sophomore year.

Of course, the most logical thing for a Maryville College student to do is complain. Because the societies are no good, he's getting out. With the risk of moralizing, what makes a society "bad?" Before any proposed new pair of societies are actually organized, the present two sets would find it to their advantage to evaluate their own purpose and programs and see what makes their societies unsatisfactory. Members who want their society to improve should do something about it rather than talk something about it.

The administration will also have to consider the role of social societies on campus. The present policy toward social organizations is too authoritative and unrealistic. No society should be compelled to accept all pledges who wish to join with no manner of selection, nor should it have to schedule its events so as not to conflict with any other organization's activities. (Maybe the administration will discover some day that the whole campus does not always want to attend the same activity—even if it is the only one on campus!)

A third set of societies will greatly improve the social climate and opportunities on campus, but it will not be the only answer . . .

Letters to the Editor

Dear Editor,

I have been at Maryville College for ten weeks and most of the time I have enjoyed my stay. There is one practice around here, however, which I feel must be abolished if anyone is to have peace of mind. I am, of course, referring to the sport of umbrella taking. Since I have been at M. C., two umbrellas have been "borrowed" from me and have not been returned. Having already shelled out the money for two rather expensive umbrellas, I find that I can't afford another one. If anyone has any information to offer about either of my wayward umbrellas, I would appreciate it. You'll have no trouble finding me. I'll be the one who is walking in the rain with no umbrella.

Sincerely,
Jane Elmore

Dear Editor;

The last issue of the Highland Echo contained an editorial comment concerning the Societies preparation for our beloved friends, the V.C. After reading it, I thought a reply necessary.

"Full-fledged war, excuse for legalized emotional expression, unsportsmanlike conduct championship, and finally, dirty exhibition." These are just a few of the complementary (sic) adjectives used previously to describe the Phi-Sig Flagball Championship game.

I question the ability of a sports editor, be he from Maryville, Kalamazoo, or Tim Buck Too, to report such a contest when done in such a biased manner. Surely, unsportsmanlike conduct was expressed by individual players, but does that mean that the game was a "farce" or a "dirty exhibition?"

I personally feel that the game could and should have been played with far less emotional expression, and I'm sure many will agree. However, to degrade the game as was previously reported gives me little faith in our sports editor's qualifications. Let us look forward to the future in hope of reading better and less biased reporting.

—Boyd Davis

Dear Editor,

The principle reason for this letter is to express my sentiments concerning the Thanksgiving holidays given to the students of Maryville College. I think there is a general consensus of opinion among the students of our college on this subject.

This year we, the students, were awarded the grand total of one day on which to be thankful and to count our blessings. Unfortunately our list of blessings didn't include our being home with our families enjoying a good turkey dinner. While I realize that not all of the students or maybe not even a majority of the students here could go home on this holiday, I think that the barely tangible loss of time would be fully justfied by the benefit received by a great number of students.

The last rush before Christmas vacation is just beginning and for many students it is to be faced not with a fresh outlook of determination but with an attitude of apathy due to the monotony of several months of daily college life.

Why not give all the students a chance to catch their breath one extra day of rest? Why not offer a day of recuperation for the people tired of the everyday sameness of class and hard study? What's one lousy day? Of course, the past can't be changed, but what's wrong with making some plans to give the students a break next year. The results, I believe, will be quickly realized by the faculty and eagerly welcomed by the students.

Yours truly,
Knox Singleton

Scandinavian Seminar Offered

The Scandinavian Seminar is now accepting applications for its study program in Denmark, Finland, Norway and Sweden for the academic year 1967-68. This opportunity to combine living with learning will have special appeal both for college students and other adults who would find a year of study in a foreign country of special value.

The student in the Seminar program lives for 2 to 8 weeks with a family in his Scandinavian country, using its language daily and sharing in the activities of the community. For the major part of the year he lives and studies at a Folk High School — a residential school for young adults. He is completely separated from his fellow American students during the Seminar year, except for the short periods when he participates in the intensive language courses and the three general sessions conducted by the Seminar in Denmark, Norway and Sweden. An important aspect of the student's Seminar program is an individual study project in a field of special interest to him.

Over 100 American colleges and universities have given either partial or full credit for the Seminar year.

For complete information write to SCANDINAVIAN SEMINAR, 140 West 57th Street, New York, N. Y. 10019.

Music Faculty Attend Meeting in Dallas

Maryville College was represented at the forty-second Annual Meeting of the National Association of Schools of Music by Dr. Harry H. Harter, Dr. James A. Bloy, and Mr. Victor R. Schoen. The meeting was held at the Statler-Hilton Hotel, in Dallas, Texas, on Nov. 21 and 22.

The NASM has been designated by the National Commission on Accrediting as the responsible agency for the accreditation of all music degree curricula with specialization in the fields of applied music, music theory, composition, music therapy, musicology, and music as a major in liberal arts programs. Its deliberations will play an important part in music education trends in this country during the coming years.

Some 300 member schools were represented by the Deans of the Music Departments in many universities and colleges, and by the Administrative Heads of conservatories.

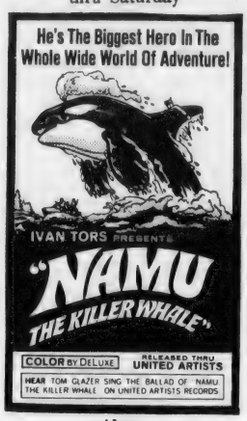
The Bible-religion-philosophy course is vital to Christian growth. It was felt, however, that more emphasis should be placed on religions altogether, not just Christianity; theological courses should be stressed more, also.

Peter pointed out that there was no specific reason for this evaluation, but it may be helpful in the future as changes in curriculum come about. There will be a survey on the religion-theology courses. Pete would like to have any helpful criticisms or ideas on this subject.

The Alcohol Commitee will begin action—at least thought action—this week. One question is whether the drinking rule might be changed. One Tennessee school has a rule of no drinking on campus, but the students are to live up to the state laws off campus. The question of a Student Court for enforcement of rules was brought up; there is a need for some responsible group for enforcement. It was stated explicitly that something will be done about the drinking on campus. See Roy Ries with questions or ideas.

John Wolfe reported briefly on Tennessee Intercollegiate State Legislature (TISL) meeting in Nashville which Maryville attended.



The Constitution Committee, headed by John Wolfe, is doing some interesting but quiet work. There are members of both faculty and student body on the committee which is mainly discussing judicial aspects (such as student court and student-faculty senate) and committees (such as student council representation and student-faculty committees) on campus. Research and discussion is continuing and reports will be made in the future.

Frank Eggers closed the meeting with this thought-provoking question: "How about a bar in the new student center!?!"

Dean Fuhr Summarizes Results of Cues

In the spring of 1966 Maryville College administered the College and University Environment Scales test, known as CUES, to 242 juniors and seniors. The testing program was developed by Dr. C. Robert Pace of the University of California, Los Angeles. The scores for Maryville College are now available, and I am making an attempt to summarize the findings. Scores are derived on the basis of the number of items on which at least two thirds of the students, by marking the answer in the same way, indicate which statements are generally characteristic of their college. The scales are designed to describe the institutional climate of the campus. They consist of 150 statements about college life and describe the intellectual, social and cultural climate of the campus as students see it.

The results are broken up into five categories. The first titled "Practicality" indicates the degree to which personal status and practical matters are emphasized in the college environment. A high score indicates that status is gained by knowing the right people, being in the right groups, and doing what is expected. A high score also indicates that order and supervision are characteristic of the administration and of the class work. The score for Maryville College on "Practicality" is 13, which is moderately high since it is the equivalent of 63%.

The second category is "Community," the degree to which the campus is friendly, cohesive, and group oriented. There is a feeling of group welfare and group loyalty. High scores indicate a supportive and sympathetic environment, while low scores reflect a predominance of privacy, personal autonomy, and cool detachment. Maryville College's score on this section is 18 which is a high score, equivalent to 87%.

The third category is "Awareness," the degree to which there is a concern with self-understanding, reflectiveness, and the search for personal meaning. High scores indicate an environment which stresses expansion and enrichment of personality, social horizons, and personal expression. Maryville College's score in this section is 6, a low 19%.

The fourth category is "Propriety," the degree to which politeness, protocol, and consideration are emphasized. High scores suggest an atmosphere of caution, thoughtfulness, conventionality; whereas low scores indicate a climate more demonstrative, assertive, rebellious, and

The Freshmen Niche

Here is the first installment of THE FRESHMEN NICHE, a column designed to make available news of Freshmen class progress. Each issue, a summary of weekly meetings of officers, representatives, and chairmen, will be published.

The Program committee, headed by Ruth Morris, has already accomplished a successful project, the Frosh booth at Barnwarming.

In a few days, announcements of the Christmas project, a Frosh activity, headed by Harry Wiesgerber, will be made. His committee has been considering many possibilities, and he has obtained administrative clearance for the project. Watch for more detailed information.

A vital function of our class will be served by the Evaluation and Analysis committee headed by Bob Knapp. This committee will gage the atmosphere of the Freshmen class, offering its results to Student Council. The stimulus of such direct expression of freshmen has already produced fruitful discussions and suggestions.

Looking forward to April 22, 1967, the Movie committee, headed by Ruth Lampe, has begun screening possible films.

Mac Mahan, chairing the Dance committee, reports that a frosh dance this semester is unlikely.

The Constitution committee will begin work next semester.

The Publicity committee, chaired by Larry Shapiro, will assume charge of this column, drawing on reports of class officers and respresentatves, in addition to its duties of publicizing class activities. Postus Scriptum: In order to keep the wheels of progress turning, grease them with your dues!

Car Committee Report

by Rob Nicholas

It has been three long years since the last student attempt to bring the horseless carriage to Maryville College was defeated by a narrow margin in the Executive Council. This year the Student Council Car Committee has been brought out of retirement and is about to take the wraps off of an entirely new, more liberal and efficient car proposal. It is the attitude of most of the people involved that this proposal will be passed by the Executive Council and go into effect possibly after spring vacation, but more probably next September. The details of this new proposal will not be made public until it is presented to the Student Council on December 13.

I feel that the main point which we have found after much deliberation with students, faculty, and administration is that the students will have to bear the primary responsibility for maintaining a car program on the Maryville College Campus. The idea of a Student-Faculty Court has been suggested for the enforcement of the rules of this program.

The students are going to have to develop an enthusiasm for this program and rally behind it for it to be a success. I think that the Student Body here at Maryville is ready and willing to accept this type of program and the responsibilities it entails. I feel that we are off to a great start, and the cooperation and enthusiasm exhibited by the students, faculty and administration who have aided in the foundation of this proposal seems to show that the college community supports it.

During this week both faculty and students will be receiving questionnaires pertaining to this proposal. Please do not hesitate to jot down any personal ideas you might have on the back of these sheets. This proposal will need 100% student support.

sion to hear reports from Dr. Shields and Dr. Blair and to consider a tentative proposal from the Curriculum Committee for a new curriculum and calendar for Maryville. In drawing up the tentative proposal, which is now under consideration by the faculty, the Committee kept in mind the following objectives:

(1) A general education that will provide breadth and a sense of the interrelatedness of all knowledge.
(2) Depth in an area of specialization.
(3) A calendar that allows for fewer courses per term and offers an opportunity for concentration of effort.
(4) A strong freshman year that takes into account the changes that are taking place in the high school preparation and attempts to provide fresh materials and approaches.
(5) A provision for more freedom and increasing independence on the part of the student.
(6) Flexibility in calendar and curriculum that will allow for periodic re-evaluation and change.
(7) A program unique to Maryville.

All who are interested in the proposed changes will have an opportunity to discuss them and to make suggestions. The Curriculum Committee will be working closely with every member of the faculty and with the Student Council Academic Committee. Plans are also being made for periodic reports to all interested members of the student body.

Poetry

For Heather

I will play cactus and be prickly,
Watch silently over prarie-dogs and kangaroo-rats.
Hug sand in my roots and stab the air with spines.

I will play cactus and stand thickly.
Water-bellied for the dry spells
Green and spiney me will laugh at sidewinders prospectors gold-panners
but not at stallions.

I keep colors in my pocket
And when the rains leave
I will hang them out to dry.

Oh and all the tales of other places.
Nights when coyotes keep the moon awake
I shall listen to stories of far aways and strange.
Tumbleweed tales they are and whispered softly.

(In the next life I shall roll forever.)

But so.

(And keep this to yourself—
How prickly I will cactus to the lizards—
For to tell a dream is to lose it,
And cactus dreams are always first to go.)

Descent

The wind in the yellow leaves is sighing, crying that the end of yellow leaves must come some day, and they must fallow fall in haunting softness down brown black boughs, in small heaps that gather like golden snow below each trunk and sleep.

Ashes

That first small scarlet prayer
Was venial faith
For all its crude inception,
But then I had not learned
That truth could have exception —
Sincereness could be damned.
Since then I've raised one scarlet
On another, relentless for some dorothea:
For some essential "gift of God."
Since then the fledgling wing has broken fire—
The ashes answer yet: I'll not retire!

Beauty

In the face of Beauty
Silent, mute, I stand,
Stricken dumb by visions
Of undreamed-of lands.
Beauty holds me captive,
Bound by unseen chain:
I'm no more my master
In her fair domain.
Faint, soft strains of music
Fall upon my ear:
Lifesong of Creation
Does my heart now hear.
And ever shall I bear
Deep within my heart
The sweetly burning pain
Of Beauty's hand the mark.

Fallfires

When leaves to golden flame are turning,
When crimson all the hills are burning,
Then fires of fall rekindle yearning
In the ashes of my heart.

When autumn's golden moon is shining,
When field and wood white mist are twining,
Then stirs again that Love once binding
In the ashes of my heart.

When wild geese for the south are parting,
When mousing owl through night is darting,
Then Phoenx-like is Love upstarting
In the ashes of my heart.

We roamed the flaming hills together
All through the misty autumn weather:
That Love will die but never, never,
In the ashes of my heart.

So take the flames of autumn's burning,
For I must be their beauty spurning,
Or else I die of hopeless yearning
In the ashes of my heart.

A sojourner like I
Hast no answer for "What?"
"How could?" "When?" and "Why?"
This world, this realm is a hot,
Strained, struggling, strait, strangling,
Arena from earth to sky.
Myself, a stranger to me as well as to thee.
Communicate thou couldst not with dirt?!
Yea,
Have Cheer!
Have Joy!
Have Fun!
Have Lust!
With others: fairies, squres, and birds.
Dost not disgust.
Or What's thy heaven for?

Jim Reynolds Accepted for Washington Semester

The American University in Washington, D. C. has announced that James Thomas Reynolds, Maryville College sophomore from Wallingford, Pa., has been accepted in the Washington Semester Program for the second semester starting on January 29, 1967. Reynolds, who is currently sophomore class president and on the Dean's List, will spend one semester in Washington studying American national government in action through a seminar, an individual research project and regular courses at The American University.

Begun in 1947, nearly one hundred accredited colleges and universities are now involved in this cooperative program with The American University, administered by its School of Government and Public Administration. The Program is open to juniors and seniors, regardless of their major field of study, who have had a course in American National Government and whose overall grade average is not lower than 2.5, the line between B and C. In exceptional cases a sophomore may be admitted.

Maryville College makes an award of two hundred and fifty dollars available to the person selected by the College in order to help cover the difference of costs between Maryville College and The American University. Further information about this Program can be obtained by interested persons from Dr. A. D. Ainsworth, Washington Semester Representative on the Maryville College campus.

Senate chambers Saturday afternoon. Newly elected officers are: Charles W. Bone, a junior economics major at Vanderbilt University, Governor; Ellis Bacon, a junior pre-med student at the University of Tennessee, president of the Senate; and Donald Bagwell, a junior political science major at East Tennessee State University, Speaker of the House.

Sessions at Vanderbilt

Provisional officers at this year's legislature were: Phil Moffitt, a UT student, provisional governor, Charles Bone, from Vanderbilt University, Speaker of the House, and Conrad Slate from Tennessee Tech, President of the Senate.

Other schools attending the mock legislature were: Austin Peay State College, East Tennessee State University, Middle Tennessee State University, Milligan College, Tennessee Tech, University of Tennessee, Trevacca College, Peabody College, Vanderbilt University, and the University of Chattanooga.

General sessions of the legislature were held at Vanderbilt University and in the Senate and House chambers in the Capitol Building in Nashville on Thursday, Nov. 17 thru Saturday, Nov. 19.

The TISL is composed of a governor, a House of Representatives, a Senate, and an executive council.

The governor is elected for a one year term by a majority of the delegates attending the legislature. The colleges and universities attending the TISL are represented in the House by a member for each 1000 full time students attending that school while in the Senate, each member school is represented by two delegates.

The nine member executive council serves as an administrative body in the TISL. It is responsible for arranging meetings, finances, and insuring that the purposes of the Tennessee Intercollegiate State Legislature are properly achieved.

individualistic. The Maryville College score is 9, or an equivalent of 42%.

The final category is "Scholarship," the degree to which competitively high academic achievement is noted. High scores indicate an emphasis on intellectual speculation and the pursuit of knowledge for its own sake. The Maryville College score on this section is 2, or a low 12%.

One factor that immediately suggests itself is the comparison between the Maryville College scores and those of other colleges and universities. This information is available in some detail in a technical manual. I will mention just two factors. One gets the impression from studying the manual that six highly selective, private, non-sectarian, liberal arts colleges set a pattern that it is hoped other schools will emulate. The six are Bennington, Vassar, Antioch, Randolph-Macon, Swarthmore, and Reed. These schools tend to score high—for the most part above 90%—in scholarship and awareness, and very low—less than 10%—in practicality, which is the opposite of what we find in the Maryville College profile in these three categories. If we take colleges similar to Maryville, however—strongly or moderately denominational, small liberal arts schools—the contrast is not so great. These schools tend to score high in practicality where our score of 63% is at the lower end of the range for these schools, high in community where our score of 87% is toward the top end of the range, the six norm schools low in awareness where our score of 19% is near the median for the other schools, high in propriety where our score of 42% is on the low side of the range, and middle to low in scholarship where our score of 12% is definitely lower than most.

Maryville does not vary greatly from other schools of a similar nature but shows marked contrast to the half dozen prestige institutions of the country. It should be made clear that most institutions, large and small, do not measure up to the scores for these six institutions. Dr. Pace gives the impression that, at least in his impression, these schools represent a norm, not of what schools generally represent but of what ought to be the case.

May I close with one word of caution. This report represents an effort on my part to be objective in summarizing the principal findings of the CUES program. It presents a complex picture. It could easily be quoted out of context. This is particularly true if someone has a point of view which he wishes to substantiate and uses a portion of the results in an effort to prove his point. Such use may be misuse, since the purpose of CUES is not to provide information for various parties to debate, but to provide to students, faculty, and staff the kind of statistical information on which long range planning can be based. In the long run the safest thing to do with respect to the use of such a study is to review the results for one's self and draw one's own conclusions. To depend upon the conclusions of others, even upon mine in this report, or to sell a conclusion to someone else on the basis of the report may be to miss the fundamental purpose of the study.

One final comment. I mentioned that Dr. Pace feels that approximately six institutions of higher learning represent the norm, not of what most schools are, but what he feels they ought to be. This, of course, is a value judgment on his part; and we will be unable to indicate clearly whether we feel Maryville College ought to be like these schools on two counts. We will have to decide whether we agree that Dr. Pace has selected wisely, and we will also have to decide whether we want Maryville to represent similar characteristics. The statistical report and the manual interpreting the results are available in my office, and representatives of the faculty and student body are welcome to review the materials.

escorted by the class presidents. Dr. Copeland crowned the Barnwarming Queen.

Next, twelve contestants in the talent show were presented. First-place winner Ron Kolb amazed the audience with his abilities as an escape artist by freeing himself from six shackles and then escaping from a locked mailbag. Second and third place winners were John Kerr and the Highlanders Four.

Following a delicious dinner in the dining room and the Barnwarming festivities, students were pleased with a good Thanksgiving—even if it were away from home!

Concord Runs By Maryville

The Maryville Scots dropped their ninth game in ten tries to Concord College of West Virginia by a score of 42-13. The Scots hosted the second annual Honaker Bowl, named in honor of Lombe Scott Honaker, late coach at Maryville College. The proceeds were to go to athletic scholarships from the Honaker Club to future Scot stars.

The game, scorewise, belonged completely to Concord. They scored once in the first and last quarters, and twice in each of the middle two periods. The Scot tallies came in the second and fourth quarters. Ernie Greeno of Maryville and Richard Bourne of Concord were given the Most Valuable Player awards. Greeno was in on numerous tackles, many of them in crucial situations, and intercepted one pass to stop a Concord drive. Bourne carried the ball 11 times for 44 yards and two touchdowns and also handled the punting chores for the victors.

Concord scored first going 46 yards in 11 plays, with Charlie Hamer plunging over from the one for the score. One quarter later the Mountain Lions went 60 yards in 9 plays for their second score. Jimmy Manley got the points on a two yard run. Five minutes later, Bill Christmas recovered the first of two fumbles and started a 49 yard drive that ended in Richard Bourne going 9 yards for the third score. With just a few seconds left in the half the Scots were able to get on the scoreboard after a 59 yd. drive in 15 plays (helped by some pass interference calls), with Jimmy Sullivan sneaking across from the one. Jimmy Cannon added the extra point.

In the second half Concord drove from its own 46 in 8 plays; the clincher was a three yard scamper by Bourne. A few minutes later Jimmy Lowe intercepted a pass, went 56 yards, and Concord had a 35-7 lead. On the next drive the Scots started from their own 14 and went the whole way on an 86 yard pass play from Sullivan to Paul Johnson; Cannon's kick went wild. The Scots regained possession of the football moments later and started driving toward another score, but this time they were stopped by Van Deusen's second interception—this one in the end zone. On the next play, from the 20 yard line, Guy Sutphin broke loose and ran 80 yards for the final score of the evening. Doug Dean added the point as he had after every other Concord score. The final result was: Concord 42, Maryville 13.

Of the Scot defensive team, laurels go to Ernie Greeno, Dean Bercaw, Fred Rose, Dave Garner, David Berry and Ralph McCampbell—all of whom made important tackles and either recovered fumbles or intercepted passes to stop Concord drives. On the offensive team, Sullivan was 15-37 on passes for 224 yards. Paul Johnson was on the receiving end of one of those for an 80 yard touchdown play.

Little Chapel to Receive Pipe Organ

by Jim Daugherty

A two manual, five rank Schantz organ will soon be installed in the Little Chapel. The instrument was donated last spring by Miss Katherine Davies as a memorial to her parents, Dr. George Ewing Davies and Mabel Currie Davies. Miss Davies was chairman of the Fine Arts Department at Maryville from 1936 to 1964. Her parents had taken a very active interest in college affairs since their retirement here in 1940.

According to Dr. James Bloy, the instrument is planned "to be of a nature that it will be quiet enough for a small room, effective for hymn accompaniment, and flexible to play organ literatuure of all styles." The new organ is part of a project to mold the Little Chapel into a more significant place in the life of the college. Several small services are forseen to emphasize chapel facilities.

Varsity Squeaks By Faculty

The Varsity team was hard pressed Friday night, but emerged with a close victory in the Annual Varsity-Faculty game. Although the scoreboard read 105-63 in favor of the Faculty, the actual score was 57-35.

The game pitted the awesome defense of the Varsity Scots against the prodigious offense of the Faculty Scholars. As it was, neither of these two elements won the game; the great depth of the Varsity bench overwhelmed the outmanned Faculty team. Coach "Red Aurbach" Campbell's team was plagued with absences that made him play the game shorthanded. Incidentally, the game was highlighted by the dismissal of Dr. Young from the Faculty as a result of his scoring the 100th point of the game. In an extra-emergency session of the Executive Committee it was decided to keep Dr. Young on the Faculty because of the mistake of the scoreboard in giving the actual score.

Leading the scoring for the Varsity was Bill Padgett with 12 points and Jack Llewellyn with 10. Dean Clark and Lee Falknor each had 8 points. The Varsity play was spearheaded by "Fouler" Young with 14 points and Ramger's 11 points. "Dizzy" Dent put in 6 points and gathered in numerous rebounds in a support effort. Others scoring for the Varsity were: Bettis 6, Van Leuven 4, Hancher 4, Raby 3, and Rumford 2. Scoring additional points for the Faculty were Hileman and Snider with 2 each. Cartlidge, "Hatchet" Hicks, and Baird were unable to get into the scoring column.

Sox 'n Sneakers

Soccer wound up with a tallied win for Chi Beta. Kathy Bishop managed this sport and captains were Betty Vincent for Theta and Marge Stewart for Chi Beta.

The Student Center is still in the midst of the ping pong tournament with Sue Fershee in charge.

With volleyball in full swing, now is a good time to mention the All-Star Volleyball Game. It will be held December 8th in the Alumni Gym at 7:30. The teams are composed of the best Theta and Chi Beta players as voted on by both society's teams. Captains for Chi Beta teams are Alice Weber, Carole Mills, Sandy Hynd, and Ann Whittier, and for Theta Epsilon are Denise Meury, Margaret Spurling, Linda Reifenkugal, and Pam Pierce. The sports managers for volleyball are Maren Wright and Mary Paddison.

An extra invitation is extended to all those interested in a good, skilled game of volleyball — come support your favorite team or special girl as the competition will be great.

Merry Christmas and Happy New Year

How About A Three-Day Thanksgiving?

WASHINGTON — What kind of Thanksgiving did you have?

Was it leisurely and enjoyable? Did it give you an opportunity for calm reflection of the things you have to be thankful for?

Or were you harried by the rush of a one-day trip to visit relatives and friends with whom you like to share Thanksgiving dinner? Did the thought of returning to work the next day bother your digestion?

If you wished the holiday adjoined a weekend, so as to provide a three-day holiday, you were not alone.

A poll of its membership recently completed by the Chamber of Commerce of the United States shows that businessmen overwhelmingly favor changing some holidays, including Thanksgiving, to a uniform Monday observance as a way of creating more three-day weekends.

Completed questionnaires were received from 9,964, or one-third of the members polled.

The returns show the 85% of the respondents favor the general idea of observing Memorial Day, Thanksgiving, Independence Day, Veteran's Day and Washington's Birthday on Mondays. The questionnaire noted that there have been proposals to designate Washington's Birthday as Presidents. The questionnaire did not

Prof. Griffits to Teach in Exchange Program

Dr. F. A. Griffitts, Professor and Chairman of the Department of Chemistry at Maryville College, will be teaching chemistry next year at the University College of Cape Coast in the African country of Ghana. Dr. Griffitts has been granted a leave of absence by Maryville College to accept the year's appointment.

He will be a lecturer in physical chemistry under the Department of State international exchange program, part of the Fulbright-Hays Act. About 500 American teachers are chosen each year under the program, which is designed to promote international understanding and strengthen American cultural ties with other countries. The program is particularly valuable in assisting educational advancement in developing countries.

Dr. Griffitts, a graduate of Maryville College, holds the master's degree from Iowa State College and the PhD from Indiana University. He has taught at Maryville since 1925. Dr. and Mrs. Griffitts live at 717 Jones Ave. in Maryville.

Selection of Dr. Griffitts for the post was made by the Board of Foreign Scholarships, whose 12 members are appointed by the President of the United States. The appointment is from September to June, 1967-68.

Dr. Griffits

Both Dr. and Mrs. Griffitts will be going to the new African country, formerly the British Gold Coast. The University College of Cape Coast is about 90 miles west of Accra, the capital.

WARNING!

The Highland Echo again wishes to inform all new students and remind all old students that their dormitory rooms may be searched during holidays. Although we hope this will not occur, it must be remembered that room checks, searches and seizures have occured in previous years—so please act accordingly and leave that room "clean."

Problem Of Alcohol Discussed

The Faculty Alcohol Committee met Tuesday evening, December 6, in the lounge of the Fine Arts Center to discuss the ever-present problem of drinking on campus. The committee which consists of Dr. Campbell, Dr. Young, Dr. Blair, Dr. Case, Dr. Watters, and Dr. Shields, met with the Resident Assistants and Dean Fuhr to consider what is now being done, and what can be done to curb the violation of rules and hopefully arrive at some conclusion as to how to remedy the problem.

All agreed readily that the present policy regarding alcohol was not working—and that something needs to be done about it, that is, something more than an official "statement." Several problems were brought out regarding the present policy. Most of the students—Resident Assistants (and Senior Counsellors too) as well—consider the policy unrealistic, and are unwilling to enforce it in many instances. Another problem which seems to have gone unnoticed before is the ability of minors to purchase alcohol in town, in many instances not having to show any I.D. It is unnecessary to go out of town for booze any longer: it is within a short ten-minute walk from campus. The main issue, however, was not the use of alcohol by Maryville College students off campus, but rather on campus. The amount of alcohol consumed in dormitory rooms each week is tremendous. Most of the Resident Assistants and faculty members seriously considered the proposal for legalizing drinking off campus for those over twenty-one years of age. This could only be

One of the most exciting things that has ever happened at Maryville is the new curriculum planning which is now in full swing. If this curriculum is approved, it could mean the difference between a pretty-good-school and a very-good-school. It seems that if Maryville does not continue to revise and reevaluate its curriculum, it will soon dwindle down to the not-so-good-school and find itself fighting to "stay in business."

According to those studying the proposed curriculum changes, there will be no room for the poor teacher, or the one who is unwilling to challenge his students—intellectually, that is. Professor A whose yellowed lecture notes are disintegrating from age and Professor B whose preparation for each class involves wondering what to use to fill up fifty minutes will be forced to remove themselves through Exit C.

If any school is extremely lucky to have three or four excellent teachers, then Maryville can certainly consider itself lucky. In addition to the few excellent ones, there are several more very good professors—especially in view of some of the additions, and deletions, made in the last two or three years. In fact, some students—especially upperclassmen—have been able to tell the difference in the quality of a few professors in comparison to those of two or three years ago. Some are just finding how difficult some courses can be, and how difficult it is to make an excellent grade.

It is hoped that Maryville will continue to progress by making its faculty—and its students—meet higher standards. It couldn't hurt the quality!

The condition upon which God hath given liberty to man is eternal vigilance; which condition if he break, servitude is at once the consequence of his crime, and the punishment of his guilt.

Only our love hath no decay;

Dottie

Dottie,
Dulcet serenity,
Presence that mulls the air
And strikes a sombre chord
Deep inside somewhere,
Spirit mists of mauve
And flutelike enshroud —
Smother the pulse
And waft it away,
Make it oblivious to all
Except your pensive grace.
Know that my heart and mind
Enclose your tender essence,
Dottie.

Correlation Between Good Grades and Insurance Premium Shown

One major automobile insurance company in the United States is now rewarding the student who makes excellent grades in college by offering lower insurance rates. In a report by Norman L. Vincent, Ph.D., entitled "Cars, Youth and Grades," there are these quotations:

"Unmarried male drivers under 25 years of ago represent 18 per cent of the driving population but they are involved in 30 per cent of the accidents . . . Among the reckless and irresponsible are many capable, conscientious drivers who should not be required to pay high insurance premiums. . . .The measuring stick is scholarship. . . . Unique in the insurance business it is called the 'Good Student Discount.' . . . 68,000 young men were able to document the relationship between use of car, good grades, and personal responsibility. . . . To qualify for a 25 per cent discount on insurance premiums, an unmarried male from 16 to 25 who is a full-time student in college must present certification of any one of the following:

—He ranks in the top 20 per cent of his class.
—He has a grade average of 3.0 or better.
—He is on the dean's list."

Anyone interested in further information about such discounts may contact the Office of the Dean of Students.

Twas de Night Before Christmas

Twas de night before Christmas,
And all troo de Place vhere I was staying at,
Not a creature vas stirrin', not even de mouses,
Except my Brother-in-law, and he's a rat.

De stokins vas hung by de chimney, kinda careful like,
In hopes dat de man wit de long red snickers vould soon be dar.
Ma in her stokins and me in my nightshirt,
Had yust vashed our feet fer a long vinter's night.

Ven all of a sudden on de roof dar vas a dickens of a noise.
I spranged to de vindow to see if it vas de Boys.
Avay to de vindow I flew like a flash,
I could hafe made it faster, but I yust ate some hash.

De moon vas shining like it vasn't even night.
But vat to my vandering eyes should appear, but a teensy-veensy sled and eight tiny horses,
Vith a little old driver so lively and quick,
I knew in a moment it must be Santa Claus.

More rapid dan eagles, dem horses dey came;
And he hollered and shouted and called dem bad names.
On Dancer, on Prancer, On Dunder, and Blitzer, On Cosmetics, On Pittsburgh, On Stupid, Onnnnnnnn . . . Visconsin; Onnnnnnn . . . Visconsin.

All of a sudden I heard dose animals monkeyin around up der vith dare feet.
I drew in me head, tripped over de cat;
And down de chimney came Santa Claus, flat on his back.
He vas fat as an old hog, a right yolly old elf,
And I laughed vhen I saw him, I yust couldn't help it.

His droll little mouth vas drawn up in a bow,
And de beard on his chin dragged him down in de snow.
A stub of a pipe he had tight in his tooth,
And de smoke roolled around his head like a hoop.

He had a little round belly, dat shook vhen he chuckled,
Yust like some good grape yelly.
A vink of his eye and a tvist of his head soon got me to know
I didn't have nothin' to vorry about.

He spoke not a vord, but vent right to his vork,
Filled all de hosiery and turned with a spurt;
And laying his finger in front of his nose and givin' a bound,
Up de chimney he rose; an holy smoke, he vas gone!

He yumped in his big open yob, to his team give a vhistle dat he promised dem fer Christmas,
And I heard him exclaim as he scrammed out of dar,
"Merry Christmas to all, and to all . . . I hope you got vat you vanted."

What Happens to the Academic Commmnity...

Dear Maryville College Community:

Recently the Highland Echo published a trio of articles concerned with explaining the admissions policy of the College. These articles represented a possible point of view with regard to admissions. We would like to share another possible point of view. One thing for which Maryville College has been noted in its past, and therefore an important part of the tradition out of which she grows, has been her concern for quality education. Whatever else was said about the "old" Maryville of the twenties, thirties, and forties, it was always recognized that she enabled her students to receive a good liberal arts education. At the same time, Maryville was concerned for the people of our nation who found it difficult to pay the higher prices of other institutions. It would appear that we are moving from the tradition of a good education for less money to that of a poor education for more money. We are no longer primarily concerned with the financially deficient but with the academically deficient.

We ask ourselves the question, "What happens to an academic community when it admits large numbers of probationery students?" It has been our experience that under such circumstances the faculty are forced to spend more and more time and energy helping the low-level student grasp after mediocrity. This is always done at the expense of time and energy that might be given to the good and better students both in the sense of ability and motivation. As a consequence, higher-level students find less and less challenge and turn toward other academic communities or non-academic pursuits. This in turn means there is less intellectual stimulation for the faculty, who either leave or settle comfortably into habits and thought patterns of an unchanging routine. The total result is a downgrading and destruction of the academic life of the community.

As a private institution of higher learning, do we have to concede to the public philosophy that anyone who wants an education ought to be given the chance — at Maryville? At what cost to our academic life? Does the "new" Maryville have to become a lesser Maryville, or can she move on to fill the gap of the lack of quality liberal arts colleges in the Southland?

In the light of these concerns we unsentimentally but respectfully raise the question, "Is the present admissions policy the best policy for Maryville College?"

Handel's Messiah Given 34 Years

A chorus of over 250, with a full orchestra and pipe organ, presented the Messiah in the College Chapel Sunday, December 11. The program Sunday was the 34th annual presentation of Handel's great oratorio at Maryville.

The chorus, which had been rehearsing since Oct. 10, was made up of the Maryville College Choir, the Women's Choir, Men's Glee Club, and others from the college and community. The "Messiah" was directed by Dr. Harry H. Harter, Chairman of the Department of Fine Arts.

Dr. James A. Bloy of the music faculty was at the console of the Lambert Memorial Organ in the 1200-seat Wilson Chapel. Mrs. Sallie W. Schoen played the harpsichord, and Robert J. Bonham, the piano. Jonathan Gresham, director of the Highlander Band, rehearsed the orchestra.

Most of the work was performed, although some of the music is left out each year because a full performance of the Messiah would last for over three hours. The work consists of Biblical passages set to music and telling the story of the prophecy of Christ's coming, his birth, ministry, crucifixion, and resurrection.

It was necessary to provide auxiliary seating for the overflow crowd which attended the performance.

The Messiah is one of the biggest events of the school year.

Standing L to R: M. Lafferty, P. Frederickson, M. Gross, M. Sims, S. Schoen, A. Hongspon, Mrs. Blankenship, M. Green, M. Frazier, M. Newlin, L. Taylor, M. Rucker, A. Junkin, E. Mantz. Seated: two members of Carson-Newman Chapter, Mrs. Kurl, Dr. Harter, Mrs. Bishop, two members of Carson-Newman Chapter.

Delta Omicron Members Installed

On December 1, 1966, Alpha Zeta Chapter of Delta Omicron International Fraternity was installed on the Maryville campus.

Mrs. Victor R. Schoen, member of the music faculty, and Mrs. Harry Blankenship, professional member, and twelve collegiate members were initiated. Chapter patrons are Miss Catherine Currie Davies, Dr. Harry H. Harter, and the Maryville Music Club was represented at the installation by Mrs. Arthur S. Bushing.

Installing Officers were Mrs. Hellen Downie Bishop, International President, Mrs. Lucy Kurl, Province President, and a group of collegiate members of Delta Omicron from Carson-Newman College.

A musicale was presented in the Fine Arts Center Music Hall following the initiation. Performers included Martha Lafferty, Linda Taylor, Margaret Gross, organists; Areerat Hongspan, Edna Mantz, pianists; a trio composed of Alice Junkin, clarinetist, Margaret Gross, cellist, and Mary Rucker, pianist, Marguerite Sims, clarinetist; Martha Frazier, soprano; Margaret Green, accompaniest. Ushers were members of Phi Mu Alpha Sinfonia.

A reception in the Fine Arts Center Lounge followed the musicale. The color scheme of rose and grey, the fraternity colors, was carried out in the decorations.

A Maryville Fairy Tale

Once upon a time there was a momma bear, a poppa bear, a little brat bear (he was pampered by momma and poppa), and a little baby bear. Now momma and poppa bear always told their two baby bears to always tell the truth and everything would be all-right. This was the best thing that they could do.

One day, little baby bear ate some porridge, which his momma forbade him to eat. She said, "If either of you two boys eats this porridge, I am going to spank you twenty times." Nevertheless, the baby bear ate the porridge because he was hungry. It seems that his momma never gave him any so he was tempted to take some.

Now little brat bear saw him take some porridge and decided to tell on his brother . . . "Maybe momma and poppa will love me more if I tell them?"

Momma bear asked the little baby bear if he was the naughty bear who ate the porridge. At first, little baby bear was afraid that his momma would scold him very harshly, but he decided that since poppa liked him a little he would not lie and tell momma that it was he.

When momma heard this she was very upset and scolded little baby bear very harshly. He was very surprised and could not understand. Why did she beat little baby bear so hard? Was she ashamed later of her own behavior when she told him not to tell anyone who beat him so badly?

Please tell me why did momma bear treat little baby bear so harshly? Huh? Why?

The Freshmen Niche

by The Publicity Committee

During the past few weeks, the Freshmen Class officials have not only succeeded in planning many projects, but also in executing hem successfully.

The Movie committee, with the Class officials, has been working hard in its investigation of possible films for the Freshmen Movie to be shown on April 22, 1967. At a meeting of the Officers last Tuesday, a film was selected. Be sure to keep the above-mentioned date open.

The Dance committee has announced that there will be a dance this year. This is nice to know, isn't it? It will be sometime during the second semester.

The Evaluation & Analysis committee has many things planned, and it is going to have its regular meeting shortly after Christmas vacation. Many members are presently working on individual projects.

On Sunday, December 11, 1966, the Freshmen class was supposed to have come out to decorate the tree in the chapel courtyard. To those of you who showed your class spirit, we heartily thank you for helping. To those of you who could not find the time, we hope you all get A's on your term-papers.

Your Freshmen class officers would like to wish each and everyone of you a very Merry Christmas and a Successful New Year. There is much to be done second semester, and we are hoping that all will take an active interest in some way.

Maryville Scot Football Team Honored

Members of the 1966 Maryville College Scot football squad and the coaches were honored at a banquet sponsored by the Honaker Club Wednesday, Dec. 14, at the Green Meadow Country Club. Jack Proffitt was Master of Ceremonies, and Coach James Dunn, Backfield Coach for the University of Tennessee, showed filmed highlights of U-T's 1965 season.

One of the men who has had a major part during the past two years in the transition of the Vols from the single wing to the I formation, Coach Dunn saw his work pay off last December with a 37-point output against UCLA.

Only a few seasons ago, Dunn himself was cutting a mean path through the Southeastern Conference despite the handicap imposed by a decided weight disadvantage. It is a tribute to his fighting qualities that Florida was able to compile an 18-9- record during the three years he directed the T formation attack there.

At 143 pounds, Coach Dunn gained fame as one of the nation's smallest quarterbacks, and as his career advanced he also became recognized as one of the best.

A compendium of happiest college memories for the dapper backfield coach would have to include Florida's 20-0 win over Auburn when he was a sophomore in 1958—a season which ended in a visit to the Gator Bowl. An especially sweet 7-6 triumph over Georgia was made possible that year by a 76-yard touchdown run by Jimmy.

Coach Dunn, who played for, and then served under, Bob Woodruff when the latter was head coach at Florida, came to Tennessee from his Alma Mater in December, 1963.

M. H. Gamble, President of the Honaker Club, welcomed the guests, and Maryville College Coach Howard Tomlinson announced the names of the co-captains for next year's Maryville squad. Coach Tomlinson also made awards and presented letters to this year's lettermen.

Officers of the Honaker Club are Dr. Robert Proffitt, President-elect; Ira Morrison,, Vice President; Robert Jackson, Secretary; William Anderson, Treasurer; and Arnold Kramer, Tom West, and Hobart Ford, Directors.

The Honaker Club, formed in 1951 to honor the late Lombe Scott Honaker, Coach and Athletic Director at Maryville College for 30 years, is now providing the Lombe Scott Honaker Academic Scholarships to Maryville College. The scholarships are awarded to athletes. In addition, the club seeks to help the College in promotion of the varsity athletic program.

Winter Sports Start

The winter sports season started last week when the Maryville Roundballers played four games and the Grapplers wrestled in two meets. In wrestling Maryville scrimmaged against Carson-Newman and showed a great deal of strength. This match proved that this year the points will be spread out between the light and heavyweight divisions as the Scots presented one of their most balanced teams in recent years. Last Saturday Maryville met the much improved Knoxville 'Y' in Knoxville. They won their first regular season match. Winning for the Scots were Captain Ron Pritts at 123 lbs., Garry Dauron at 137, Gary Loss at 145, Bob Nicolas at 152, and Van Pallis at 177. Ralph Johnson and Lynn Dodez looked strong in losing matches against superior opponents.

lose first four

The Basketball team got off to a slow start. On Dec. 1, they lost to Warren Wilson 85-66. Bill Padgett put in 31 points in a losing effort. Captain Jack Llewellyn and Phil Bettis scored 10 each. Jon Hancher pulled in 15 rebounds for the Scots. On Dec., 5, the Scots traveled to Emory, Virginia, to meet the Emory and Henry Wasps. Maryville suffered its second set-back 129-91. Bettis was high scorer with 27 points. Padgett added 20 and Llewellyn 12. Jon Hancher was once again high rebounder with 9. On Dec. 8 the Scots faced LMU (Lincoln Memorial University) and were manhandled by a score of 124-62. LMU had five players in the double figures and a 50% field goal shooting average. They also set an OVC (Ohio Valley Conference) record for the most rebounds in a game with 87 grabs. For the Scots, Padgett scored 31 points—half of the Scot output that night—and Bettis put in 10. Hancher and Bruce VanLeuven led the Scot rebounders with 7 each.

On Saturday, Dec. 10, the Scots met Berry on the home court. After a close first half that ended in a 40-40 tie, the Scots cooled off and Berry surged ahead to win 90-72. Padgett and Llewellyn led the Scot scorers with 22 points, while Don Payne and Bettis added 11 more each. Padgett led the rebounders with 4.

win over Bryan

Monday, Dec. 12, the Scots faced Bryan College at Maryville and came away with their first victory of the season. Maryville broke the century mark for the first time in over three years as they won going away by a score of 102-75. Padgett started things off by scoring 7 quick points and from then on the Scots lead by at least 5 points for the rest of the game. The Scotties took a slim 46-39 lead into the half time period, but they came back ready to stop Bryan cold. The Bryan Lions threatened to keep up for about 5 minutes, until their offense fell apart. In the second half they scored on only 9 of 45 shots from the floor. Coach Baird went to the second team with three minutes left and a twenty point lead. With one minute left in the game, Lynn Dildine scored the 100th point, and a few seconds later, Dick Ward added two more to round out the scoring for the Scots, Padgett and Llewllyn led scorers with 25 points, Payne had 16, and Bettis added 15. In the rebound department, Llewellyn had 13, VanLeuven and Padgett 11. The Scots are now 1-4 for the season.

discuss changing the observance of Christmas or New Year's Day.

Significantly, 90% of the businessmen felt that their employees will like the idea and that it will improve employee morale.

In addition to supporting the idea as an aid to their employees, more than half of the businessmen said that the changes would help production work schedules. One-third expressed belief that the changes would stimulate the sales of goods and services.

About 14% disapproved the idea. Objections most frequently dealt with the traditional aspects of existing holiday observance dates and the possibility that more highway accidents might result from increasing the number of three-day weekends.

Interest by the Chamber members in this subject was underlined by the enthusiastic remarks of many respondents. A small Wyoming service company said: "This would be the smartest thing that ever happened." A California banker queried his employees and "was amazed at the spontaneous enthusiasm for the idea."

Beaux Arts Trio in Artist Series

The Beaux Arts Trio of New York with Menahem Pressler at the piano, Daniel Guilet, violin; and Bernard Greenhouse, cello, presented the second program in the Maryville College-Community Artists Series Friday, Jan. 13, in the College Chapel.

The trio has recently won the esteemed "Grand Prix du Disque, 1964" in Paris, and is now equally famous on both sides of the Atlantic. It has the unique distinction of having performed no less than nine consecutive seasons at the Berkshire Music Festival in Tanglewood.

Praise for the Beaux Arts Trio of New York has been echoed over and over, not only by audiences and critics, but by the strictest judges of musical excellence—their fellow musicians. "An inspiring experience," was the verdict of the late Arturo Toscanini after hearing the trio play. "Fine chamber music with impeccable taste and musicianship."

Among the scores of engagements and re-engagements are the Library of Congress in Washington, where they gave the world premiere of the Ingolf Dahl Triple Concerto in 1963.

In New York, they have the distinction of performing the entire Beethoven Trio cycle in three concerts at Hunter College, the first time that these works have been given in New York in 20 years. They have been re-engaged for two more seasons during which they will do a survey of the entire trio literature.

Among the distinguished ensemble's appearances this season will be three in New York on the Hunter College Chamber Music Series, the Library of Congress in Washington, Chicago's Chamber Music Society, Auburn, Ala., Chamber Music Society, Friends of Music in Tuscon, Cincinnati, Los Angeles, Hollywood, Friends of Music in Vancouver, three in Montreal, Watertown, Conn., Sarasota and Weston, Mass. The following colleges and universities are on the itinerary: Queens (N.Y.), Purdue, U.S.I. in Alton, Wisconsin State, Connecticut, Bowling Green State, Alma, and Southeastern.

During the Trio's 1966-67 tour, they will play twice with symphony orchestras in Connecticut: The New Haven and Norwalk orcestras in the respective cities.

Immigration to Canada and it's relation to the Draft

The following is taken from a pamphlet describing Canada's opportunities for American war objectors:

Committee to Aid
American War Objectors
P. O. Box 4231
Vancouver 9,
British Columbia
Canada

"There is not any prohibition in the Immigration Act or Regulations against the admission of persons who may be seeking to avoid induction into the armed services and, therefore, provided they meet immigration requirements we have no basis in law for barring their entry." (Tom Kent, Deputy Minister of Citizenship and Immigration).

External Affairs Minister Paul Martin told a press conference in September, when asked about draft dodging: "We don't feel under any obligation to enforce the laws in that regard of any country." (Weekend Magazine, Nov. 26, 1966.)

"The War in Vietnam raises a moral dilemma for many young Americans. Many face the prospect of being drafted to fight in a war which they may not understand or may deeply oppose. A limited set of alternatives are available to them. If they are pacifist they can apply for conscientious objector status and perform alternative or non-combatant service. Most Western religious thought on war is not pacifistic, but holds that the individual can participate in a just war. U. S. Selective Service law, however, makes no provision for an individual who, in conscience, judges the Vietnam war as unjust. These Americans have 3 alternatives. Some stifle their objections and serve in the forces. Some refuse induction and subject themselves to a serious prison sentence. Some immigrate to a country not involved in the war. Those who take the last alternative, and are subsequently declared delinquent for failure to heed orders from their draft boards, cannot return to the United States without facing induction or imprisonment. They are, however, able to remain in a number of countries with little fear of being returned to the United States. One such country is Canada.

An American who is classified 1-A, or who has received a notice to report for his physical, or who has received a notice to report for induction, has no greater difficulty — formally, at least — in entering, and remaining in, Canada, than does any other American. . . .

Some Americans who have become landed immigrants have subsequently renounced their American citizenship. They are then not obligated too comply with Selective Service regulations. An American who violates a provision of selective service law cannot be extradited for that reason. Furthermore, a foreigner in Canada cannot be deported for failure to submit to compulsory military service in his home country."

A "landed immigrant" is someone who has been lawfully admitted to Canada for permanent residence. A landed immigrant differs from a citizen in that he

Eggers Receives NCAA Scholarship

Frank M. Eggers, II, son of Mr. and Mrs. Frank M. Eggers of Maryville, traveled to Houston, Tex., Jan. 10 to accept a $1,000 National Collegiate Athletic Association scholarship. Eggers, a senior was invited to come to Houston by the NCAA.

The award of the scholarship to Eggers, a Maryville High School graduate, was announced before the Christmas holidays. He plans to use the money to attend Vanderbilt University Medical School.

A guard on the Scot line and a four-year letterman, Eggers is an honor student and member of the Student Council. He and the other winners of NCAA awards have been invited to Houston to the Annual Meeting of the Association. Coaches and representatives from schools belonging to the NCAA will be present for the meeting. Maryville was also represented by Coach Howard Tomlinson.

A second scholarship award for Maryville College senior Frank M. Eggers was announced Jan. 18 by Vanderbilt University. Eggers has been awarded one of six merit scholarships to Vanderbilt's School of Medicine by the Justin and Valere Potter Foundation. The scholarships, effective in September, cover four years of medical training and are for $2,500 annually.

The Vanderbilt awards are made on the basis of merit alone. After scholastic screening by the admission committee of the medical school, acceptable candidates were referred to the Justin Potter Scholarship Selection Committee, which consists primarily of laymen. The candidates are then invited to Nashville for final informal screening by the committee.

Debate Team Holds Demonstration Debate on January 27

The public is invited to attend a forensic exhibition to be presented by the Maryville debate squad on January 27. With an eye on next year's champion team, Coach Proffitt has scheduled the program to spur campus enthusiasm in the pleasure and valuable experience of intercollegiate speech competition. Debate will begin at seven that evening in the chapel.

Varsity debater Penny Proffitt will emcee. Wanda Hannah and Ray Phillippi will introduce and defend the resolution "Resolved: that the attendance policy should be changed." Grappling with this question from the thorny negative position will be Alice Barton and Fred Abramoff.

In addition to debating of the national topic, squad members compete in a variety of other forensic areas. Maryville speakers, a semester of rugged tournaments behind them, are expected to do well in State eliminations and other battles royal next month.

The debate will conclude in time for students to attend the faculty recital.

Opportunities for Summer Service Offered by Presbyterian Church

The Board of National Missions of the United Presbyterian Church U.S.A. is now offering both adults and youth oopportunities for voluntary summer service in interfaith and interracial programs. That announcement was made in New York last week by the Rev. William H. Miller, director of the home missions agency's Department of Voluntary Services.

Opportunities for service, he said, are varied. Almost all of them are cooperative in sponsorship. Activities range from teaching in programs of cultural enrichment, music and art, and recreation to community organization and development in both urban and rural areas. Term of service is from one to three months. Project locations, among others, include Alaska, Arizona, California, Colorado, Illinois, Indiana, Kansas, Maryland, Michigan, Minnesota, Missouri, New Jersey, New Mexico, North Carolina, Ohio, Pennsylvania, West Virginia, and Puerto Rico.

Program examples include neighborhood improvement, tutoring, and Christian education as part of the California Migrant Ministry; community service, cultural and career development, recreation, and counseling in a program sponsored by St. Mark's Presbyterian Church and the East Shore Neighborhood Development Association in Richmond, Calif.; work with Indians in Sacaton, Ariz., and southeastern Alaska; and community organization and development among CIVILIZATIONS PERISH IN THE HEART. NOT IN THE HEAD.

No, No. In the heart. For lack of love they perish. No government, no college education, no intellectual plunderbund, no hierarchy of priests and ecclesiastics, no military might, no first-to-the-moon supremacy, no up-the-down social class, no integration march, no business, no labor union, no political party, no rich-rich, no poor-poor—none of these can give you love. Only Christ. He destroys hate. You cannot have the brotherhood of man, without the fatherhood of God. That's love. This passage is from Tell No Man by Adela Rogers St. John.

Yes, it is concern which will determine what the future of the world will be, or at least the future of Western man. And yet to be concerned is not quite enough for all the concern in the world isn't any good if we do not allow it to be seen in action—action which requires something many of us are not willing to give or to be: ourselves. Too often we try to appear to be something which we are not. We assume the right codes, the right aversions, the right dress and the right answers. We are so wrapped up with ourselves we do not see the world withering from lack of love and human concern. For all the time we spend saying how dissatisfied and confused we are, we have little to show. We say we want to know the answers, show us the way. But do we really try to find the answers, the truth as it is and not as we want it to be? Are we not trying to find as easily as possible the answers which have been prefabricated for us by our society? If not, then what are we doing? How long will it take most of us to attain the real truth of life on which the most basic standards of our lives will be founded? Will we take the time and the energy to go beyond th first hurdle in pursuit of this goal? Or is even this goal just too far to walk?

How far are we willing to walk—to Viet Nam? Do you know if you could or would? How much easier it is not to think about this. Instead we show our concern by rallying to the latest social protest group. We are so concerned we don't know what to do with it all, so we become introspective and keep it to ourselves after all it isn't good to have too much concern. You aren't manly if you do. Becoming introspective wouldn't be so bad if we looked at ourselves, but we can't get that far. We are too busy worrying about ourselves, our likes and our dislikes, our friends and our clothes, our food and our empty shell of a college. With all these issues to worry about how can we have time to look in and see what we, as people are like? But time is running out for us. We aren't going to have the luxury of extra years of security and serenity to slowly and quietly figure out our lives according to Freud et al. We are not running out of time merely because we are growing older, we are running out of time because there is something basically wrong with our society today. We are fast becoming a society characterized by short range hedonism and personal pleasure, of the cheap thrill and the mass concensus. We try to find ourselves by assuming different poses and masks. As the author John Hersey said: We try a Mississippi mask one summer, then a poet mask or a stevedore mask or an office-boy-for-the-Kansas City Star-with-a-vague-idea-of-going into government mask next summer. This is much easier than having to say who and what we are. Why be one thing when we can be all of these. Why try to undrestand the world when we can run away from it and hide in pseudo intellectual and pseudo liberal clubs and clothes. We are members of the greatest nation on earth, in fact we are so enchanted by our greatness that we do not see anything wrong with our society, a society which trains its young men to kill a human being in less than fifteen seconds, a society which uses napalm described by some as the most effective torture devised by man, a society in which the symbols of a past tyranny are blatantly displayed by its youth (is there really any great difference between the war hero and the war criminal?), a society which kills 1,000 civilians a month in a war it does not want to fight. Perhaps the Russian poet is right when he says: many nations have begun wars only because of a delusive instinct for self preservation. Even so—why can't an affluent society be humane?

Perhaps it is because to be humane you must be an individual. Where humaneness does not exist you must be willing to dissent. How many times have you been told not to rock the boat, to be satisfied and to take plenty of time before acting? An eternity is a long time. One man said that dissent is more than a right, it is an obligation that everyone opposed to the status quo owes himself and society. Remember that as long as you are a part of a society and as long as you accept the advantages and benefits of that community, you have a responsibility to it. It isn't good enought any more to merely give lip-service. We must be willing to act and to assume the idea that we must be concerned with the problems and the peoples of the rest of the world. Our days of supremacy are numbered if we remain as intolerant and smug as we have been and are continuing to be. The status quo isn't working and it must be changed. We must realize that to dissent is not to be treasonable, if it is done constructively and intelligently. The whole of society is being bombarded with questions and challenges by a few of its members, and we would be doing ourselves a great disservice if we did not at least attempt to understand what is being said. You decry the ineffectiveness of the present institutional church and yet are you willing to be one of those to take the church into the market place where it has not been for a long time? Just how much are you willing to give. Just how much are you really concerned. Does it make any difference to you that you do not care about anything, that the biggest piece of news you heard yesterday was that Nancy Arn didn't wear any earrings? Do you know what percentage of the world's population is comprised of white Christians who live in a democratic and affluent society? If you can't answer the question, "Why can't an affluent society be humane?", perhaps you had better work on whether a non-affluent society can be humane, and concerned for others.

may not vote in some elections, he cannot obtain a Canadian passport, and he can be deported for certain fairly well-defined offenses. After 5 years as a landed immigrant, he is eligible for citizenship. Becoming a landed immigrant does not affect one's American citizenship.

It is the present policy of the Immigration Department that the fact that the granting of landed immigrant status will have the effect of permitting an individual to evade the U. S. draft is not relevant to the question of his suitability as a landed immigrant. Although Canada does not encourage draft evasion, it is no bar, in itself, to entry. However, due to the range of discretion allowed an immigration official, it is possible that his personal feelings on the question of the draft may influence his decision. Some officials may view with favour the fact that an American seriously intends to become a Canadian citizen and in light of that does not consider that he has an obligation to serve in the army of the country he was born in but has chosen to leave. Other officials, however, may consider that military obligation morally binding and may question such as American's character. Therefore, applicants subject to the draft have generally considered it advisable not to mention their status unless asked.

An American who has already received his notice to report for induction is apparently in the same situation, as far as the Immigration Department is concerned, as someone who has not yet received the notice. He may, however, encounter the following problem: if the interviewing official is skeptical about those who decline to fight for the U. S., he is apt to be more disapproving if he knows that the applicant received his notice to report than he would be otherwise.

It is the present policy of the Immigration Department that a person who has already been inducted into the armed forces is not eligible for landed immigrant status until he has completed his military obligation.

Since United States law holds that citizens living outside the U. S. are subject to U. S. selective service law, many Americans with landed immigrant status in Canada have received notices to report for a physical examination or notice to report for induction. An individual who fails to report as directed would be subject to arrest if he subsequently visited the U. S. However, an individual who is not resident in the U. S. and is not an American citizen is not subject to U. S. draft law.

Extradition is the surrender by Canada at the request of the United States of a person presently within the jurisdiction of Canada who is accused of or has been convicted of a crime committed within the jurisdiction of the U. S. One can only be extradited for crimes listed in the extradition treaties between the two countries. The treaties do not include any offenses connected with the selective service laws. Further, an offense can only be listed if it is a crime in Canada as well as in the United States; Canada does not have a draft and it is unlikely that one will be introduced in the foreseeable future.

It is specified in the treaties that 'no person surrendered by or to either of the high contracting parties shall be triable or be tried for any crime or offense committed prior to his extradition, other than the offense for which he was surrendered . . .'

EDITORIAL OUTLOOK

May this suffice!

To the Editor:

A short letter on why the Maryville College administration views all Maryville College Students as not being mature enough to make their own decisions and determine what is best for their own personal interests.

From the time the student steps on campus, he is told exactly what to do and when to do it. He is told what classes to take, when to eat, what not to drink, when to be back "home," what he may do, what he must not do, where he may go to do things, where he must not go to do things he musn't do.

He is not told why or if he is told why, it has very little bearing on the actual reason, for rather obvious reasons.

If the student is not able to adjust himself to campus life, an appointment is made with the dean in hopes that the dean may still be able to convert the student so that said student might be able to conform with the responsibilities of living on the Maryville College Campus.

In short, the ideal Maryville College student is not expected to think for himself; indeed this is a nasty trait which the Administration highly frowns on. But the Administration must be taken into consideration on this point. They have gone to great lengths and great personal sacrifices of time and energy so that the student may not have to think for himself, and when a rebelious student does make an attempt to think for himself, the administration has no other recourse but to consider it as a slap against their personal integrity. (And well they should)

Surrounded by such an envioroment, the Administration is absolutely correct in their assumption that the student, according to all laws of reason, logic, and common sense is thoroughly immature, and completely incapable of making responsible decisions for himself.

Two Sides to the Wall

by Lois Huffines

"What do you think of the Berlin wall?"

"The wall has two sides—a good side and a bad side, and the bad side is the war in Vietnam."

That was my first question and the answer I got to it after the preliminaries of polite conversation were over. It was May 1, the big holiday for the Communist Party in East Germany. The streets of East Berlin were filled with people waiting to see the parades and to hear political speeches by top Party officials. After waiting about two hours in line, I, too, got through the control point on Friedrich Strasse and waited with the crowd for the parade to begin.

The man standing next to me turned out to be a communist official from the Thuringen area which is southwest of Berlin Having gotten the war in Vietnam thrown at me as the answer to my first question, I was curious to hear what else he had to say. I emphasized the fact that the Germans as a people were divided by this wall, that even brothers and sisters were unable to see each other. He emphasized how bad the Negro problem was in America, that some people go into a restaurant and are not served. Finally he explained to me that the wall was built to keep the people of the West out of the East. These people had been coming to the East, where things were cheaper, with their western money, which was worth more, and ruining the economy. This was, indeed, happening, but does one need to build a wall to remedy the situation?

I asked him about all the people who were trying so desperately to flee from the East Zone. He said that they were only criminals and that many

A SALUTE TO D.R.P.

When I was just as tall as grass
(and never mind the cat
or little boys)
I used to play among the blades
with snails and flies
and guys my size
who knew the game of smallness.

Sometimes when the wind was soft
and the earth was damp with summer,
We'd creep down among the roots beside the river
—and silent as acorns
stop to watch the mushrooms
passing through the glen.

Running through the wheat, the oats, the barley Pounding down the path along the hill to glide on wind wings soar on heat waves float above the grasses, marshes, meadows.

. . . far off . . .
the sea waves gleaming nearby oaks and pines their sabers piercing

. . . a glimpse . . .
and circle down through dust and feathers

here the fields again
the wheat, the oats, the grain forever
Ah, forever, here again the earth forever.

Why was it I who bore a son
that died before his mother died?

I wept at the pain when I was taken
I wept when you were in me churning
I wept at your birth for the pain of losing the part of me that was most living
And now at your death I weep for all those pains which were not given for you to suffer.

Why is the pain of birth more lasting than the pain of death?

Come Clevedon

Up from the sea to search chalk crevices
Fingering slowly toward heaven and the fields
I hear the sun warm up the east-blue sea, and off
In the wind-wise skies keep soaring Barn swifts, gulls and fishes (turn-down streaks go plop where breakfast swims deep deep among the waves.)

Out to the west going Elham, Ashford, tumble hills I've known.
The bale, weald, ashdown forest dark (now Grinstead) green like old trees goes.
And I amid the leighs, meres, wicks, and boroughs make a way, and off
Through cow-strewn pasture seas I make to Wey.

Ho now the vale of pewsey, plain of salisbury brown beside the freshets; and the oaks grow great and wide-spread keep the traveller cool
'til once again the field, now forest, thatch, now field again, now garden goosed and kittened near by cottage.

This, then, is how I'll wend a summer song to Mendipthere Yeo-and down come Clevedon
I will stand again on sand (no cliffs)
To watch the sun slow slow now drop among the waves.

Oh god-red nightfall show me there
My Wales cross the Severn.

minority groups in urban inner-city areas, such as Chicago, New York City, Buffalo, Rochester, Syracuse, Philadelphia, Detroit, Kansas City, Atlantic City, San Francisco, Minneapolis-St. Paul, and Indianapolis.

Purpose of the United Presbyterian Board of National Missions voluntary service program, Mr. Miller said, is "to meet human needs through physical labor, teaching, studying, and working with others so that the Church might be more effective in practicing what it preaches." "Service is always the work of a Christian community," Mr. Miller added, "and the Church is called to find the most natural and adequate forms at its disposal to minister to human needs." Thus, "The Church has the obligation to mobilize human resources at its disposal and to involve them in its mission. It is in this context that the voluntary service programs gain their significance and the United Presbyterian Church can take its place alongside other denominations and service agencies."

The denominational home missions agency has conducted a program of voluntary services for more than 40 years. Last summer some 6,000 high school and college students, seminarians, and adults participated in close to 400 church-related projects under the auspices of the Board of National Missions, usually in cooperation with a variety of other religious and secular groups in local communities.

Persons interested in obtaining additional information regarding both summer service and/or longer term voluntary opportunities are urged to contact the Department of Voluntary Services, the United Presbyterian Board of National Missions, 475 Riverside Drive, Room 1206, New York 10027.

who have gone to the West have regretted it and are trying to return to East Germany. I asked him about free elections, unlimited travel, uncensored newspapers. This communist official had an answer to all my questions, not necessarily one which fit, but all the same an answer. His statements, however, fell in three general categories: that the western powers were guilty of even more flagrant violations of human dignity, that the western systems of government and economy have proven themselves to be inferior, and that the communist controlled areas are peaceful lands making huge strides in progress. I found it difficult to believe that he was sincerely convinced of all these things.

The parade lasted about four hours. In the reviewing stand on Marx-Engels square, Walter Ulbricht and his cohorts were leading the crowds in shouting, "Es lebe hoch! hoch! hoch!" to every communist organization and youth group that marched by. I stayed almost three hours until a youth group marched by carrying a sign, "We gave for Vietnam." All I could think about was who was shooting at whom, got sick and left.

The Communist official was right about one things—the wall does, indeed, have two sides. On the one side are bleak streets, dingy buildings, resigned faces of a people who has not yet lost hope; on the other side, an aliveness, happy faces of people doing what they want to do, crowded noisy streets, bright neon signs. After another hour and a half I got into the trolley car which took me to the other side of that wall. That same night a man was killed trying to do the same thing.

Basketballers 2-2 in Janurary

The Scot Roundballers played four games in the early part of January and emerged with a 2-2 record and a second-place trophy in the Sun Coast Tournament in St. Petersburg, Florida. Their record now stands at 3-7. Almost immediately upon returning from the Christmas vacations, the Scots were able to overcome Johnson Bible College 71-63 on JBC's home court, for the Scots the high scorer was Bill Padgett with 32.

On the week-end after the holidays, the Scots flew to St. Petersburg, Florida, for the Sun Coast Tournament. In the first game of the tourney, Maryville met Kentucky Southern. In a closely fought game, Maryville emerged a 77-70 victor. Bill Padgett led all scorers with 35. The next night the Scots met defending champs Florida Presbyterian and succumbed to the host school 96-65. Padgett once again led the Maryville scoring with 20. The loss to Florida Presbyterian gave Maryville a second place in the tourney. King College of Bristol placed third, Kentucky Southern was fourth.

Returning home, the Scots met Emory and Henry. Unable to overcome an over powering first-half lead, the Scots ended up on the short side of the score 88-62. Padgett was top scorer for Maryville with 16 points. Maryville will play a home game Saturday in a double-header (wrestling match after the game).

Wrestlers Split Two

The Scot Grapplers increased their record by one loss and one win. Wrestling against the Knoxville "Y" shortly after the Christmas break, the Scots were unable to repeat an earlier victory and were edged 21-18. Maryville looked rusty after their vacation time away from the mats. One week later the Scots looked impressively strong, edging out three other colleges for a first place in Chattanooga's wrestling tournament.

Against the Knoxville "Y," the Scots started strong as Captain Ron Pritts collected a pin. Gary Dauron and Gary Loss added three points each with a decision and Rob Nicholas two more with a tie. But the intermediate matches went to Knoxville. Van Pallis put Maryville back in the lead with a pin, but they were unable to remain on top as the "Y" ended with a pin and a match win. The Scots looked out of shape after the holiday, and Knoxville was "up" for a team that had earlier beaten them. The loss does not hurt Maryville's SEC won-loss record as the "Y" is not an official team and the match classified only as an exhibition match.

Wrestling a week later against the best in the SEC, the Scots proved they were strongest as they emerged victors in the Chattanooga wrestling Tournament. Although edged in the final standings by the All-Star Pensacola Naval base team, Maryville placed at the top of the four colleges represented. The final standings were: Pensacola 67, Maryville 56, Milligan 50, University of Georgia 43, University of Chattanooga 31.

In the individual matches Maryville looked like a power in the SEC. Pritts at 123 took a first place. At 130 Gary Dauron placed second. Showing his former SEC championship form, Ralph Johnson took a first and a trophy from the tourney. The trophy was an award to both he and his opponent for the most exciting match of the competition. Johnson had to go into an overtime match to best his opponent.

Gary Loss at 145 and Scott Wood at 152 collected a fourth place each. Rob Nicholas was third at 160. Van Pallis and Lynn Dodez wrestled to second places at 177 and 191, respectively. In the heavy weight division, Pat O'Brian ended up in third place. The strength of the Maryville team is shown in that it placed all but two of the participants taken.

Earlier in the month, Milligan, the defending champion of the SEC, had wrestled in the holiday tournament in Atlanta against all the powers of the conference. Represented were the University of Georgia, Auburn, Sewanee, and Georgia Tech. Milligan seemed to be the strongest team there. With this victory, the Scots have beaten this strong Milligan team twice, making Maryville definite contenders for the SEC crown.

Student Council Car Committee Sends Proposal to Student-Faculty Senate

Yesterday, 9 February, the Car Committee of the Student Council sent its proposal to the Student-Faculty Senate for recommendations and approval. This proposal follows many months on work and thought by the committee, headed by Rob Nichlas.

This past week members of the committee have been discussing the proposal with members of the executive council and other faculty to get recommendations and suggestions. Many long hours of work have gone into this proposal, and the members of the committee consider this proposal the most mature and reasonable one yet prepared. A spirit of optimisim pervades, and it is hoped, says the committee's chairman along with John Mullholland Student Council President, that the students will stand behind their student government in presenting this proposal.

The proposal—which follows in rough form—has been modified in part by suggestions from both faculty and administration. Following action by the Student-Faculty Senate, the proposal, with its amendments, will be sent to the Executive Council.

The original prepared proposal —without its present modifications made by the faculty and administration—is as follows:

"Recognizing the increased communication, now more than ever existent between the administration and the student body at Maryville College and the willingness by both to admit the necessity of change, the Student Council strongly believes it must now submit once again, some sort of corrective measure for the now inadequate policy regarding automobile usage and ownership. The need for immediate attention to this subject is evident in the findings of the recent concensus revealing the overwhelming dissatisfaction with the present regulations.

"The Student Council Car Committee after exploring a variety of opinions found these to be the principle reasons for the desire of cars on campus.

First Public Forum to be Held This Sunday Afternoon

Gottfried Dietz
The first speaker in the American Studies Public Forums

A series of seven Sunday afternoon forums, led by nationally recognized scholars who are visiting Maryville College during the second semester of this school year, will start Sunday, Feb. 12, in the Music Hall of the Fine Arts Center on the College campus. Dr. Gottfried Dietze, Professor of Political Science at the Johns Hopkins University, is the first of the visiting scholars.

Other members of the panel for the forum will be U.S. Ambassador Donald Dumont, specialist in African affairs; and Dr. Douglas Carlisle, Professor of Political Science. Both men are now members of the faculty at the University of Tennessee.

The forum will get under way at 2 p.m., and is on the subject: "The Meaning of the American Form of Government for the World." The forums are open to the public. There is no charge for admission, and area citizens interested in any one or all of the sessions are invited to attend.

The scholars are coming to Maryville College under a grant from the Lilly Endowment, Inc., and will take part in the public forums in connection with the presentation of an honors seminar for Maryville students. The seminar, which is being coordinated by Dr. A. R. Ainsworth, Chairman of the Department of Political Science at the College, is entitled "American Studies: 20th Century Interpretations."

Nineteen students at the College are taking part in the seminar, which involves the departments of Bible, Philosophy and Religion; Economics; Education; English; History, Political Science, and Sociology. Dr. Robert E. Brown, Professor of History at Michigan State University and one of the visiting scholars, is the consultant for the program.

The visiting scholars and the dates for the forums are:

Dr. James W. Wiggins, Associate Dean and Professor of Sociology at Converse College, "Vietnam—Prospects for Tomorrow," on Feb. 26.

Dr. Nathalia Wright, Professor of English at the University of Tennessee and a resident of Maryville, "Modern American Literature," on March 5.

Glasse Will Lead February Meetings

Dr. Glasse

Phi Mu Alpha Celebrates Founders Day

On Saturday, February 4, the Phi Mu Alpha Sinfonia Fraternity, Xi Rho Chapter, presented a "Concert of Contemporary Music." The concert celebrated the founding of the Xi Rho Chapter at Maryville College a year ago.

One of the purposes of the fraternity is to further the cause of music in America. This was done by the performance of Contemporary works. Two of the compositions were written by members of Phi Mu Alpha. An original composition was written and performed by Thomas Llewellyn, entitled "Net of Eternal Longing." The "Tuba Duet, Op. 2" composed by W. Jonathan Gresham, the band director, was performed by Thomas Dickson and Richard Smith. Others performing on the recital were James Breckenridge, Joseph Henry, William Rumsey, Thomas Allen, and Edwin Best.

The entire Fraternity participated in the singing of two early American folk songs that were arranged by Aaron Copland, "Simple Gifts" and "The Boatman's Dance." The Fraternity hopes to present another concert this semester, continuing to promote all types of music.

Profs Hileman and Lewis Lead Traveling Seminar

Twenty-one Maryville College students and two members of the faculty went on a three-day social science traveling seminar to Dalton and Atlanta, Ga. during the semester break. The tour was under the supervision of Eugene Hileman, Chairman of the Department of Economics and Business, and Wallace Lewis, Assistant Professor of History.

In Dalton, the students studied the economic, social and political institutions in the city, meetings were held with a number of community leaders, and a panel discussion with municipal and industrial officials.

The students spent two days in Atlanta, where they made visits to the Ford Motor Co. assembly plant, the Coca-Cola Bottling Co., the Child and Family service agency, and the Atlanta Police Department. The group also visited the Federal Reserve Bank, the Federal Penitetiary, and the Merchandise Mart, where a home furnishings sale and market was in progress.

EDITORIAL OUTLOOK

There are many phases of our existence here of which we are less than satisfied. Generally, our community problems can be identified as either academic, religious, or social. In each area there are a nmber of alternations for which much of our "community" is striving. They are too varied to discuss at one sitting. Their comparitive importance is hardly agreed upon. There is, though, we hope, one thing upon which we might, and certainly ought to, agree. "Academic" concerns are primary. (And there is an excellent argument to the point that unhappiness in other general areas is directly related to academic frustrations.)

It is quite obvious that MC's biggest efforts are currently academic. The new curriculum is going to be a vibrant and exciting academic revolution. It will make a Maryville College diploma much more valuable. A reputation already good might become outstanding.
